The defense of laches was not applicable in an action to enforce accrued child support payments ordered in a divorce action; it was applicable only where the attempted enforcement was by contempt proceedings. Jenner v. Jenner, 138 Colo. 149, 330 P.2d 544 (1958); Hauck v. Schuck, 143 Colo. 324, 353 P.2d 79 (1960); Carey v. Carey, 29 Colo. App. 328, 486 P.2d 38 (1971).

A husband in default in the payment of support money was not entitled to notice of the entry of a judgment thereon. Jenner v. Jenner, 138 Colo. 149, 330 P.2d 544 (1958).

Assignment of wages is proper. An assignment of wages to satisfy a judgment for child support arrearages is proper. In re McCue, 645 P.2d 854 (Colo. App. 1982).

Order is analogous to garnishment. An order entered pursuant to subsection (1) is analogous to a garnishment and should be governed by applicable limitations on garnishment. In re McCue, 645 P.2d 854 (Colo. App. 1982).

IV. ENFORCEMENT BY CONTEMPT.

A court may exercise its power of contempt to enforce orders entered in a dissolution of marriage proceeding. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P. 2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

Contempt not separate proceeding. Contempt for failure to comply with the court's orders is not a separate proceeding but a continuance of the dissolution action. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

14-10-119. Attorney's fees. The court from time to time, after considering the financial resources of both parties, may order a party to pay a reasonable amount for the cost to the other party of maintaining or defending any proceeding under this article and for attorney's fees, including sums for legal services rendered and costs incurred prior to the commencement of the proceeding or after entry of judgment. The court may order that the amount be paid directly to the attorney, who may enforce the order in his name.

Cross references: For allowance of attorney fees generally, see C.R.C.P. 3(a), 30(g), 37(a), 37(c), 56(g), and 107(d); for awarding of attorney fees in civil actions generally, see § 13-17-102.

The power to punish for contempt should be used with caution after due deliberation, and only when necessary to prevent actual, direct obstruction of, or interference with, the administration of justice. Engleman v. Engleman, 145 Colo. 299, 358 P.2d 864 (1961).

Absent any procedural attempt to correct an order for support payments under this section, based upon its being founded in mistake, or absent action designed to seek modification of the order, the trial court could only determine whether the husband was in contempt for failure to comply with the order. Lopez v. Lopez, 148 Colo. 404, 366 P.2d 373 (1961).

Moreover, a defendant could not be held in contempt for failure to pay alimony where it clearly appeared that he was unable to perform the acts required of him by the support order. Lopez v. Lopez, 148 Colo. 404, 366 P.2d 373 (1961).

A defendant could not be imprisoned for failure to pay alimony where it clearly and satisfactorily appeared that he was absolutely unable to perform the acts required of him at the time the order of commitment was made. Lopez v. Lopez, 148 Colo. 404, 366 P.2d 373 (1961).

Where a divorced wife for a long period of time supported the minor child of herself and divorced husband without receiving or claiming the alimony adjudged her for its support, there being no sufficient cause shown for her delay in attempting to enforce payment, the doctrine of laches applied, and a judgment of contempt against defendant for failure to pay the alimony was reversed. Price v. Price, 80 Colo. 158, 249 P. 648 (1926).

The contention of defendant that an order abating the proceedings until he complied with an order of court for the payment of alimony deprived him of his right to make a defense, and that imprisonment for failure to comply with the order was in violation of his constitutional rights, was overruled. Miller v. Miller, 79 Colo. 609, 247 P. 567 (1926).

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For note, "Payment of the Wife's Attorney Fee in Colorado Divorce Cases", see 34 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 481 (1962). For article, "Attorney's Fees", see 11 Colo. Law. 411 (1982). For article, "Domestic Case Update", see 14 Colo. Law. 209 (1985). For article, "Attorney Fees at Temporary Orders: Reality or Illusion?", see 24 Colo. Law. 2185 (1995).

Annotator's note. Since § 14-10-119 is similar to repealed § 46-1-5 (1)(e), C.R.S. 1963, § 46-1-5, CRS 53, CSA, C. 56, § 8, and laws antecedent thereto, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

The former divorce act was silent on the subject of counsel fees and suit money, but in discussing the power of the district court to make allowance for these items, the supreme court held that notwithstanding the silence of the statute with respect to these matters, it had the authority to order such allowances because its jurisdiction as to such items did not depend upon the statute. Pleyte v. Pleyte, 15 Colo. 125, 25 P. 25 (1890); Hart v. Hart, 31 Colo. 333, 73 P. 35 (1903).

Attorney fees are not a non-challengeable marital debt under § 14-10-113. In re Rieger, 827 P.2d 625 (Colo. App. 1992).

Debts incurred during the marriage but which are dissolution litigation costs should be allocated pursuant to this section, not § 14-10-113. In re Burford, 26 P.3d 550 (Colo. App. 2001).

Uniform Dissolution of Marriage Act provides separate sections that govern the different elements of a dissolution order, specifically property disposition, maintenance, child support, and attorney fees. The court is required to make separate orders regarding these elements based on separate considerations and may not commingle one element with another. In re Huff, 834 P.2d 244 (Colo. 1992).

This section inapplicable to wife's independent action seeking to reopen dissolution decree. In re Burns, 717 P.2d 991 (Colo. App. 1985); cert. denied, Burns v. Burns, 745 P.2d 1391 (Colo. 1987).

Intent to equalize status. The provision in the dissolution of marriage statute which sanctions the assessment of attorney fees was intended to equalize the status of the parties to the dissolution proceeding. In re Franks, 189 Colo. 499, 542 P.2d 845 (1975).

The purpose of allowing the court discretion as to attorney fees is to equalize the status of the parties by enabling the court to ensure that neither party is forced to suffer unduly as a consequence of the termination of the marriage. In re Mitchell, 195 Colo. 399, 579 P.2d 613 (1978); In re Meisner, 715 P.2d 1273 (Colo. App. 1985).

This section is designed to allow the court to apportion costs and fees equitably between the parties. In re Nichols, 38 Colo. App. 82, 553 P.2d 77 (1976); In re Hauger, 679 P.2d 604 (Colo. App. 1984).

This section empowers the trial court to equitably apportion costs and fees between parties based on relative ability to pay. Section 5-12-106 (1)(a) mandates interest on such an order and C.A.R. 37 specifies the trial court's authority to mandate interest. In re Gutfreund, 148 P.3d 136 (Colo. 2006).

Attorney fees are to be awarded primarily to equalize the financial positions of the parties. In re Trout, 897 P.2d 838 (Colo. App. 1994); In re Bregar, 952 P.2d 783 (Colo. App. 1997).

Primary purpose of award of attorney fees under this section is to equalize the parties' financial positions. Although mother deceived father by failing to disclose disability benefits received on behalf of the minor child, the court reduced father's child support arrearages in payment of father's attorney fees to punish mother without making the proper findings pursuant to this section for an award of attorney fees and without considering the policies relating to child support and the best interests of the child before reducing child support arrearages. In re Anthony-Guillar, 207 P.3d 934 (Colo. App. 2009).

The principle that in maintenance and divorce proceedings a wife had a right to be placed on an equal footing with her husband was particularly applicable where the facts show that the wife's absence from the state is due to being unable to afford the expenses of litigation without her fault, and where she may have meritorious claims difficult to pursue in absentia. McMillion v. McMillion, 31 Colo. App. 33, 497 P.2d 331 (1972).

Fairness in domestic relations cases seeks to place the wife on a plane of equality with the husband in such litigation by allowing her suit money and attorney fees out of the husband's estate or earnings, where such appears necessary to bring about such parity, but such allowance will not be granted unless it is shown that the wife is destitute in whole or in part of the means necessary to maintain herself and carry on the litigation, and a concomitant to this condition for relief is a showing of the husband's present ability to pay such allowance. Tower v. Tower, 147 Colo. 480, 364 P.2d 565 (1961); Peercy v. Peercy, 154 Colo. 575, 392 P.2d 609 (1964).

Provision in agreement granting parties remedies at law and in equity for enforcement of agreement gave court jurisdiction to hear motion for attorney fees. In re Meisner, 807 P.2d 1205 (Colo. App. 1990).

By the allowance of attorney fees, full and complete adjudication of all claims in the one action will result; otherwise, a multiplicity of suits will ensue, forcing the attorney to sue the wife, and she in turn to join the husband under his indemnity agreement. Tower v. Tower, 147 Colo. 480, 364 P.2d 565 (1961).

The power of the court to allow attorney fees to the wife for the purpose of prosecuting her suit or defending the husband's suit was an incident to the court's powers to award alimony and divide property. Krall v. Krall, 31 Colo. App. 538, 504 P.2d 681 (1972).

If there is a wide disparity in the parties' earning capacities, an award of attorney fees is permissible. In re Renier, 854 P.2d 1382 (Colo. App. 1993).

An allowance for counsel fees, being for the benefit of the wife to put her in a position to litigate on the same footing as the husband, was made on the same basis as alimony or other forms of support by the husband to the wife. Allison v. Allison, 150 Colo. 377, 372 P.2d 946 (1962).

Trial court has the authority to advance prospective fees and costs during the litigation of a dissolution of marriage action if necessary to diminish the advantage that one spouse may have over the other in litigation because of their respective financial circumstances. In re Rose, 134 P.3d 559 (Colo. App. 2006).

The purpose of an award of attorney fees is to apportion equitably the costs of dissolution, based on the current resources of the parties. In re Renier, 854 P.2d 1382 (Colo. App. 1993); In re Footitt, 903 P.2d 1209 (Colo. App. 1995); In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. App. 1997).

Waiver of attorney fee provision in an antenuptial agreement is voidable on the grounds of unconscionability. In re Dechant, 867 P.2d 193 (Colo. App. 1993) (decided under law in effect prior to amendment effective July 1, 1986).

The allowance to a wife was based upon the same underlying thought as is an allowance to her to buy food, shelter, and clothing. Allison v. Allison, 150 Colo. 377, 372 P.2d 946 (1962).

Payment of attorney fees is a substantive aspect of a dissolution action, and permanent orders are not final until the court addresses that issue. Unlike statutory and contractual fee-shifting provisions that premise the award of attorney fees on the merits of the claims and a determination of who prevailed in the action, the apportionment of attorney fees in a dissolution action is inextricably intertwined with the other issues to be resolved by the court in determining permanent orders. In re Hill, 166 P.3d 269 (Colo. App. 2007).

Where an attorney withdrew as counsel for the wife in a divorce action and his motion for fees was ordered held in abeyance until final settlement of the action, a subsequent property settlement agreement providing that each of the parties would pay his own counsel fees was not binding on the counsel if services rendered prior to withdrawal entitled him to additional fees. Morrison v. Peck, 151 Colo. 83, 376 P.2d 58 (1962).

Withdrawal of wife's counsel before determination of attorney fees issue cannot be construed as a waiver by wife regarding payment of the fees. In re Hill, 166 P.3d 269 (Colo. App. 2007).

Reconciliation did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to award attorney fees. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 156 Colo. 356, 398 P.2d 978 (1965).

The trial court was in error when it concluded that it was without jurisdiction to grant an allowance of attorney fees. Tower v. Tower, 147 Colo. 480, 364 P.2d 565 (1961).

On review of an order adjudging a defendant in a divorce case guilty of contempt for failure to pay alimony, under the facts disclosed, it was held that the trial court had jurisdiction to make an order allowing counsel fees to the wife for the hearing on review. Miller v. Miller, 79 Colo. 609, 247 P. 567 (1926); Watson v. Watson, 135 Colo. 296, 310 P.2d 554 (1957).

No violation of involuntary servitude proscription. The assertion in a divorce that one may be forced to work for the benefit of the other spouse's attorney, despite the fact that the burdened party is without "fault", cannot be equated with slavery or involuntary servitude within the meaning of § 26 of art. II, Colo. Const. In re Franks, 189 Colo. 499, 542 P.2d 845 (1975).

Because the dissolution of marriage statute, in an effort to eliminate the inequities resulting from the termination of the relationship, provides for attorney fees, as well as maintenance and child support, when the relative status of the parties involved indicates the need of such, it does not constitute involuntary servitude. In re Franks, 189 Colo. 499, 542 P.2d 845 (1975).

Applied in re Deines, 44 Colo. App. 98, 608 P.2d 375 (1980); Gann v. Gann, 616 P.2d 1000 (Colo. App. 1980); In re Davis, 44 Colo. App. 355, 618 P.2d 692 (1980); In re Kiefer, 738 P.2d 54 (Colo. App. 1987).

II. AWARD OF ATTORNEY FEES.

A. Right and Need for Award.

When a husband desires the luxury of a divorce from his wife, he should be compelled to pay the expenses of his wife pending the litigation, and, in cases where the wife is a nonresident of the state, if she desires to come to the state of Colorado to make a defense, she should be given an opportunity to do so, and the courts should require plaintiff to deposit in court a sum sufficient to pay the expenses of the wife from her home to the state of Colorado, to be paid to her upon her arrival here within a reasonable time, with such additional sum as may be necessary to properly defend the suit, and in case the plaintiff is unable to make reasonable provision for his wife during the pendency of the suit, the suit should be abated until he is able to do so. McMillion v. McMillion, 31 Colo. App. 33, 497 P.2d 331 (1972).

On the question of allowance of attorney fees for the wife, the court should take into consideration, among other things, the financial condition of the parties, their income, and necessities of the case. Miller v. Miller, 79 Colo. 609, 247 P. 567 (1926).

In awarding fees and costs under this section, the district court must consider the relative financial status of each party by making findings concerning their relative incomes, assets, and liabilities. In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997); In re Chalat, 94 P.3d 1191 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 112 P.3d 47 (Colo. 2005).

The financial resources of the husband were greater than those of the wife and that disparity supports the order for attorney fees. In re Lishnevsky, 981 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1999).

An order providing for the father to pay attorney fees for the mother could not stand in view of the favorable financial condition of the mother, since the purpose of providing an allowance for attorney fees is to place the wife on an equal footing with the husband. Andrews v. Andrews, 161 Colo. 529, 423 P.2d 573 (1967).

Where defendant initiated the circumstances making attorney fees necessary, an allowance to plaintiff therefor was proper. Parker v. Parker, 142 Colo. 416, 350 P.2d 1067 (1960).

Where a wife's estate is small, she is not required to impair her capital in order to litigate properly her side of the controversy, especially is this true where the value of the assets of the parties are grossly disproportionate. Smith v. Smith, 172 Colo. 516, 474 P.2d 619 (1970).

Additional expert testimony was unnecessary to support award of attorney fees to mother in child support modification action where testimony of the mother, her attorney, and the attorney's affidavit adequately supported the award. In re Pollock, 881 P.2d 470 (Colo. App. 1994).

Husband is not liable for deceased wife's attorney fees where the wife dies during the pendency of the action and prior to the entry of an order making permanent property disposition. In re Benjamin, 740 P.2d 532 (Colo. App. 1987).

A spouse who accepts maintenance payments or an attorney fees award is not precluded from appealing such order. In re Lee, 781 P.2d 102 (Colo. App. 1989).

Plaintiff not entitled to attorney fees under this section when the statutory basis for grandparents' visitation request was § 19-1-117. Additionally, because the attorney fee provision contained in § 19-1-117 (3) was the more specific provision, it should control. In re Gallegos, 251 P.3d 1086 (Colo. App. 2010).

B. Amount.

This section cannot be construed as a general grant of authority to determine the amount of fees to which an attorney is entitled. In re Nichols, 38 Colo. App. 82, 553 P.2d 77 (1976); In re Shapard, 129 P.3d 1007 (Colo. App. 2004).

The trial court's duty is to determine what reasonable fee a party should be responsible for under all the circumstances of the case. The effect of an order granting fees to a party less than the amount actually billed by the attorney is not to modify the fee contract between the attorney and client. In re Seely, 689 P.2d 1154 (Colo. App. 1984); In re Bowles, 916 P.2d 615 (Colo. App. 1995).

Enforcement of attorney's charging lien raises separate issues. Nothing in this section allows a spouse's attorney, as lienholder or otherwise, to litigate a claim for fees against the other spouse. In re Shapard, 129 P.3d 1007 (Colo. App. 2004).

Predicate to an award of attorney fees. There must be proof of reasonableness premised upon considerations of the amount of the fees charged, the time spent by the attorney, the services rendered, and the prevailing rates in the community. In re Sarvis, 695 P.2d 772 (Colo. App. 1984).

On application for allowance of attorney fees in a divorce suit, it may be that no evidence is required as to the amount to be allowed, where all the facts are within the knowledge of the court. Miller v. Miller, 79 Colo. 609, 247 P. 567 (1926).

Where the same judge had heard various aspects of this case over a period of several months and was thoroughly familiar with the file and with the financial resources of the parties, it was not necessary that evidence be presented as to the current situation unless there was a claim of change of circumstances. In re Peterson, 40 Colo. App. 115, 572 P.2d 849 (1977).

C. Discretion of Court.

Before or after the issuance of a decree in a divorce action, the trial court could make such orders as the circumstances warrant for suit money, court costs, and attorney fees. Morrison v. Peck, 151 Colo. 83, 376 P.2d 58 (1962).

The allowance of attorney fees and suit money is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and unless that discretion has been abused, the allowance made or denied will not be disturbed. Morgan v. Morgan, 139 Colo. 545, 340 P.2d 1060 (1959); Allison v. Allison, 150 Colo. 377, 372 P.2d 946 (1962); Berglund v. Berglund, 28 Colo. App. 382, 474 P.2d 800 (1970); Krall v. Krall, 31 Colo. App. 538, 504 P.2d 681 (1972); In re Peterson, 40 Colo. App. 115, 572 P.2d 849 (1977); In re DaFoe, 677 P.2d 426 (Colo. App. 1983); In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992); In re LeBlanc, 944 P.2d 686 (Colo. App. 1997); In re Lishnevsky, 981 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1999).

This section confers significant discretion on the trial court, and permits consideration of the financial resources of both parties, so that where the husband has limited income and substantial financial obligations including payment of child support and the children's attorney fees, there is no abuse of discretion in the court's denial of the wife's motion for attorney fees. In re Parker, 41 Colo. App. 287, 584 P.2d 103 (1978); In re Rieger, 827 P.2d 625 (Colo. App. 1992).

The awarding of attorney fees is discretionary with the trial court and will not be disturbed on review if supported by the evidence. In re Icke, 35 Colo. App. 60, 530 P.2d 1001 (1974), aff'd, 189 Colo. 319, 540 P.2d 1076 (1975); In re Newman, 44 Colo. App. 307, 616 P.2d 982 (1980), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 653 P.2d 728 (Colo. 1982).

An award of attorney fees in subsequent litigation to enforce a separation agreement is within the trial court's discretion. Baker v. Baker, 667 P.2d 767 (Colo. App. 1983).

Notwithstanding the trial court's discretion in the allowance of fees, such discretion is a judicial one, and requires and presupposes a hearing together with a presentation of facts upon which to base the exercise of such discretion. Tower v. Tower, 147 Colo. 480, 364 P.2d 565 (1961).

Court must conduct a hearing, on the reasonableness of an award of attorney fees if a party requests a hearing. In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997).

But a court need not conduct a hearing sua sponte if a hearing is not timely requested by a party. In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997).

This section does not limit the authority of the trial court to award counsel fees only as against a defendant, but such fees may be assessed against either or both of the parties. Morrison v. Peck, 151 Colo. 83, 376 P.2d 58 (1962).

It is within the trial court's discretion to award only a portion of the attorney fees. In re Schwaab, 794 P.2d 1112 (Colo. App. 1990); In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992).

Where trial court's errors in making its property division with respect to stock options, interspousal gifts to wife, and wife's interest in the family trust impacted a substantial portion of the total marital assets, on remand the trial court should reconsider its attorney fee award, since in making an attorney fee award, the court must consider the financial resources of both parties. In re Balanson, 25 P.3d 28 (Colo. 2001).

On a final property settlement, if it developed that the wife had ample assets of her own to pay for the services of her attorneys, then any additional fees, including the services of counsel on a writ of error and other related matters, may have or may not have been awarded against the husband as the court determines. Kane v. Kane, 154 Colo. 440, 391 P.2d 361 (1964).

The trial court erred in not affording the plaintiff an opportunity to present evidence as to the services rendered by her attorneys, and the reasonable value of such services. Hoffman v. Hoffman, 167 Colo. 432, 447 P.2d 1005 (1968).

The trial court in a separate maintenance action had no authority to award counsel fees to the wife in a divorce action instituted by the husband and pending in another state, such fees being a matter for determination by the courts of the state where the divorce action is pending. Morgan v. Morgan, 139 Colo. 545, 340 P.2d 1060 (1959).

Order for defendant to pay portion of plaintiff's attorney fees upheld. Krall v. Krall, 31 Colo. App. 538, 504 P.2d 681 (1972).

Abuse of discretion. Where the wife not only earned more than husband, but had assets worth substantially more than husband's, and, moreover, initiated the proceedings making attorney fees necessary, the trial court abused its discretion in awarding attorney fees to wife. In re Corbin, 42 Colo. App. 200, 591 P.2d 1046 (1979).

Because family owned corporations were not parties to the dissolution action and because wife instituted post-decree proceedings that were groundless for lack of jurisdiction over the corporations against which relief was sought, court abused its discretion in imposing attorney fees against corporation and divorced husband. In re Noon, 735 P.2d 884 (Colo. App. 1986).

Where the trial court's property division order was an attempt to place the wife in the same financial position insofar as her sepa- rate property was concerned as she had been prior to the two-year-old marriage, but after the wife deducted her attorney fees, she was left with less than she had when she was married, the supreme court held that the portion of that order requiring the wife to pay her attorney fees constituted an abuse of discretion. Smith v. Smith, 172 Colo. 516, 474 P.2d 619 (1970).

Denial of wife's motion for expenses held abuse of discretion. McMillion v. McMillion, 31 Colo. App. 33, 497 P.2d 331 (1972).

There is no abuse of discretion where trial court does not take into account the resources of wife's new husband in concluding that she is entitled to attorney fees. In re Erickson, 43 Colo. App. 319, 602 P.2d 909 (1979).

Where wife is unemployed and has no income, there is no abuse of discretion in an order for partial payment of her attorney fees. In re Erickson, 43 Colo. App. 319, 602 P.2d 909 (1979).

Where husband was temporarily unemployed at the time of the hearing and wife's assets were substantially greater than husband's, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying wife's request for attorney fees. In re McKendry, 735 P.2d 908 (Colo. App. 1986).

Trial court did not err in awarding attorneys fees in a nonparent custody proceeding authorized by § 14-10-123. The award was neither punitive nor inequitable and did not constitute an abuse of discretion. In re Custody of C.J.S., 37 P.3d 479 (Colo. App. 2001).

Where the agreement which provided that each party bear its own legal fees did not contemplate efforts to change the agreement after it was finally approved by the court and incorporated into the decree of divorce, the award of attorney fees by the trial court was within its discretion. Lay v. Lay, 162 Colo. 43, 425 P.2d 704 (1967).

Because the issue as to whether special separation benefits received by former husband upon his voluntary discharge from the Air Force constituted marital property was one of first impression, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying wife attorney fees. In re McElroy, 905 P.2d 1016 (Colo. App. 1995).

Award of attorney fees to attorney appearing on pro bono basis is allowable under statute. In re Swink, 807 P.2d 1245 (Colo. App. 1991).

Trial court has wide discretion in awarding fees and costs and is not bound by the general provisions for recovery of costs for a prevailing party. In re Pickering, 967 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1997).

Trial court considering the award of attorney fees under this section must consider not only the reasonableness of the charge per hour but also the necessity for incurring the hours billed. In re Rieger, 827 P.2d 625 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court erred in denying husband's request for hearing on the reasonableness and necessity of wife's attorney fees and other costs. In re Mockelmann, 944 P.2d 670 (Colo. App. 1997).

This section allows for the award of attorney fees in subsequent proceedings even though the spouse was denied attorney fees in the original dissolution proceeding. Thus, it was an abuse of discretion for the court to deny attorney fees on a subsequent motion where the denial was based on the denial of fees in the original proceeding. In re Plesich, 881 P.2d 379 (Colo. App. 1994).

Trial court may review a waiver of attorney fees in a marital agreement for unconscionability at the time of dissolution, because an unconscionable waiver violates the public policy interest behind protecting spouses and thus is not a valid contract term under § 14-2-304. In re Ikeler, 161 P.3d 663 (Colo. 2007).

D. Enforcement.

The allowance to a wife was enforceable by contempt. Allison v. Allison, 150 Colo. 377, 372 P.2d 946 (1962).

An order for payment of counsel fees decreed by the court to a wife in a divorce action was not a debt dischargeable in bankruptcy. Allison v. Allison, 150 Colo. 377, 372 P.2d 946 (1962).

Award of attorney fees may not be enforced by an assignment under § 14-10-118. In re McCue, 645 P.2d 854 (Colo. App. 1982).

E. Modification and Scope of Review.

Reconsideration of property division to correct error unnecessary absent contest. When neither party contests a trial court's division of property it is not necessary that the court be able to reconsider the property division in order to correct error in the provisions for maintenance and attorney fees. In re Jones, 627 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1981).

Despite a disparity of income, when the court found that the spouse receiving maintenance had considerable assets and ordered her to pay her own attorney fees, there was no abuse of discretion. In re Weibel, 965 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1998).

Issues on review whether attorney fees should have been awarded must depend upon whether the record reflects that the property settlement order contemplated attorney fees and whether as a whole it was fair and equitable. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973).

Lack of written findings of facts leaves no basis for review. Where a trial court makes no written findings of fact in support of its denial of an award of attorney fees, a reviewing court has no basis on which to review the ruling. In re Pilcher, 628 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1980).

Where the motion of an attorney, who had withdrawn as counsel for the wife in a divorce action, for allowance of fees was denied, and record disclosed no evidence or offer of proof to show value of services rendered prior to withdrawal, the action was remanded for findings on the value of his services rendered, if any, for which he had not been compensated, and for judgment pursuant thereto. Morrison v. Peck, 151 Colo. 83, 376 P.2d 58 (1962).

A finding by the trial court that under the circumstances shown each party should pay his or her own costs and attorney fees, supported by the record, will not be disturbed. Jensen v. Jensen, 142 Colo. 420, 351 P.2d 387 (1960).

Under the circumstances shown, the trial court's order was adequate to permit appellate review. In re Woolley, 25 P.3d 1284 (Colo. App. 2001).

Where an order requiring a husband to pay attorney fees for his wife was a means of paying off her indebtedness rather than of enabling her to prosecute, it could properly be considered by the court as part of the division of property settlement and the question on review would have been whether the property settlement as a whole was fair and equitable, not whether the wife had the financial ability to pay her own fees. Krall v. Krall, 31 Colo. App. 538, 504 P.2d 681 (1972).

The supreme court has, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, power to act on applications for attorney fees, costs, alimony, etc., in matters pending on error; however, under ordinary circumstances all of these matters should be presented to the trial court for the reason that the trial court has already had the case before it and is better equipped to determine questions of fact and to make a full and complete investigation and adjudication. Watson v. Watson, 135 Colo. 296, 310 P.2d 554 (1957).

An order granting attorney fees was reviewable even though there had been no final judgment in the case. Daniels v. Daniels, 9 Colo. 133, 10 P. 657 (1886); Bagot v. Bagot, 68 Colo. 562, 191 P. 96 (1920); Benham v. Willmer, 71 Colo. 451, 207 P. 592 (1922); Hobbs v. Hobbs, 72 Colo. 190, 210 P. 398 (1922); Stockham v. Stockham, 145 Colo. 376, 358 P.2d 1026 (1961).

III. ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENTS.

Section controls awarding of attorney fees where antenuptial agreement was silent on the matter. In re Newman, 44 Colo. App. 307, 616 P.2d 982 (1980), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 653 P.2d 728 (Colo. 1982).

No unconstitutional impairment of antenuptial contract by award. Where the matter of attorney fees was left open by an antenuptial contract, there was therefore no unconstitutional impairment of that contract by the award of such. In re Franks, 189 Colo. 499, 542 P.2d 845 (1975).

14-10-120. Decree. (1) A decree of dissolution of marriage or of legal separation is final when entered, subject to the right of appeal. An appeal from the decree of dissolution that does not challenge the finding that the marriage is irretrievably broken does not delay the finality of that provision of the decree which dissolves the marriage beyond the time for appealing from that provision, so that either of the parties may remarry pending appeal.

(2) No earlier than one hundred eighty-two days after entry of a decree of legal separation, on motion of either party and proof that a notice has been mailed to the other party at his or her last-known address, the court shall convert the decree of legal separation to a decree of dissolution of marriage, and a copy thereof shall be mailed to both parties.

(3) The clerk of the court shall give notice of the entry of a decree of dissolution to the office of state registrar of vital statistics in the division of administration of the department of public health and environment, which office shall make this information available to the public upon request.

(4) No decree that may enter shall relieve a spouse from any obligation imposed by law as a result of the marriage for the support or maintenance of a spouse determined to be mentally incompetent by a court of competent jurisdiction prior to the decree, unless such spouse has sufficient property or means of support.

(5) Whenever child support has been ordered, the decree of dissolution, legal separation, declaration of invalidity, allocating parental responsibilities, or support shall contain an order for an income assignment pursuant to section 14-14-111.5.

(6) Notwithstanding the entry of a final decree of dissolution of marriage or of legal separation pursuant to this section, the district court may maintain jurisdiction to enter such temporary or permanent civil protection orders as may be provided by law upon request of any of the parties to the action for dissolution of marriage or legal separation, including, but not limited to, any protection order requested pursuant to section 14-10-108.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Income Tax on Alimony", see 30 Dicta 263 (1953).

Annotator's note. Since § 14-10-120 is similar to repealed § 46-1-7, C.R.S. 1963, § 46-1-9, CRS 53, CSA, C. 56, §§ 13 through 17, and laws antecedent thereto, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

The general assembly intended to eliminate the six-month delay for a decree of dissolution to become effective and intended to terminate the marital status of the parties immediately upon entry of the decree of dissolution. Estate of Burford v. Burford, 935 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1997).

This section permits a party to appeal the termination of the marital status only when the party challenges the district court's finding that the marriage is irretrievably broken or by raising a jurisdictional defect in the proceedings. Estate of Burford v. Burford, 935 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1997).

An unappealed decree of dissolution is final when entered to determine the status of the parties and that abatement does not occur should one party die after the decree is entered. Estate of Burford v. Burford, 935 P.2d 943 (Colo. 1997).

There was but one final decree in a divorce suit, although it may consist of different provisions, one for a dissolution of the marriage relation, another for security for the payment of alimony, and various other provisions embodied in the one instrument. Diegel v. Diegel, 73 Colo. 330, 215 P. 143 (1923).

No other decree was required to be entered than the interlocutory one which in a normal situation mechanically became final. Morris v. Propst, 98 Colo. 213, 55 P.2d 944 (1936); Rodgers v. Rodgers, 137 Colo. 74, 323 P.2d 892 (1958).

A court need not have entered a final decree reiterating or summarizing or tying together its previous orders including an interlocutory decree in Colorado. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 137 Colo. 74, 323 P.2d 892 (1958).

It may have been said that the interlocutory decree was a final order by express provision of the former statute, but, it was pertinent to observe that while the statute said that the interlocutory decree was a final order and therefore subject to review on writ of error, that it did not say that such order was a final decree of divorce. Doty v. Doty, 103 Colo. 543, 88 P.2d 573 (1939).

An unverified, unsupported motion to set aside an interlocutory decree of divorce was not a "motion or petition" within the meaning of the former section concerning the setting aside of interlocutory decrees. Morris v. Propst, 98 Colo. 213, 55 P.2d 944 (1936).

The prevailing party in a divorce action could not be compelled to permit a decree to become final against his express desire and over his objection. Faith v. Faith, 128 Colo. 483, 261 P.2d 255 (1953); McClanahan v. County Court, 136 Colo. 426, 318 P.2d 599 (1957).

Where the prevailing party in a divorce action moved to dismiss the same prior to the entry of a final decree, a trial court lacked jurisdiction to act in the case other than to dismiss the same. McClanahan v. County Court, 136 Colo. 426, 318 P.2d 599 (1957).

Decree of dissolution entered after a spouse's death is void for lack of jurisdiction, and the dissolution action is abated. In Re Connell, 870 P.2d 632 (Colo. App. 1994).

A reversal of the judgment of the trial court was had because of its refusal to grant plaintiff's motion to dismiss her divorce case after the entry of the interlocutory decree. Faith v. Faith, 128 Colo. 483, 261 P.2d 225 (1953).

Where it appears from a record and from the conduct of counsel that the parties agreed that a court would defer determination of permanent alimony, property settlement, and related matters until after the entry of a final decree of divorce, orders entered pursuant thereto were not void because not included in such decree, or the questions reserved therein.

Rodgers v. Rodgers, 137 Colo. 74, 323 P.2d 892 (1958).

Where orders for permanent alimony and related matters were not included in the interlocutory decree, because a court had taken the matter under advisement, orders resulting therefrom were valid and remained in full force and effect, constituting a modification of the interlocutory decree and were merged in a final decree which recited upon the terms and conditions contained in the interlocutory decree or any modification of change thereof. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 137 Colo. 74, 323 P.2d 892 (1958).

Provision in agreement incorporated into dissolution decree which required a father to pay a daughter's medical bills until the daughter was "gainfully employed" was not ambiguous and required that the employment of the daughter be self-supporting, rather than remunerative, in order to terminate the father's obligations. In re Norton, 757 P.2d 1127 (Colo. App. 1988).

The former section relating to the entry of an interlocutory decree in a divorce action within 48 hours after close of a trial, or the return of a verdict, was directory and not mandatory or jurisdictional. Kemper v. Kemper, 140 Colo. 367, 344 P.2d 449 (1959).

Formerly, the necessity for the lapse of six months and the entry of a final decree was just as essential to the power of a court to order a division of property, as to authorize it to enter a final decree. McCoy v. McCoy, 139 Colo. 105, 336 P.2d 302 (1959).

A writ of error in a divorce case was not dismissible on the ground that it was not filed within six months after the issuance of the interlocutory decree. Simmons v. Simmons, 107 Colo. 78, 108 P.2d 871 (1940).

However, notice of a motion to vacate an interlocutory decree of divorce, served upon the administrator of the estate of successful party after the latter's death and after the expiration of the six-month period designated by statute, was futile and without effect. Morris v. Propst, 98 Colo. 213, 55 P.2d 944 (1936).

Where the wife's lien was created by the judgment of the court in a divorce action based upon the stipulation of the parties, the judgment became final and where a subsequent order of abatement terminated the proceedings relative to the motion which the husband had filed to reduce the payments to the wife, it had no effect upon the final judgment which created the lien. Willis v. Neilson, 32 Colo. App. 129, 507 P.2d 1106 (1973).

C.R.C.P. 59(e) specifies that a party may move to alter or amend a judgment by a motion filed not later than 10 days after entry of judgment; therefore, where appellate filed such a motion within the allotted time, and the trial court subsequently did amend its judgment pursuant to such motion and the supplemental motion, the original court's judgment never be- came final, and it was not enforceable by either divorced party with respect to his or her property rights, because it did not create an enforceable right either in the husband or in his estate to take a divided share of the joint tenancy property. Sarno v. Sarno, 28 Colo. App. 598, 478 P.2d 711 (1970).

Order under C.R.C.P. 54(b) authorized. Section 14-10-105, providing that the Colorado rules of civil procedure apply to dissolution proceedings except as "otherwise specifically provided" in the act, and this section, providing that a decree of dissolution of marriage is "final" when entered, subject to the right of appeal, authorize the trial court to enter an order pursuant to C.R.C.P. 54(b) making the decree final for purposes of appeal. In re Baier, 39 Colo. App. 34, 561 P.2d 20 (1977).

Appealability of decree on entry of such order. Upon the entry of an order under C.R.C.P. 54(b) a decree of dissolution of marriage may be appealed prior to entry of permanent orders on the issues of child custody, support, and division of property. In re Baier, 39 Colo. App. 34, 561 P.2d 20 (1977).

Stay of decree pending appeal. When an appeal is taken from the finding that the marriage is "irretrievably broken", the finality of the decree dissolving the marriage may be stayed upon an appropriate motion duly made. In re Franks, 189 Colo. 499, 542 P.2d 845 (1975).

Where a decree in a divorce action ordering title to real property to remain in joint tenancy, and granting the right to possession and income therefrom to the wife, had become final and the time for appeal had expired, the decree could not be reversed by the supreme court. McDonald v. McDonald, 150 Colo. 492, 374 P.2d 690 (1962).

Dissolution decree severing joint tenancy upheld, even though documents conveying house into tenancy in common were not executed. Cannon v. Waddell, 642 P.2d 520 (Colo. App. 1981).

Where the record on error in a divorce action contained no reporter's transcript, the supreme court had no means of reviewing the evidence; hence, the findings and judgment of a trial court were presumed to be supported by the evidence. Schleiger v. Schleiger, 137 Colo. 279, 324 P.2d 370 (1958).

Erroneous divorce decree valid and binding. Although divorce decree was an erroneous judgment, until modified by the court which entered it, or set aside on motion for new trial, or until reversed by an appellate court on direct review proceedings, it was valid and binding. McLeod v. Provident Mut. Life Ins. Co., 186 Colo. 234, 526 P.2d 1318 (1974).

The validity of the arbitration agreement is not governed by the characterization of the proceeding as one for legal separation or for dissolution of marriage. While the agreement for binding Rabbinical arbitration was entered into in the context of a legal separation proceeding that was later dismissed, its validity and application to the current dissolution of marriage proceeding between the same parties is not affected. In re Popack, 998 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 2000).

14-10-120.3. Dissolution of marriage or legal separation upon affidavit - requirements. (1) Final orders in a proceeding for dissolution of marriage or legal separation may be entered upon the affidavit of either or both parties when:

(a) There are no minor children of the husband and wife and the wife is not pregnant or the husband and wife are both represented by counsel and have entered into a separation agreement that provides for the allocation of parental responsibilities concerning the children of the marriage and setting out the amount of child support to be provided by the husband or wife or both; and

(b) The adverse party is served in the manner provided by the Colorado rules of civil procedure; and

(c) There is no genuine issue as to any material fact; and

(d) There is no marital property to be divided or the parties have entered into an agreement for the division of their marital property.

(2) If one party desires to submit the matter for entry of final orders upon an affidavit, the submitting party shall file his or her affidavit setting forth sworn testimony showing the court's jurisdiction and factual averments supporting the relief requested in the proceeding together with a copy of the proposed decree, a copy of any separation agreement proposed for adoption by the court, and any other supporting evidence. The filing of the affidavit does not shorten any statutory waiting period required for entry of a decree of dissolution or decree of legal separation.

(3) The court shall not be bound to enter a decree upon the affidavits of either or both parties, but the court may, upon its own motion, require that a formal hearing be held to determine any or all issues presented by the pleadings.

14-10-120.5. Petition - fee - assessment - displaced homemakers fund. (1) There shall be assessed against a nonindigent petitioner a fee of five dollars for each filing of a petition for dissolution of marriage, declaration of invalidity of marriage, legal separation, or declaratory judgment concerning the status of marriage. All such fees collected shall be transmitted to the state treasurer for deposit in the displaced homemakers fund created pursuant to section 8-15.5-108, C.R.S.

(2) Notwithstanding the amount specified for the fee in subsection (1) of this section, the chief justice of the supreme court by rule or as otherwise provided by law may reduce the amount of the fee if necessary pursuant to section 24-75-402 (3), C.R.S., to reduce the uncommitted reserves of the fund to which all or any portion of the fee is credited. After the uncommitted reserves of the fund are sufficiently reduced, the chief justice by rule or as otherwise provided by law may increase the amount of the fee as provided in section 24-75-402 (4), C.R.S.

14-10-122. Modification and termination of provisions for maintenance, support, and property disposition - automatic lien. (1) (a) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-10-112 (6), the provisions of any decree respecting maintenance may be modified only as to installments accruing subsequent to the motion for modification and only upon a showing of changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms unfair, and, except as otherwise provided in subsection (5) of this section, the provisions of any decree respecting child support may be modified only as to installments accruing subsequent to the filing of the motion for modification and only upon a showing of changed circumstances that are substantial and continuing or on the ground that the order does not contain a provision regarding medical support, such as insurance coverage, payment for medical insurance deductibles and copayments, or unreimbursed medical expenses. The provisions as to property disposition may not be revoked or modified unless the court finds the existence of conditions that justify the reopening of a judgment.

(b) Application of the child support guidelines and schedule of basic child support obligations set forth in section 14-10-115 to the circumstances of the parties at the time of the filing of a motion for modification of the child support order which results in less than a ten percent change in the amount of support due per month shall be deemed not to be a substantial and continuing change of circumstances.

(c) In any action or proceeding in any court of this state in which child support, maintenance when combined with child support, or maintenance is ordered, a payment becomes a final money judgment, referred to in this section as a support judgment, when it is due and not paid. Such payment shall not be retroactively modified except pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) and may be enforced as other judgments without further action by the court; except that an existing child support order with respect to child support payable by the obligor may be modified retroactively to the time that a mutually agreed upon change of physical custody occurs pursuant to subsection (5) of this section. A support judgment is entitled to full faith and credit and may be enforced in any court of this state or any other state. In order to enforce a support judgment, the obligee shall file with the court that issued the order a verified entry of support judgment specifying the period of time that the support judgment covers and the total amount of the support judgment for that period. The obligee or the delegate child support enforcement unit shall not be required to wait fourteen days to execute on such support judgment. A verified entry of support judgment is not required to be signed by an attorney. A verified entry of support judgment may be used to enforce a support judgment for debt entered pursuant to section 14-14-104. The filing of a verified entry of support judgment shall revive all individual support judgments that have arisen during the period of time specified in the entry of support judgment and that have not been satisfied, pursuant to rule 54 (h) of the Colorado rules of civil procedure, without the requirement of a separate motion, notice, or hearing. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph (c), no court order for support judgment nor verified entry of support judgment shall be required in order for the county and state child support enforcement units to certify past-due amounts of child support to the internal revenue service or to the department of revenue for purposes of intercepting a federal or state tax refund or lottery winnings.

(d) If maintenance or child support is modified pursuant to this section, the modification should be effective as of the date of the filing of the motion, unless the court finds that it would cause undue hardship or substantial injustice or unless there has been a mutually agreed upon change of physical custody as provided for in subsection (5) of this section. In no instance shall the order be retroactively modified prior to the date of filing, unless there has been a mutually agreed upon change of physical custody. The court may modify installments of maintenance or child support due between the filing of the motion and the entry of the order even if the circumstances justifying the modification no longer exist at the time the order is entered.

(1.5) (a) Lien by operation of law. (I) Commencing July 1, 1997, all cases in which services are provided in accordance with Title IV-D of the federal "Social Security Act", as amended, referred to in this subsection (1.5) as "IV-D cases", shall be subject to the provisions of this subsection (1.5), regardless of the date the order for child support was entered. In any IV-D case in which current child support, child support when combined with maintenance, or maintenance has been ordered, a payment becomes a support judgment when it is due and not paid, and a lien therefor is created by operation of law against the obligor's real and personal property and any interest in any such real or personal property. The entry of an order for child support debt, retroactive child support, or child support arrearages or a verified entry of judgment pursuant to this section creates a lien by operation of law against the obligor's real and personal property and any interest in any such real and personal property.

(II) The amount of such lien shall be limited to the amount of the support judgment for outstanding child support, child support when combined with maintenance, maintenance, child support debt, retroactive child support, or child support arrearages, any interest accrued thereon, and the amount of any filing fees as specified in this section.

(III) A support judgment or lien shall be entitled to full faith and credit and may be enforced in any court of this state or any other state. Full faith and credit shall be accorded to such a lien arising from another state that complies with the provisions of this subsection (1.5). Judicial notice or hearing or the filing of a verified entry of judgment shall not be required prior to the enforcement of such a lien.

(IV) The creation of a lien pursuant to this section shall be in addition to any other remedy allowed by law.

(b) Lien on real property. (I) To evidence a lien on real property created pursuant to this subsection (1.5), a delegate child support enforcement unit shall issue a notice of lien and record the same in the real estate records in the office of the clerk and recorder of any county in the state of Colorado in which the obligor holds an interest in real property. From the time of recording of the notice of lien, such lien shall be an encumbrance in favor of the obligee, or the assignee of the obligee, and shall encumber any interest of the obligor in any real property in such county.

(II) The lien on real property created by this section shall remain in effect for the earlier of twelve years or until all past-due amounts are paid, including any accrued interest and costs, without the necessity of renewal. A lien on real property arising pursuant to this subsection (1.5) may be extended or renewed indefinitely beyond twelve years by rerecording the lien every twelve years. Within twenty calendar days after satisfaction of the debt or debts described in the notice of lien, the delegate child support enforcement unit shall record a release of lien with the clerk and recorder of the county where the notice of lien was recorded. A release of lien shall be conclusive evidence that the lien is extinguished.

(III) The child support enforcement unit shall be exempt from the payment of recording fees charged by the clerk and recorder for the recording of notices of lien or releases of lien.

(c) Lien on personal property other than wages and moneys held by a financial institution as defined in 42 U.S.C. sec. 669 (d) or motor vehicles. (I) To evidence a lien on personal property, other than wages and moneys held by a financial institution as defined in 42 U.S.C. sec. 669 (d) or motor vehicles, created pursuant to this subsection (1.5), the state child support enforcement agency shall file a notice of lien with the secretary of state by means of direct electronic data transmission. From the time of filing the notice of lien with the secretary of state, such lien shall be an encumbrance in favor of the obligee, or the assignee of the obligee, and shall encumber all personal property or any interest of the obligor in any personal property.

(II) The lien on personal property created by this section shall remain in effect for the earlier of twelve years or until all past-due amounts are paid, including any accrued interest and costs, without the necessity of renewal. A lien on personal property arising pursuant to this subsection (1.5) may be extended or renewed indefinitely beyond twelve years by rerecording the lien every twelve years. Within twenty calendar days after satisfaction of the debt or debts described in the notice of lien, the state child support enforcement agency shall file a release of lien with the secretary of state. The filing of such a release of lien shall be conclusive evidence that the lien is extinguished.

(III) The state child support enforcement agency shall be exempt from paying a fee for the filing of notices of liens or releases of liens with the secretary of state pursuant to this paragraph (c).

(IV) For purposes of this paragraph (c), "personal property" means property that the child support enforcement agency has determined has a net equity value of not less than five thousand dollars at the time of the filing of the notice of lien with the secretary of state.

(d) Lien on motor vehicles. (I) (A) To evidence a lien on a motor vehicle created pursuant to this subsection (1.5), a delegate child support enforcement unit shall issue a notice of lien to the authorized agent as defined in section 42-6-102 (1), C.R.S., by first class mail. From the time of filing of the lien for public record and the notation of such lien on the owner's certificate of title, such lien shall be an encumbrance in favor of the obligee, or the assignee of the obligee, and shall encumber any interest of the obligor in the motor vehicle. In order for any such lien to be effective as a valid lien against a motor vehicle, the obligee, or assignee of the obligee, shall have such lien filed for public record and noted on the owner's certificate of title in the manner provided in sections 42-6-121 and 42-6-129, C.R.S.

(B) Liens on motor vehicles created by this section shall remain in effect for the same period of time as any other lien on motor vehicles as specified in section 42-6-127, C.R.S., or until the entire amount of the lien is paid, whichever occurs first. A lien created pursuant to this section may be renewed pursuant to section 42-6-127, C.R.S. Within twenty calendar days after satisfaction of the debt or debts described in the notice of lien, the delegate child support enforcement unit shall release the lien pursuant to the procedures specified in section 42-6-125, C.R.S. When a lien on a motor vehicle created pursuant to this subsection (1.5) is released, the authorized agent and the executive director of the department of revenue shall proceed as provided in section 42-6-126, C.R.S.

(C) The child support enforcement unit shall not be exempt from the payment of filing fees charged by the authorized agent for the filing of either the notice of lien or the release of lien. However, the child support enforcement unit may add the amount of the filing fee to the lien amount and collect the amount of such fees from the obligor.

(II) For purposes of this subsection (1.5), "motor vehicle" means any self-propelled vehicle that is designed primarily for travel on the public highways and that is generally and commonly used to transport persons and property over the public highways, trailers, semitrailers, and trailer coaches, without motive power; that has a net equity value based upon the loan value identified for such vehicle in the national automobile dealers' association car guide of not less than five thousand dollars at the time of the filing of the notice of lien and that meets such additional conditions as the state board of human services may establish by rule; and on which vehicle a lien already exists that is filed for public record and noted accordingly on the owner's certificate of title. "Motor vehicle" does not include low-power scooters, as defined in section 42-1-102, C.R.S.; vehicles that operate only upon rails or tracks laid in place on the ground or that travel through the air or that derive their motive power from overhead electric lines; farm tractors, farm trailers, and other machines and tools used in the production, harvesting, and care of farm products; and special mobile machinery or industrial machinery not designed primarily for highway transportation. "Motor vehicle" does not include a vehicle that has a net equity value based upon the loan value identified for such vehicle in the national automobile dealers' association car guide of less than five thousand dollars at the time of the filing of the notice of lien and does not include a vehicle that is not otherwise encumbered by a lien or mortgage that is filed for public record and noted accordingly on the owner's certificate of title.

(e) Priority of a lien. (I) A lien on real property created pursuant to this section shall be in effect for the earlier of twelve years or until all past-due amounts are paid and shall have priority over all unrecorded liens and all subsequent recorded or unrecorded liens from the time of recording, except such liens as may be exempted by regulation of the state board of human services. A lien on real property arising pursuant to this subsection (1.5) may be extended or renewed indefinitely beyond twelve years by rerecording the lien every twelve years.

(II) A lien on personal property, other than motor vehicles, created pursuant to this section shall be in effect for the earlier of twelve years or until all past-due amounts are paid and shall have priority from the time the lien is filed with the central filing officer over all unfiled liens and all subsequent filed or unfiled liens, except such liens as may be exempted by regulation of the state board of human services. A lien on personal property arising pursuant to this subsection (1.5) may be extended or renewed indefinitely beyond twelve years by rerecording the lien every twelve years.

(III) Liens on motor vehicles created pursuant to this section shall remain in effect for the same period of time as any other lien on motor vehicles as specified in section 42-6-127, C.R.S., or until all past-due amounts are paid, whichever occurs first, and shall have priority from the time the lien is filed for public record and noted on the owner's certificate of title over all unfiled liens and all subsequent filed or unfiled liens, except such liens as may be exempted by regulation of the state board of human services.

(f) Notice of lien - contents. (I) The notice of lien shall contain the following information:

(A) The name and address of the delegate child support enforcement unit and the name of the obligee or the assignee of the obligee as grantee of the lien;

(B) The name, social security number, and last-known address of the obligor as grantor of the lien;

(C) The year, make, and vehicle identification number of any motor vehicle for liens arising pursuant to paragraph (d) of this subsection (1.5);

(D) A general description of the personal property for liens arising pursuant to paragraph (c) of this subsection (1.5);

(E) The county and court case number of the court of record that issued the order of current child support, child support debt, retroactive child support, child support arrearages, child support when combined with maintenance, or maintenance or of the court of record where the verified entry of judgment was filed;

(F) The date the order was entered;

(G) The date the obligation commenced;

(H) The amount of the order for current child support, child support debt, retroactive child support, child support arrearages, child support when combined with maintenance, or maintenance;

(I) The total amount of past-due support as of a date certain; and

(J) A statement that interest may accrue on all amounts ordered to be paid, pursuant to sections 14-14-106 and 5-12-101, C.R.S., and may be collected from the obligor in addition to costs of sale, attorney fees, and any other costs or fees incident to such sale for liens arising pursuant to paragraphs (b) and (c) of this subsection (1.5).

(II) For purposes of liens against motor vehicles, the notice of lien shall include the information set forth in subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (f) in addition to the information specified in section 42-6-120, C.R.S.

(g) Rules. The state board of human services shall promulgate rules and regulations concerning the procedures and mechanism by which to implement this subsection (1.5).

(h) Bona fide purchasers - bona fide lenders. (I) The provisions of this subsection (1.5) shall not apply to any bona fide purchaser who acquires an interest in any personal property or any motor vehicle without notice of the lien or to any bona fide lender who lent money to the obligor without notice of the lien the security or partial security for which is any personal property or motor vehicle of such obligor.

(II) For purposes of this paragraph (h):

(A) "Bona fide purchaser" means a purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of an adverse claim, including but not limited to an automatic lien arising pursuant to this subsection (1.5).

(B) "Bona fide lender" means a lender for value in good faith and without notice of an adverse claim, including but not limited to an automatic lien arising pursuant to this subsection (1.5).

(i) No liability. No clerk and recorder, authorized agent as defined in section 42-6-102 (1), C.R.S., financial institution, lienholder, or filing officer, nor any employee of any of such persons or entities, shall be liable for damages for actions taken in good faith compliance with this subsection (1.5).

(j) Definition. For purposes of this subsection (1.5), "child support debt" shall have the same meaning as set forth in section 26-13.5-102 (3), C.R.S.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed in writing or expressly provided in the decree, the obligation to pay future maintenance is terminated upon the death of either party or the remarriage of the party receiving maintenance.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed in writing or expressly provided in the decree, provisions for the support of a child are terminated by emancipation of the child but not by the death of a parent obligated to support the child. When a parent obligated to pay support dies, the amount of support may be modified, revoked, or commuted to a lump-sum payment, to the extent just and appropriate in the circumstances.

(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, the provisions of any decree respecting child support may be modified as a result of the change in age for the duty of support as provided in section 14-10-115 (15), but only as to installments accruing subsequent to the filing of the motion for modification; except that section 14-10-115 (15) (b) does not apply to modifications of child support orders with respect to a child who has already achieved the age of nineteen as of July 1, 1991.

(5) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, when a mutually agreed upon change of physical care occurs, the provisions for child support of the obligor under the existing child support order, if modified pursuant to this section, will be modified as of the date when physical care was changed. When a mutually agreed upon change of physical care occurs, parties are encouraged to avail themselves of the provision set forth in section 14-10-115 (14) (a) for updating and modifying a child support order without a court hearing.

(6) (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this article, within the time frames set forth in paragraph (c) of this subsection (6), the individual named as the father in the order may file a motion to modify or terminate an order for child support entered pursuant to this article if genetic test results based on DNA testing, administered in accordance with section 13-25-126, C.R.S., establish the exclusion of the individual named as the father in the order as the biological parent of the child for whose benefit the child support order was entered.

(b) If the court finds pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (6) that the individual named as the father in the order is not the biological parent of the child for whose benefit the child support order was entered and that it is just and proper under the circumstances and in the best interests of the child, the court shall modify the provisions of the order for support with respect to that child by terminating the child support obligation as to installments accruing subsequent to the filing of the motion for modification or termination, and the court may vacate or deem as satisfied, in whole or in part, unpaid child support obligations arising from or based upon the order determining parentage. The court shall not order restitution from the state for any sums paid to or collected by the state for the benefit of the child.

(c) (I) A motion to modify or terminate an order for child support pursuant to this subsection (6) must be filed within two years from the date of the entry of the initial order establishing the child support obligation.

(II) Repealed.

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b) of this subsection (6), a court order for child support shall not be modified or terminated pursuant to this subsection (6) if:

(I) The child support obligor acknowledged paternity pursuant to section 19-4-105 (1) (c) or (1) (e), C.R.S., knowing that he was not the father of the child;

(II) The child was adopted by the child support obligor; or

(III) The child was conceived by means of assisted reproduction.

(e) A motion filed pursuant to this section may be brought by the individual named as the father in the order and shall be served in the manner set forth in the Colorado rules of civil procedure upon all other parties. The court shall not modify or set aside a final order determining parentage pursuant to this section without a hearing.

(f) For purposes of this subsection (6), “DNA” means deoxyribonucleic acid.

Annotator's note. Cases relevant to § 14-10-122 (1) decided prior to its earliest source, L. 71, p. 529, § 1, have been included in the annotations to this section.

This section effects a legislative abrogation of the common law that developed under the divorce statutes operative prior to the uniform dissolution of marriage act. In re Icke, 189 Colo. 319, 540 P.2d 1076 (1975).

For the effect of this section on prior law, see In re Edwards, 39 Colo. App. 26, 560 P.2d 849 (1977).

Abatement of maintenance payments not authorized by this section. In re Ward, 717 P.2d 513 (Colo. App. 1985).

Social security benefits may be credited towards support obligation. Social security disability benefit payments and social security retirement benefit payments for minor children may, at the discretion of the trial court, be credited toward a father's obligation to pay support. In re Robinson, 651 P.2d 454 (Colo. App. 1982).

When social security disability benefit payments for children are set off against a father's obligation to pay support, the father is entitled to credit only up to the extent of his obligation for monthly payments of child support, but not in excess thereof. In re Robinson, 651 P.2d 454 (Colo. App. 1982).

Life insurance reasonable means of meeting obligation. The maintenance of a life insurance policy with the former husband's minor children as beneficiaries provides a reasonable and practical means by which the obligation under this section can be met. In re Icke, 189 Colo. 319, 540 P.2d 1076 (1975).

Where the husband was in very poor health, suffering from diabetes and high blood pressure, had heart damage and had previously suffered a stroke, and furthermore, because of his poor health, the husband was under doctor's orders to work in a low pressure occupation, the trial court did not err in ordering the husband to carry a life insurance in favor of his former wife. In re Koltavy, 44 Colo. App. 305, 612 P.2d 1161 (1980).

Court may order life insurance naming children as beneficiaries be maintained by parent obligated to pay child support, just as its provisions for child support now extend beyond the death of the parent, unless otherwise provided. In re Icke, 35 Colo. App. 60, 530 P.2d 1001 (1974), aff'd, 189 Colo. 319, 540 P.2d 1076 (1975).

Valuation of undisclosed assets. Once property has been divided pursuant to § 14-10-113, such property becomes akin to separate property, and any increase in the value of ownership interest therein should be considered when determining valuation. The failure to do so constitutes a confiscatory taking. In re Hiner, 710 P.2d 488 (Colo. 1985).

The doctrine of equitable estoppel may properly be applied to afford relief from accrued arrearages in child support if the party asserting the claim demonstrates reasonable reliance, to the party's detriment, upon the acts or representations of the other person and lack of knowledge or convenient means of knowing the facts. In re Dennin and Lohf, 811 P.2d 449 (Colo. App. 1991).

The doctrine of equitable estoppel did not prevent enforcement of California decree to pay child support where father's failure to pay ordered amount or to seek modification did not fall within any of the special circumstances for which estoppel is applicable. In re Barone, 895 P.2d 1075 (Colo. App. 1994).

Where a court finds that the doctrine of equitable estoppel will support a reduction in child support arrearages due to a parent's misconduct, the court must determine whether such reduction meets the statutory policies contained in § 14-10-115 and whether such reduction will damage the child's interests. The court's calculation of the reduction of the arrearages must be based on the amount of child support that would have been paid but for the misconduct of the parent. In re Anthony-Guillar, 207 P.3d 934 (Colo. App. 2009).

Child support obligations may be modified only as to installments accruing after motion to modify has been filed. In re Pote, 847 P.2d 246 (Colo. App. 1993) (decided under law in effect prior to 1991 amendment relating to voluntary change of physical custody).

The provisions of any decree respecting child support may be modified only as to installments accruing after the filing for modification. Thus, the trial court's ability to modify retroactively an accrued child support obligation is severely restricted. In re Wright, 924 P.2d 1207 (Colo. App. 1996).

Interest accrues on arrearages from the date each installment becomes due. In re Pote, 847 P.2d 246 (Colo. App. 1993).

Entry of a judgment pursuant to this section for past due support payments will not alter a trial court's authority to enforce its order underlying that judgment through contempt proceedings. The entry of a judgment, by operation of law pursuant to this section, does not deprive the trial court of its authority to enforce its child support and maintenance orders underlying the judgment. In re Nussbeck, 974 P.2d 493 (Colo. 1999) (overruling In re Woodrum, 618 P.2d 732 (Colo. App. 1980)).

Manzo, 659 P.2d 669 (Colo. 1983); In re Ward, 670 P.2d 1260 (Colo. App. 1983); In re Hauger, 679 P.2d 604 (Colo. App. 1984); In re Burns, 717 P.2d 991 (Colo. App. 1985); In re Aragon, 773 P.2d 1110 (Colo. App. 1989); In re Wisdom, 833 P.2d 884 (Colo. App. 1992).

II. MODIFICATION.

A. Procedure.

Application for increase of alimony, and not contempt proceeding, was proper remedy of divorced wife complaining of reduction of alimony by court order. Weydeveld v. Weydeveld, 100 Colo. 301, 67 P.2d 72 (1937).

Orderly process requires a motion for modification of support payments, notice thereof, and a setting of the matter for hearing and disposition, and the party opposing modification has the right to prepare for such issue and present countervailing evidence. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 155 Colo. 7, 392 P.2d 285 (1964).

The mere filing of a petition to modify support payments and even having a hearing thereon without proceeding to a conclusion and the entry of an order thereon can have no legal effect. Drazich v. Drazich, 153 Colo. 218, 385 P.2d 259 (1963).

The former statute of 1883 made provision for a reasonable and proper alteration in the amount of alimony allowed in a decree of divorce, and was held to contemplate that when such a change occurred in the condition or circumstances of the parties as renders a modification of the decree in this respect proper, that the application therefor should be made to the trial court, but such an application, necessarily based on new and additional matters, could be entertained in the supreme court on a petition for a rehearing of an appeal, although the original decree was here modified on the hearing. Luthe v. Luthe, 12 Colo. 421, 21 P. 467 (1889).

A judgment modifying, or refusing to modify, that part of the original divorce decree awarding alimony was a judgment in a divorce action, and was clearly subject to the requirement of notice as to a review, as was the original judgment or decree. Diegel v. Diegel, 73 Colo. 330, 215 P. 143 (1923).

Where a modification of a decree awarding alimony was sought, the application, though made in the same case, was upon a petition asserting new facts, and upon a new notice, and the judgment of the court thereon was a final judgment to which a writ of error would lie. Prewitt v. Prewitt, 52 Colo. 522, 122 P. 766 (1912).

Order specifying amount where original order merely imposed duty. Where an original court order imposes a duty of support without specifying an amount under the criteria of § 14-

10-115, a subsequent court order specifying the amount need only conform with § 14-10-115 rather than the modification requirements of this section. In re Saiz, 634 P.2d 1020 (Colo. App. 1981).

Reference to C.R.C.P. 60 to reopen judgment. There is no specific provision in this section, controlling the procedure by which a property division order may be reopened. Therefore, in order to determine whether the judgment may be reopened, reference must be made to C.R.C.P. 60. In re Scheuerman, 42 Colo. App. 206, 591 P.2d 1044 (1979).

Appropriate motion required to alter, amend, or vacate original trial court's order. Original trial court's order valuing the marital property was a valid final judgment which could be altered only upon appropriate motion under either C.R.C.P. 59 or 60. In re McKendry, 735 P.2d 908 (Colo. App. 1986).

The provisions of this section governing retroactive modification of child support upon a change of physical custody conflict with, but control over, C.R.C.P. 60 (b) because subsection (1)(c) expressly provides for retroactive modification of child support without imposing any time limit. In re Green, 93 P.3d 614 (Colo. App. 2004).

Upon registration, decree of foreign court becomes in effect a Colorado order, and is subject to the same limitations as to modification as if entered in a Colorado court. Such orders can only be modified by compliance with this section. Malmgren v. Malmgren, 628 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1981).

Informal motion to modify is permissible. Unless due process is violated, the informality of an oral motion by one party to set aside the property agreement amounts to no more than an irregularity which does not affect the jurisdiction of the district court. In re Stroud, 631 P.2d 168 (Colo. 1981).

A property division is final and nonmodifiable absent conditions justifying relief from judgment. In re Wells, 833 P.2d 797 (Colo. App. 1991).

Reconsideration of property division to correct error unnecessary absent contest. When neither party contests a trial court's division of property it is not necessary that the court be able to reconsider the property division in order to correct error in the provisions for maintenance and attorney fees. In re Jones, 627 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1981).

Findings based on needs and circumstances on hearing date. In modification of support orders, the court must base its findings and orders on the needs of the children and the circumstances of the parents at the time of the hearing rather than on what those conditions might have been in the past or may be in the future. In re Serfoss, 642 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1981).

In modification of maintenance, court must base its findings and orders on needs and circumstances of parties at the time of the hearing rather than on what those conditions might have been in the past or may be in the future and should consider the parties' actual financial situation and their ability to earn. In re Ward, 717 P.2d 513 (Colo. App. 1985).

Although a separation agreement incorporated into a decree may expressly prohibit any modification of maintenance provisions contained therein, a district court may modify the maintenance provisions of a separation agreement incorporated into a dissolution decree on grounds of unconscionability if the agreement is silent on the subject or if the parties specifically reserve such power to the court. Any effort to limit or preclude the authority of district court to modify the maintenance provision of separation agreement must be articulated by language that is specific and unequivocal. In re Udis, 780 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1989).

Family law referee lacks authority to hear a motion for the modification of child support when the party against whom such motion is filed objects to a hearing before a referee. In re Mead, 765 P.2d 1072 (Colo. App. 1988).

In those cases in which a child support obligation has been ordered and the obligated parent becomes eligible for social security benefits, a motion to modify child support is required before the child support obligation of the parent may be reduced by the amount of social security benefits paid for the benefit of the child. In re Wright, 924 P.2d 1207 (Colo. App. 1996).

B. Unconscionability.

Premise for challenge to separation agreement. A challenge to a separation agreement under this article directed to the provisions pertaining to maintenance and child support must be premised on whether the agreement is unconscionable. In re Lowery, 39 Colo. App. 413, 568 P.2d 103 (1977), aff'd, 195 Colo. 86, 575 P.2d 430 (1978).

Fraud and overreaching must also be shown. In order to set aside the property division provisions of a settlement agreement, in addition to establishing the unconscionability of the agreement, fraud and overreaching must be shown. In re Lowery, 39 Colo. App. 413, 568 P.2d 103 (1977), aff'd, 195 Colo. 86, 575 P.2d 430 (1978).

"Unconscionable" construed. The term "unconscionable", in subsection (1), has the same meaning of fair, reasonable and just, as the identical term used in § 14-10-112. In re Carney, 631 P.2d 1173 (Colo. App. 1981); In re Dixon, 683 P.2d 803, (Colo. App. 1983).

In determining whether an agreement is, or has become, unconscionable, the trial court should consider and apply the pertinent criteria set forth in the following sections: Section 14-10-112 as to the economic circumstances of the parties; § 14-10-113 (1) as to the division of property; § 14-10-114 (1) as to maintenance; and § 14-10-115 (1) as to child support. In re Lowery, 39 Colo. App. 413, 568 P.2d 103 (1977), aff'd, 195 Colo. 86, 575 P.2d 430 (1978).

In determining whether the terms of the original child support decree have become unconscionable, the trial court should apply the criteria set forth in § 14-10-115 (1). In re Hughes, 635 P.2d 933 (Colo. App. 1981).

In deciding whether the terms of a dissolution decree have become unconscionable, a trial court should consider and apply the criteria listed in § 14-10-115 (1). In re Pring, 742 P.2d 343 (Colo. App. 1987).

A party seeking modification of the terms of a separation agreement incorporated into a dissolution decree has a heavy burden of proving that those provisions have become unconscionable under all relevant circumstances. In re Udis, 780 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1989).

Presumption of unconscionability provision deprived parties of right to objective judicial determination. Provision in divorce decree specifying conditions under which unconscionability would be presumed deprived parties of the right to have an objective judicial determination in the future, based on the circumstances then existing. In re Davis, 44 Colo. App. 355, 618 P.2d 692 (1980).

No presumption of unconscionability in cost of living increase provision. Provision in property settlement providing for a cost of living increase in child support based on the consumer price index does not create presumption of unconscionability because provision was not imposed by the court. In re Lamm, 682 P.2d 67 (Colo. App. 1984).

Educational savings not basis for unconscionability. The fact that a parent manages to save money for her children's education should not be a reason to punish that parent's frugality by allowing such savings to serve as a basis to characterize the initial agreement as unconscionable. In re Anderson, 638 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1981).

Parties are free to mutually agree upon child support provision which a court could not impose upon them. In re Lamm, 682 P.2d 67 (Colo. App. 1984).

Where the trial court reserves jurisdiction for the modification of a maintenance decree but does not establish a standard other than the unconscionability standard in this section, the unconscionability standard must be applied. In re Bowman-Berry, 749 P.2d 465 (Colo. App. 1987).

The fact that a spouse who receives maintenance enjoys increased income in comparison to the amount of income earned by that spouse at the time the decree was entered does not necessarily require the conclusion that the initial award of maintenance has been rendered unconscionable. In re Udis, 780 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1989).

Wife's increased earnings do not require conclusion that maintenance amount is unconscionable nor do they reduce dollar for dollar the amount properly awarded where record supports the determination that wife met the threshold for maintenance. In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992).

Where wife was earning $1,500 per month, but her standard of living was below that enjoyed during the marriage, it was within the court's discretion to determine that the continuing disparity of income between the husband and wife required continuing maintenance, although in a lower monthly amount. Aldinger v. Aldinger, 813 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1991).

Obligor spouse's reduced income as a result of a job change in anticipation of or in connection with early retirement may be considered by court in reducing maintenance, and the obligor shall not be considered voluntarily underemployed if (1) the obligor's decision was made in good faith and not with the motivation to decrease or eliminate maintenance, and (2) the decision was objectively reasonable based on factors such as the obligor's age, health, and the practice of the industry in which the obligor was employed. A similar analysis would apply to an obligee spouse who took an early retirement and sought to increase maintenance on that basis. In re Swing, 194 P.3d 498 (Colo. App. 2008).

C. Changed Circumstances.

It was fundamental that orders for the payment of alimony were subject to modification due to the changed circumstances of the parties. Stevens v. Stevens, 31 Colo. 188, 72 P. 1061 (1903); Prewitt v. Prewitt, 52 Colo. 522, 122 P. 766 (1912); Jewel v. Jewel, 71 Colo. 470, 207 P. 991 (1922); Diegel v. Diegel, 73 Colo. 330, 215 P. 143 (1923); Huff v. Huff, 77 Colo. 15, 234 P. 167 (1925); Harris v. Harris, 113 Colo. 41, 154 P.2d 617 (1944); Elmer v. Elmer, 132 Colo. 57, 285 P.2d 601 (1955); Huber v. Huber, 143 Colo. 255, 353 P.2d 379 (1960); Brownfield v. Brownfield, 143 Colo. 262, 352 P.2d 674 (1960); Lopez v. Lopez, 148 Colo. 404, 366 P.2d 373 (1961).

There must be evidence of change of circumstances from time of previous decree awarding child support to justify a change in provisions. Manson v. Manson, 35 Colo. App. 144, 529 P.2d 1345 (1974); In re Soderquist, 44 Colo. App. 131, 608 P.2d 851 (1980); In re Davis, 44 Colo. App. 355, 618 P.2d 692 (1980).

The question is not whether, based on current financial circumstances of the parties, a court would have awarded the same amount of child support as that incorporated in the original decree. Instead, the question on a motion to modify is different: Have the terms of the original award become unfair, i.e., unconscionable. In re Anderson, 638 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1981); In re DaFoe, 677 P.2d 426 (Colo. App. 1983).

The burden is heavy upon him who seeks modification; "changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms unconscionable" must be shown. In re Lodholm, 35 Colo. App. 411, 536 P.2d 842 (1975); In re Erickson, 43 Colo. App. 319, 602 P.2d 909 (1979); In re Anderson, 638 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1981); McVay v. Johnson, 727 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1986); In re Pring, 742 P.2d 343 (Colo. App. 1987).

This section places the burden upon the party who seeks the modification to show changed circumstances so substantial as to make the terms of the decree unconscionable. In re Davis, 44 Colo. App. 355, 618 P.2d 692 (1980).

In modifying a provision for maintenance, the burden is on the party seeking the modification to prove a substantial and continuing change of circumstances, and that, in considering the modification, the court should take into account the provisions of § 14-10-114. Malmgren v. Malmgren, 628 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1981).

Question is not whether, based on the current financial circumstances of the parties, a court would have awarded the same amount of child support as that incorporated in the original decree, but whether the terms of the original agreement have become unfair. In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997).

Provisions as to property disposition may not be modified absent conditions justifying the reopening of a judgment, and no attempt was made to establish the existence of such conditions. In re Anderson, 711 P.2d 699 (Colo. App. 1985).

Child support may be modified only upon a showing of changed circumstances that are substantial and continuing. In re Hamilton, 857 P.2d 542 (Colo. App. 1993); In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997); In re Lishnevsky, 981 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1999).

A change is not substantial and continuing if application of the guidelines to the parties' present situation results in a change of less than 10% in the amount of child support. In re Lishnevsky, 981 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1999).

It is not every change of circumstance that entitles a former husband to a reduction of his support payments. Frazier v. Frazier, 164 Colo. 245, 433 P.2d 764 (1967).

Substantial and continuing changed circumstances requirement and postsecondary education support orders. Absent application of the age of emancipation (subsection (4)) or medical insurance (subsection (1)) exceptions, the court's continuing jurisdiction to modify postsecondary education support orders is invoked only upon a showing of substantial and continuing changed circumstances by the party seeking modification. Nothing in the plain language of § 14-10-115 (1.5)(c.5) or this section alters this clear, unambiguous requirement. In re Chalot, 112 P.3d 47 (Colo. 2005).

Effect of amendments to postsecondary education support scheme on the substantial and continuing changed circumstances requirement. The general assembly did not express an intent that its enactments of amendments to the postsecondary education support scheme alone automatically triggers a court's continuing jurisdiction to modify child support. The requirement for substantial and continuing changed circumstances must still be shown. In re Chalot, 112 P.3d 47 (Colo. 2005).

Trial court properly denied father's motion for modification, which was based solely on the 1993 statutory amendment to § 14-10-115 (1.5)(b)(I) and which did not allege any substantial or continuing change in the parents' or the child's circumstances. In re Eaton, 894 P.2d 56 (Colo. App. 1995).

Where the divorce decree by its terms anticipated the very change in circumstances upon which the court at the modification hearing based its new order, such an increase in income could not support a later decree of the court modifying the original decree, because where the alleged change in the circumstances of the parties was one that the trial court anticipated and made allowance for when entering the original decree, such change would not be a ground for a modification of the decree. Andrews v. Andrews, 161 Colo. 529, 423 P.2d 573 (1967).

Where the most recent court order in a divorce action was based on the parties' written stipulation and agreement, and the wording of the order clearly and unambiguously stated that defendant was to pay $25 per week for the support of the minor children, and there was no mention in that order of any alimony or support for plaintiff, the subsequent remarriage of plaintiff was immaterial in the disposition of the case considering reduction in payments. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 32 Colo. App. 145, 507 P.2d 1110 (1973).

When a divorce decree directed the father to pay a specified amount periodically for the joint benefit of more than one minor child, the emancipation of one of the children did not automatically affect the liability of the father for the full sum prescribed by the order, rather it became the burden of the father to make such showing as would entitle him to be relieved of all or a part of such obligation, and his failure to do so estopped him from asserting any credits for such emancipation under an arrearage judgment for the full amount of the group allowance. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 32 Colo. App. 145, 507 P.2d 1110 (1973).

If the financial ability of the husband and father improves, and the needs of the minor children increase, the jurisdiction of the court to make additional orders for the care and maintenance of the minor children may be invoked. Watson v. Watson, 135 Colo. 296, 310 P.2d 554 (1957); Garrow v. Garrow, 152 Colo. 480, 382 P.2d 809 (1963).

If the financial ability of the father improves and the needs of the minor children increase, it is proper to make appropriate increases in the amount of child support. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

A former spouse receiving maintenance should be permitted to benefit from his or her frugality and not the obligor. The former spouse should not be penalized for choosing a more austere lifestyle. In re Weibel, 965 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1998).

The fact that the spouse receiving maintenance is able to increase his or her income does not, in itself, make the initial award unconscionable. In re Weibel, 965 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1998).

The evidence did not support the husband's allegations with reference to his income or inability to pay, where he had the same employer and there was a very negligible difference in his income, and the substantial increase in his expenses was brought about by obligations incurred through entering into a new marriage, since this type of change was not, by itself, a ground for modification. Beddoes v. Beddoes, 155 Colo. 115, 393 P.2d 1 (1964).

Improved ability to pay support insufficient for modification. Evidence of the father's ability to pay an increased amount of child support is insufficient alone to justify modification. In re Hughes, 635 P.2d 933 (Colo. App. 1981).

Nor does it provide a basis for reduction. Where a father's income exceeds that which he was earning at the time of entry of the original decree, there was no basis for reduction of future support payments. In re Anderson, 638 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1981).

Child's needs more compelling than father's. Despite the fact that the father had left the military and enrolled in college, the trial court erred when it denied the mother's motion for an increase in child support where there was a reasonable inference from the evidence that the father's military experience qualified him for civilian employment. In re Mizer, 683 P.2d 382 (Colo. App. 1984).

Applications for a reduction in child support payments based on such a change in the mother's financial condition as her gainful employment, an increase in her earnings, her acquisition of property, or the like, have been denied in many cases, where no other circumstances warranted a reduction in the payments, because a mother's employment or income does not relieve the father of the obligation to support his children under a support order, and the mother's employment or property would not inure to the father's benefit as a change of circumstances diminishing his obligation to support children. Beddoes v. Beddoes, 155 Colo. 115, 393 P.2d 1 (1964).

In equitably adjusting financial obligations of parties based upon changed circumstances, the property division remains fixed and requisite adjustments to achieve fairness are to be made in the maintenance provisions of a decree. In re Jones, 627 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1981).

In making a determination of changed circumstances that are substantial and continuing, the statutory child support guidelines must be considered in conjunction with the other evidence presented. In re Miller, 790 P.2d 890 (Colo. App. 1990).

The courts have not created a rigid rule precluding reduction in support or maintenance payments when both incomes have increased. In re DaFoe, 677 P.2d 426 (Colo. App. 1983).

Inflation may be considered. The effects of inflation are a proper factor to be considered in an action for child support modification. Nevertheless, there must be proper proof of the rate of inflation and its specific effects on the petitioner's circumstances. In re Hughes, 635 P.2d 933 (Colo. App. 1981).

Social security payments made to a dependent child as a result of the supporting parent's death must be considered by the court on a motion to terminate or modify its order for child support. In re Estate of Meek, 669 P.2d 628 (Colo. App. 1983).

Voluntarily accepted reduction due to temporarily reduced income not relevant. The fact that a custodial parent has voluntarily agreed to a reduction of child support during the time when the noncustodial parent's income was temporarily reduced has no relevance to the situation, where that parent's income later increases. In re Anderson, 638 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1981).

Where there was no showing of change in the circumstances of the parties subsequent to a prior hearing as would justify a modification of orders for the payment of alimony, a motion therefor was properly denied. Brownfield v. Brownfield, 143 Colo. 262, 352 P.2d 674 (1960).

Nothing in the statute precludes the trial court from ordering a support payment that exceeds the known needs of the child. In re McCord, 910 P.2d 85 (Colo. App. 1995).

Subsection (1)(a) no longer requires a finding of unconscionability for modification of child support. In re Ehlert, 868 P.2d 1168 (Colo. App. 1994).

Even if there was no change, as such, in the circumstances, the trial court could modify a support order where it resulted solely from an agreement between the parties, and was not an order entered after contested hearing before the court, because the parties could not tie the hands of a court as concerns the issue of support for minor children. Wright v. Wright, 31 Colo. App. 381, 504 P.2d 1119 (1972), rev'd on other grounds, 514 P.2d 73 (1973).

Application of new child support guidelines resulting in more than a 10 percent change in support due creates a rebuttable presumption that existing support award must be modified. In re Pugliese, 761 P.2d 277 (Colo. App. 1988); In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997).

Language in subsection (1)(b) requiring courts to evaluate motions to modify child support in view of "the circumstances of the parties at the time of the filing of a motion for modification" does not limit a court to consider only the actual, not potential, income of the parties. Such an interpretation is undermined by the preceding text in subsection (1)(b) requiring the application of the child support guidelines to the parties circumstances at the time the motion was filed, which guidelines include the requirement that child support be calculated based upon a determination of potential income where a parent is voluntarily unemployed or underemployed. People ex rel. J.R.T., 55 P.3d 217 (Colo. App. 2002), aff'd on other grounds sub nom. People v. Martinez, 70 P.3d 474 (Colo. 2003).

Presumption regarding 10% change set forth in subsection (1)(b) is rebuttable, not conclusive. Where change in presumed support under guideline based on gross income is less than 10%, the parent seeking modification may nonetheless establish a substantial and continuing change in circumstances, justifying a deviation from the guideline, due to an increase in the parent's personal medical expenses. In re Ford, 851 P.2d 295 (Colo. App. 1993).

If the party requesting modification demonstrates that an increase in the obligor's income would result in at least a 10% change in the amount of child support, the child's needs are presumed. In re McCord, 910 P.2d 85 (Colo. App. 1995).

A rebuttable presumption exists that a modification of child support must be granted whenever application of the child support guidelines would result in more than a 10% change in the amount due. In re Lishnevsky, 981 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1999).

Increase in parties' income constitutes a substantial change of circumstances sufficient to justify increased child support. In re Anderson, 761 P.2d 293 (Colo. App. 1988).

Unmarried cohabitation does not constitute "remarriage" for the purposes of a suspension, reduction, or termination of spousal maintenance. In re Dwyer, 825 P.2d 1018 (Colo. App. 1991).

Original support decree anticipated continual support for children while attending school past age 21, and, therefore, the court was without authority to change decree under auspices of changed circumstances. In re Channell, 797 P.2d 819 (Colo. App. 1990).

Court did not make findings required by § 14-10-115 (14.5) to modify the allocation of federal income tax exemptions between the parties. Order allocating exemptions to the parties in alternating years, therefore, was reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court. In re Trout, 897 P.2d 838 (Colo. App. 1994).

The court is without authority to create a presumption of changed circumstances that alone would require modification of a support order. The court's order in effect creates such a presumption only as to the husband's income. While the court may order both parties to exchange relevant financial information, it may not order an automatic increase in child support based solely upon a cost of living raise that the husband might receive. In re Trout, 897 P.2d 838 (Colo. App. 1994).

Obligor spouse's reduced income as a result of a job change in anticipation of or in connection with early retirement may be considered by court in reducing maintenance, and the obligor shall not be considered voluntarily underemployed if (1) the obligor's decision was made in good faith and not with the motivation to decrease or eliminate maintenance, and (2) the decision was objectively reasonable based on factors such as the obligor's age, health, and the practice of the industry in which the obligor was employed. A similar analysis would apply to an obligee spouse who took an early retirement and sought to increase maintenance on that basis. In re Swing, 194 P.3d 498 (Colo. App. 2008).

Although court must consider the interests of both parties in determining whether the maintenance established in the original order has become unfair as a result of a change in circumstances, nothing precludes an obligor from making a decision that serves the obligor's own interests, nor does the section require that modification be denied solely because an obligor's decision disadvantages the obligee by reducing the ability to pay maintenance. In re Swing, 194 P.3d 498 (Colo. App. 2008).

Court should compare child support order currently in effect with child support guidelines to determine whether a substantial and continuing change of circumstances exists. Although the parties' current child support order was the result of the parties' agreement to a reduced amount of child support, the court should have compared the current child support order with the presumed child support obligation under the guidelines at the time of mother's motion to determine if mother had shown a substantial and continuing change of circumstances sufficient to maintain her motion for modification. In re M.G.C.-G., 228 P.3d 271 (Colo. App. 2010).

Evidence sufficient to constitute "changed circumstances". Where neither party had ever followed original support order and instead had made their own agreement and operated under it for several years, it was appropriate for the trial court to modify the child support provision specified in the original decree. In re Menu, 719 P.2d 742 (Colo. App. 1986).

For evidence insufficient to constitute "changed circumstances", see In re Corbin, 42 Colo. App. 200, 591 P.2d 1046 (1979); In re Soderquist, 44 Colo. App. 131, 608 P.2d 851 (1980); McVay v. Johnson, 727 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1986).

D. Discretion of Court.

Modification of decree allowing alimony is clearly discretionary and discretion depends upon the facts. Weydeveld v. Weydeveld, 100 Colo. 301, 67 P.2d 72 (1937); Huber v. Huber, 143 Colo. 255, 353 P.2d 379 (1960); Garrow v. Garrow, 152 Colo. 480, 382 P.2d 809 (1963).

In exercising jurisdiction to change or modify an alimony decree courts should proceed with caution, and unless the evidence clearly shows that the original decree is no longer fair and just, it should not be changed. Harris v. Harris, 113 Colo. 41, 154 P.2d 617 (1944); Beddoes v. Beddoes, 155 Colo. 115, 393 P.2d 1 (1964).

A trial court does not have the power to retroactively modify child support arrearages which accrue prior to the filing of a motion to modify. In re Greenblatt, 789 P.2d 489 (Colo. App. 1990).

Although a trial court has broad discretion in determining the amount and duration of a maintenance award, a trial court's order will not be upheld if it produces an unfair or inequitable result. Sinn v. Sinn, 696 P.2d 333 (Colo. 1985).

No authority of court to modify permanent orders without findings supported by evidence justifying modification. In re Mattson, 694 P.2d 1285 (Colo. App. 1984).

Payment of alimony in full to date of application for reduction was not a condition precedent to the court's power to reduce. Weydeveld v. Weydeveld, 100 Colo. 301, 67 P.2d 72 (1937).

Where an action was on the motion of a defendant for modification of support and visitation orders, the trial court was under no duty to make written findings of fact and conclusions of law. Garrow v. Garrow, 152 Colo. 480, 382 P.2d 809 (1963).

Child support provisions of separation agreement are not binding on court. In re

Corbin, 42 Colo. App. 200, 591 P.2d 1046 (1979).

Maintenance and attorney fee provisions considered together to determine court's abuse of discretion. In cases where an appeal has been taken from the property division, maintenance and attorney's fee provisions of a dissolution of marriage decree as a whole, they must be considered together to determine whether the trial court abused its discretion. In re Jones, 627 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1981).

Where the husband's annual salary had not decreased since the entry of the decree, his voluntary assumption of obligations incident to his second marriage did not constitute such a change in circumstances as to require a modification of the original order, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying his motion to modify. Watson v. Watson, 29 Colo. App. 449, 485 P.2d 919 (1971).

Where financial status changed between date motion filed and date of hearing. While the trial court is authorized to consider the needs of the parties as they appear on the date the motion is filed, where the financial status of a party had changed materially between the date the motion was filed and the date of the hearing, the court must take into consideration the circumstances present on each date in determining what relief should be granted. In re Edwards, 39 Colo. App. 26, 560 P.2d 849 (1977).

Trial judge lacked authority to order husband's assets transferred and sold where husband sought modification of decree due to changed circumstances and former wife made no challenge to property disposition and did not establish conditions justifying such relief. Mackey v. Hall, 694 P.2d 1275 (Colo. 1985).

Where only 12 days elapsed between the denial of a motion for modification of a final decree fixing support payments and the filing of a new motion, no change of circumstances being shown since the denial of the former motion, it was error for trial court to modify the decree on a showing that the husband had remarried and assumed additional obligations as a result thereof. Haase v. Haase, 151 Colo. 168, 376 P.2d 698 (1962).

Burden of proof for request for modification was not circumvented by court by requiring automatic reinstatement of original spousal maintenance award at end of period of reduction. In re Ward, 740 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court has discretion to determine on a case by case basis whether the best interests of the child require it to raise guideline factors on its own motion in a proceeding for modification of child support. In re Aldrich, 945 P.2d 1370 (Colo. 1997).

Court did not abuse discretion by refusing to modify maintenance amount so that it would stay at higher level which was intended to be temporary while the wife completed her education and obtained employment even though wife had not obtained suitable employment. In re Wolford, 789 P.2d 459 (Colo. App. 1989).

Court did not abuse discretion in requiring husband to reimburse wife for deficiencies created by temporarily reduced spousal maintenance payments. In re Ward, 740 P.2d 18 (Colo. 1987).

Trial court erred in modifying judgment on its own motion to allow payment of attorney fees and home sale proceeds in installments without evidence, argument, or finding of "existence of conditions that justify reopening of a judgment." In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court erred in denying mother's motion to set aside ex parte judgment in favor of father for medical and college expenses and attorney fees since subsection (1)(c) applies to child support payments, which mature under a decree without modification and become a judgment debt similar to any other judgment for money, but not to medical and college expenses, which are subject to additional elements of proof. In re Jacobs, 859 P.2d 914 (Colo. App. 1993).

Although subsection (1)(c) restricts a trial court's discretion to modify retroactively an accrued child support obligation, the restriction does not extend to the authority to set aside such a judgment on an appropriate basis. Remand to the district court is appropriate where the mother's motion to set aside the judgment contested her liability for further payments of child support, including the medical and college expenses, because of the emancipation of the children. In re Jacobs, 859 P.2d 914 (Colo. App. 1993).

The provisions of any decree respecting child support may be modified only as to installments accruing after the filing for modification. Thus, the trial court's ability to modify retroactively an accrued child support obligation is severely restricted. In re Wright, 924 P.2d 1207 (Colo. App. 1996).

E. Jurisdiction of Court.

The former section, under which jurisdiction was retained by the court to make revisions of its orders in divorce proceedings, did not provide for a retrial procedure, such was not its purpose, as an application for modification of a divorce decree in pursuance of the statute was neither a rehearing of the original case nor a review of the equities. Peercy v. Peercy, 154 Colo. 575, 392 P.2d 609 (1964).

Such rule applied to the incidental fact of paternity in a divorce proceeding. Peercy v. Peercy, 154 Colo. 575, 392 P.2d 609 (1964).

The trial court's jurisdiction in divorce actions, for the purpose of later revisions of its orders, including division of property, "because of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment", was controlled by statute rather than by C.R.C.P. 60(b). Ingels v. Ingels, 29 Colo. App. 585, 487 P.2d 812 (1971).

A court had jurisdiction to modify a decree as to permanent alimony at a term subsequent to that at which the decree was entered and before the completion of the payments therein provided, without regard to the section of the code of civil procedure dealing with relief from judgments. Stevens v. Stevens, 31 Colo. 188, 72 P. 1061 (1903); Huff v. Huff, 77 Colo. 15, 234 P. 167 (1925).

It was held a court rendering a decree of divorce retained jurisdiction to modify provisions thereof relating to alimony, division of property or a money judgment. Diegel v. Diegel, 73 Colo. 330, 215 P. 143 (1923); Rodgers v. Rodgers, 102 Colo. 94, 76 P.2d 1104 (1938); Mockelmann v. Mockelmann, 121 P.3d 337 (Colo. App. 2005).

The court has continuing jurisdiction for the purpose of such later revisions of its order pertaining to child support as changing circumstances may require. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

The holding that the trial court retained jurisdiction to hear an application for modification of the judgment for permanent alimony, where an agreement was incorporated in the decree, was overruled. Lay v. Lay, 162 Colo. 43, 425 P.2d 704 (1967).

Where there had been a change in circumstances before approving an application for a reduction, in matters of that kind the trial court had jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact that prior to the modification order a writ of error had been issued by this court. Michaelson v. Michaelson, 167 Colo. 58, 445 P.2d 211 (1968).

Continuing jurisdiction as to child support. After jurisdiction of the parties in a divorce action attaches, the court retains jurisdiction over matters concerning the support of the minor children, and may, without notice to husband, enter judgment for arrearages in child support payments. Sauls v. Sauls, 40 Colo. App. 275, 577 P.2d 771 (1977); In re Warner, 719 P.2d 363 (Colo. App. 1986).

Formerly, terms of agreement not subject to modification absent court's reservation of such powers. Where a separation agreement was adopted and incorporated into the decree of divorce, and the agreement did not reserve to the court jurisdiction to modify the terms of the alimony provision, nor did the court in its order adopting and incorporating the agreement into the divorce decree specifically reserve the right to modify the terms thereof, the court cannot later modify such an agreement. Burleson v. District Court, 196 Colo. 445, 586 P.2d 665 (1978).

Specific agreement that court would retain jurisdiction controls. Where the parties specifically agreed that the trial court would retain jurisdiction to reopen the proceedings if any undisclosed assets were subsequently discovered, that agreement is binding, notwithstanding the provisions of C.R.C.P. 60(b) and this section. In re Hiner, 669 P.2d 135 (Colo. App. 1983), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 710 P.2d 488 (Colo. 1985).

Court has the power to reserve the right to modify its judgment based upon the occurrence of an expressly anticipated change of circumstances and is not required to find that the statutory threshold as contained in this section has been met. In re Mirise, 673 P.2d 803 (Colo. App. 1983).

The court retains jurisdiction to modify an award of limited maintenance even after the term for maintenance has passed where an actual need for continued support may not have been evident during the term of limited maintenance and the parties have provided for further court orders. Aldinger v. Aldinger, 813 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1991).

The court should not be deprived of the authority to modify an award of support based solely on the desire of promoting the goals of finality and permanency of a dissolution decree, even though the term for limited maintenance has expired. Aldinger v. Aldinger, 813 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1991).

The court has jurisdiction to consider a motion to modify maintenance which is filed after the original maintenance obligation has ended where maintenance was awarded as part of a decree of dissolution and the parties have not by agreement expressly precluded the court's jurisdiction. Aldinger v. Aldinger, 813 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1991).

A trial court may expressly reserve jurisdiction to review, adjust, or extend a maintenance award if: (1) An important contingency exists, the outcome of which may significantly affect the amount or duration of the maintenance award; (2) the contingency is based upon an ascertainable, future event or events; (3) the contingency can be resolved within a reasonable and specific period time. In re Cauffman, 829 P.2d 501 (Colo. App. 1992).

If a trial court intends to reserve jurisdiction over maintenance pursuant to this section it should: (1) State its intent to do so on the record; (2) briefly outline its reasons for doing so, stating what the ascertainable future event upon which the reservation of maintenance jurisdiction is based; and (3) set forth a reasonably specific future time within which maintenance may be reconsidered under this section. In re Cauffman, 829 P.2d 501 (Colo. App. 1992).

Only where the parties have expressly agreed to preclude modification under § 14-10-112 (6), should maintenance be incapable of modification. Sinn v. Sinn, 696 P.2d 333 (Colo. 1985); In re Lee, 781 P.2d 102 (Colo. App. 1989); Aldinger v. Aldinger, 813 P.2d 836 (Colo. App. 1991).

By accepting the parties' separation agreement, incorporating it into the decree of dissolution, and granting the decree of dissolution that specified that the court retained jurisdiction "as provided by law", the court retained jurisdiction even though the contractual maintenance agreement specified that at the end of a three-year period, maintenance would be waived forever. In re Burke, 39 P.3d 1226 (Colo. App. 2001).

Any effort to limit or preclude the authority of a district court to modify the maintenance provision of a separation agreement must be articulated in language that is specific and unequivocal; if the parties are silent or if the parties reserve such power to the court, a district court may modify the maintenance provisions of a separation agreement incorporated into a decree. In re Burke, 39 P.3d 1226 (Colo. App. 2001).

District court did not have the power to void a separation agreement that was incorporated in an Illinois judgment. Upon remand, if the conditions for modification of child support are shown, the district court may modify the Illinois decree but it must recognize the Illinois judgment as the standard against which a change sought under this section must be measured. Rae v. Rubin, 719 P.2d 743 (Colo. App. 1986).

This section authorizes the modification of those awards traditionally labeled as maintenance in gross, even though the decree does not expressly reserve the power to modify the order. Sinn v. Sinn, 696 P.2d 333 (Colo. 1985).

The characterization of periodic payments as maintenance or property division should be based on the purpose of the payments as determined by the totality of the circumstances. Sinn v. Sinn, 696 P.2d 333 (Colo. 1985).

No authority to award "equitable reimbursement" of past expenses. The court does not have the authority in a dissolution of marriage action to award to the wife an "equitable reimbursement" of expenses incurred and paid by wife for the past support of the children. In re Serfoss, 642 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1981).

Separation agreement provision that was incorporated into the dissolution of marriage decree requiring husband to pay part of his future social security benefits to wife is void. State courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to divide parties' social security benefits in a property distribution. In re Anderson, 252 P.3d 490 (Colo. App. 2010).

It was formerly well-established in this state that a property settlement agreement which was approved and incorporated in a divorce decree could not subsequently be modified, in the absence of fraud or overreaching.

Lay v. Lay, 162 Colo. 43, 425 P.2d 704 (1967); In re Corley, 38 Colo. App. 319, 558 P.2d 450 (1976).

Where the agreement of the parties specifically stated that no modification of any term in the agreement would be valid unless in writing and signed by both parties and there was no reservation to the court of the power to modify the maintenance provisions, nor did the court, as a condition of approval of the agreement, reserve the power to modify, the maintenance aspect of the property settlement provision in the decree could only be modified upon proof of fraud or overreaching, or by the subsequent agreement of the parties. In re Corley, 38 Colo. App. 319, 558 P.2d 450 (1976).

A provision in an agreement which obligated the husband to make fixed monthly payments to the wife, where the agreement was approved by the court and incorporated in the decree of divorce, was not subject to subsequent modification. Lay v. Lay, 162 Colo. 43, 425 P.2d 704 (1967).

The parties could, in an agreement, reserve to the court the power to modify the "alimony" provision, and the court, as a condition to approval of the agreement, could reserve such power to itself, and it could also be modified by the subsequent agreement of the parties. Lay v. Lay, 162 Colo. 43, 425 P.2d 704 (1967).

The law is well settled in Colorado that a decree determining property rights in a divorce matter is final and cannot be subsequently modified by reason of changed circumstances. McDonald v. McDonald, 150 Colo. 492, 374 P.2d 690 (1962).

Formerly, where parties to a divorce action enter into an agreement settling their property rights, which agreement was incorporated in the final decree, the court was thereafter without jurisdiction, no fraud in procuring the settlement appearing, to modify the terms of the decree concerning such property rights in the absence of consent of the parties. Hall v. Hall, 105 Colo. 227, 97 P.2d 415 (1939).

Although a former section gave the courts jurisdiction to enforce separate maintenance agreements, it was not to be construed to mean that parties to such agreements could not modify them by mutual consent. Gavette v. Gavette, 104 Colo. 71, 88 P.2d 964 (1939).

Trial court's modification of property division, to pay home sale proceeds and attorney fees in installments, limited wife's collection remedies and was therefore in excess of its jurisdiction. In re Greenblatt, 789 P.2d 489 (Colo. App. 1990); In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992).

Where child was disabled and unable to support herself, an agreement between the parties that child support would terminate when the child reached 21 did not divest the court of jurisdiction to order continuing child support. In re Salas, 868 P.2d 1180 (Colo. App. 1994).

F. Effective Date of Modification.

Formerly a modifying order or decree relates only to future support payments and can be effective only from the time of its entry. Lopez v. Lopez, 148 Colo. 404, 366 P.2d 373 (1961); Drazich v. Drazich, 153 Colo. 218, 385 P.2d 259 (1963).

The general rule that an order reducing the amount of support money operates only in futuro was not always applicable. Griffith v. Griffith, 152 Colo. 292, 381 P.2d 455 (1963).

Docketing delays do not excuse or reduce a child support obligation. Without specific findings of hardship or injustice under subsection (1)(d), modification must be made retroactive. However, amounts awarded retroactively are not arrearages requiring payment of interest under § 14-14-106. In re Armit, 878 P.2d 101 (Colo. App. 1994).

Generally the modification of support orders must be based on the needs of the parties at the time of the hearing thereon, rather than on what such conditions may have been in the past or may be in the future. Huber v. Huber, 143 Colo. 255, 353 P.2d 379 (1960).

Court may now modify support payments back to date of filing of motion, rather than only from the date of the hearing on the motion as was the case under the earlier statute. In re Walsh, 44 Colo. App. 502, 614 P.2d 913 (1980).

But the trial court has discretion in determining whether to back date a reduction order to the time motion was filed, and trial court's determination will stand absent an abuse of discretion. In re DaFoe, 677 P.2d 426 (Colo. App. 1983).

Under subsection (5), modification of support must date from the change in physical custody. Mother was not liable for child support arrearages based on a stipulation between the parties under which she agreed to pay child support, because she regained physical custody of the child and the child continued to live with her for the entire period for which support was claimed. In re Foley, 879 P.2d 452 (Colo. App. 1994).

Provisions of subsection (1) and subsection (5) relating to retroactivity of modification date are irreconcilable. The subsection enacted latest, which states that modification should be effective as of the date of the filing of the motion for modification of child support, read together with the consistent provisions of the statutory section, prevails. The conflicting subsection relating to retroactive modification back to the date of change of physical custody is repealed by implication. In re Pickering, 967 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1997) (decided prior to 1998 amendments to subsection (1) and (5)).

Subsection (5) provides that when children change their primary residence, the provisions for obligor's child support under the existing child support order will be modified as of the date when the physical care was changed. It does not provide that either parent's obligation terminates for a time; instead, the existing order is to be modified as of the date the children switch residences. In re Emerson, 77 P.3d 923 (Colo. App. 2003).

Nor does the inability to calculate the amount due change the fact that mother became the obligor as of the date of the change in residence. In re Emerson, 77 P.3d 923 (Colo. App. 2003).

Subsection (5) relates only to provisions for child support for the obligor under the existing order. Where parents agreed that child could live with father who is the obligor under the existing child support order, child support may be ordered for mother effective the date of filing of a motion, not retroactive to the date when physical care was changed. In re White, 240 P.3d 534 (Colo. App. 2010) (holding contrary to In re Emerson, annotated above).

Mother does not become "obligor" under existing child support order by virtue of a mutually agreed upon change in physical care. The statute encourages parties in such cases to modify or update the child support order. Mother's obligation commences at the time of filing of the motion. In re White, 240 P.3d 534 (Colo. App. 2010) (holding contrary to In re Emerson, annotated above).

Subsection (5) provides a limited exception to the general rule that child support may only be modified retroactive to the date of filing of a motion and was designed to protect the obligor in an existing order who has accepted the physical care of the child. In re White, 240 P.3d 534 (Colo. App. 2010) (holding contrary to In re Emerson, annotated above).

G. Scope of Review.

Application of the provisions of this section by the court for the modification of a prior child support order entered under the Uniform Parentage Act was error as a matter of law. Ashcraft v. Allis, 747 P.2d 1274 (Colo. App. 1987).

One who has accepted benefits of judgment may not seek reversal of that judgment on appeal. In re Jones, 627 P.2d 248 (Colo. 1981).

Unless it clearly appeared that the trial court, in resolving the problems arising under the evidence appearing in the record, acted unreasonably or arbitrarily in making the orders and awards of which complaint is made, it was not proper for the supreme court to modify or set them aside. Rodgers v. Rodgers, 102 Colo. 94, 76 P.2d 1104 (1938); Cohan v. Cohan, 150 Colo. 249, 372 P.2d 149 (1962).

There was no difficulty in laying down the rule that governed, but there was difficulty in applying it, because what was, and what was not, reasonable and where a reasonable discretion ended and arbitrary action began was not susceptible of mathematical demonstration, and the application of the rule necessarily introduced the factor of individual judgment, which, as between different persons in the same case, was a variable quantity. Cohan v. Cohan, 150 Colo. 249, 372 P.2d 149 (1962).

A decree of divorce which had been modified by the supreme court on the determination of an appeal in respect to the amount and payment of alimony could have been further modified on petition for rehearing as to provide for the acceptance of the husband's tender of a deed of real estate in lieu of all pecuniary allowances of alimony. Luthe v. Luthe, 12 Colo. 421, 21 P. 467 (1889).

Where a mother through her attorney in open court, disclaimed any interest in upholding a judgment for cumulated support payments and recommended that the judgment be set aside and lesser sum substituted in justice to both parties, she could not change her position in the supreme court because dissatisfied with amount of reduction by the trial court. Griffith v. Griffith, 152 Colo. 292, 381 P.2d 455 (1963).

Referee's findings concerning whether a sufficient change of circumstances has occurred to justify modification of child support order is binding upon the court, unless such findings are without evidentiary support. McVay v. Johnson, 727 P.2d 416 (Colo. App. 1986).

Judgment which took into consideration the proceeds of moneys embezzled by the husband set aside. In re Allen, 724 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1986).

III. TERMINATION OF MAINTENANCE AND CHILD SUPPORT.

Annotator's note. Since §§ 14-10-122 (2) and 14-10-122 (3) are similar to repealed § 46-1-5 (5), C.R.S. 1963, and § 46-1-5, CRS 53, and because repealed § 46-2-5, C.R.S. 1963, and § 46-2-5, CRS 53 have some relevance, relevant cases decided under those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

Section inapplicable where agreement provides that only wife's death would absolve husband's liability. Although the language of a separation agreement does not explicitly provide for the continuation or termination of maintenance in the event of remarriage where it indicates that it was the contemplation of the parties that only the wife's death would absolve the husband of liability for payment of maintenance, the provisions of this section do not apply. In re Hahn, 628 P.2d 175 (Colo. App. 1981).

The presence of a general nonmodification clause in the separation agreement is sufficient to overcome the statutory presumption that maintenance terminates upon the recipient's remarriage. While express language concerning termination is preferable, the absence of that language is not fatal if the intent is evident from the agreement or decree as a whole. In re Parsons, 30 P.3d 868 (Colo. App. 2001).

The public policy which provides an obligation for one spouse to support the other spouse when there is a need and an ability to pay applies equally to reinstate a support obligation following annulment of a subsequent marriage where the equities dictate. In re Cargill and Rollins, 843 P.2d 1335 (Colo. 1993).

Ordinarily alimony ceased upon the death of the husband, or the wife. Elmer v. Elmer, 132 Colo. 57, 285 P.2d 601 (1955); Doll v. Doll, 140 Colo. 546, 345 P.2d 723 (1959); Menor v. Menor, 154 Colo. 475, 391 P.2d 473 (1964); In re Piper, 820 P.2d 1198 (Colo. App. 1991).

Child support obligation of noncustodial parent continues after death of custodial parent. When a noncustodial parent's child support obligation is incorporated into a dissolution decree, and the custodial parent dies and the child is not in the physical custody of the noncustodial parent, the child support obligation of the noncustodial parent continues beyond the death of the custodial parent in accordance with the terms of the dissolution decree. Abrams v. Connelly, 781 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1989).

Legal obligation expanded. In effect, by this section the general assembly has expanded the legal obligation of the parent of a minor child entitled to receive support pursuant to a dissolution of marriage decree. In re Icke, 189 Colo. 319, 540 P.2d 1076 (1975).

Parent was not divested of child support obligation based on payments that accrued prior to a final adoption decree. In addition, father was denied equitable relief from child support obligation where record did not reflect evidence of representations upon which the father relied or that an evidentiary hearing was requested. In re Murray, 790 P.2d 868 (Colo. App. 1989).

Unless otherwise provided, the obligation to support minor children survives the death of the parent. In re Icke, 189 Colo. 319, 540 P.2d 1076 (1975).

There was no authority under which a husband could be compelled to carry insurance on his life to the end that a divorced wife could from that source continue to receive alimony after the death of the husband, as this obligation to pay alimony ends with death. Ferguson v. Olmsted, 168 Colo. 374, 451 P.2d 746 (1969).

Carrying life insurance as means of continuing alimony permitted. Subsection (2) changes the rule under prior law that an order requiring a husband to carry life insurance as a means of continuing alimony after his death was not permitted. In re Koktavy, 44 Colo. App. 305, 612 P.2d 1161 (1980).

Court may order spouse to obtain life insurance to secure future maintenance payments even though the obligation to pay maintenance terminated upon the death of the spouse. In re Graff, 902 P.2d 402 (Colo. App. 1994).

Under subsection (5) of former § 46-1-5, C.R.S. 1963, where there is no written agreement or stipulation to the contrary, the right to alimony automatically terminated by operation of law upon remarriage of the wife without the necessity of the husband's affirmative action for termination by court order. Spratlen v. Spratlen, 30 Colo. App. 91, 491 P.2d 608 (1971).

Where an agreement to pay alimony was indefinite in time, and merely provided that the reduction of husband's obligations at his father's death would be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of periodic alimony payments due thereafter, since there was no written agreement to the contrary, the trial court should have ruled that the husband's obligation to pay alimony ceased at the wife's remarriage. Spratlen v. Spratlen, 30 Colo. App. 91, 491 P.2d 608 (1971).

The term "remarriage" as used in this section means the status of remarriage, including both common law and ceremonial marriage. In re Cargill and Rollins, 843 P.2d 1335 (Colo. 1993).

Remarriage does not terminate property right adjustment. Court order constituting an adjustment of property rights between a former husband and wife did not terminate upon remarriage of wife. Greer v. Greer, 32 Colo. App. 196, 510 P.2d 905 (1973).

An annulment of a marriage does not automatically reinstate a maintenance obligation from a previous marriage as a matter of law, but the obligation may be reinstated depending on the facts and equities of the situation. In re Cargill and Rollins, 843 P.2d 1335 (Colo. 1993).

Remarriage may warrant reduction in "child support" payments to eliminate that portion of the payment actually intended as maintenance. Gebhardt v. Gebhardt, 198 Colo. 28, 595 P.2d 1048 (1979).

Duty to support dependent adult child. Where an adult child, subject to proof of her alleged incapacity, is still dependent on her parents, then the child is not emancipated under this article and the duty of support continues. In re Koltay, 646 P.2d 405 (Colo. App. 1982), aff'd, 667 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1983).

Provision for post-emancipation support may be made by written agreement of the parties or, in proper circumstances, may be included in a decree entered before the child's 21st birthday and guided by consideration of the factors listed in § 14-10-115. In re Huff, 834 P.2d 244 (Colo. 1992).

What constitutes emancipation is a question of law. In re Robinson, 629 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1981); Baker v. Baker, 667 P.2d 767 (Colo. App. 1983).

Establishment of emancipation. When, by express or implied agreement between a child and a parent, a child who is capable of providing for his own care and support undertakes to leave his parent's home, earn his own living and do as he wishes with his earnings, emancipation occurs. In re Robinson, 629 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1981).

Whether emancipation has been established must be determined in light of all the relevant facts and circumstances of the case. In re Robinson, 629 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1981).

Emancipation ordinarily occurs upon the attainment of majority. Koltay v. Koltay, 667 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1983).

Burden of proving emancipation is on the one asserting it. In re Robinson, 629 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1981).

Minor unemancipated child's earnings from summer employment do not affect the noncustodial parent's obligation to provide support. In re Anderson, 638 P.2d 826 (Colo. App. 1981).

Emancipation does not occur where child incapable of self-support. If a child is physically or mentally incapable of self-support when he attains the age of majority, "emancipation" does not occur, and the duty of parental support continues for the duration of the child's disability. Koltay v. Koltay, 667 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1983).

Emancipation automatic upon child's marriage. Emancipation occurs automatically upon the valid marriage of child, and the validity of a marriage is tested under the laws of the jurisdiction where the marriage took place. In re Fetters, 41 Colo. App. 281, 584 P.2d 104 (1978).

Child, once emancipated by marriage, could become unemancipated by the subsequent annulment of that marriage. In re Fetters, 41 Colo. App. 281, 584 P.2d 104 (1978).

For evidence insufficient to establish temporary emancipation during summer vacation, see In re Robinson, 629 P.2d 1069 (Colo. 1981).

Support payments for a child who is emancipated by marriage do not automatically terminate unless there is a specific amount separately stated for the support of the particular child emancipated. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 32 Colo. App. 145, 507 P.2d 1110 (1973).

Change in the age of emancipation and duty of support in § 14-10-115 did not automatically modify a parent's existing obligation of support and plain language of subsection (4) makes clear that the changes in the age of emancipation will affect a support obligation only if a motion to modify is filed and only with respect to those support payments coming due after such filing. In re Dion, 970 P.2d 968 (Colo. App. 1997).

This section plainly establishes substantial and continuing changed circumstances as the prerequisite to modification of all postsecondary education support orders. While the parties can agree to postsecondary education support, the terms of their agreement do not bind the court, and the parties cannot preclude or limit subsequent court modification of terms concerning child support. In re Ludwig, 122 P.3d 1056 (Colo. App. 2005).

A defendant who sought reduction in support payments had burden of proving that the payments should be reduced by any particular amount. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 32 Colo. App. 145, 507 P.2d 1110 (1973).

Formerly, the necessity for a separate maintenance could have terminated at any time by reconciliation of the parties, or by the death of one of them. Vines v. Vines, 137 Colo. 449, 326 P.2d 662 (1958).

The general rule was that reconciliation did not automatically terminate property settlement agreements, and the courts in such cases looked to the intent of the parties to determine if reconciliation was meant to revoke the property settlement agreement, and the question of whether or not reconciliation affects a property settlement agreement was a question of fact to be determined by the evidence. Larson v. Goodman, 28 Colo. App. 418, 475 P.2d 712 (1970).

It is error as a matter of law to fail to weigh the evidence giving due consideration and thought to all of the statutory factors of § 14-10-115 (1) where the noncustodial parent has ample resources with which to contribute to his children's education, and their ability to acquire and their need for an education are established by the evidence. In re Pring, 742 P.2d 343 (Colo. App. 1987).

Hence, the trial court erred in requiring these children to exhaust their own assets for educational purposes before requiring either parent to contribute to their education. In re Pring, 742 P.2d 343 (Colo. App. 1987).

Absent a finding that a motion for custody evaluation was made for purpose of delay, the court must order an evaluation upon request of one of the parties. Kuyatt v. District Court, 817 P.2d 116 (Colo. 1991).

Where the agreement fails to expressly provide for the termination of child support or educational costs, the court must interpret and enforce the implied obligation to render it lawful. In re Meisner, 807 P.2d 1205 (Colo. App. 1990); In re Wisdom, 833 P.2d 884 (Colo. App. 1992).

When court interprets an implied obligation, it must consider all of the provisions of the agreement as well as the circumstances at the time it was made, consonant with its dominant purpose. In re Wisdom, 833 P.2d 884 (Colo. App. 1992).

14-10-123. Commencement of proceedings concerning allocation of parental responsibilities - jurisdiction - automatic temporary injunction - enforcement. (1) A proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities is commenced in the district court or as otherwise provided by law:

(a) By a parent:
 (I) By filing a petition for dissolution or legal separation; or
 (II) By filing a petition seeking the allocation of parental responsibilities with respect to a child in the county where the child is permanently resident or where the child is found; or

(b) By a person other than a parent, by filing a petition seeking the allocation of parental responsibilities for the child in the county where the child is permanently resident or where the child is found, but only if the child is not in the physical care of one of the child's parents;

(c) By a person other than a parent who has had the physical care of a child for a period of one hundred eighty-two days or more, if such action is commenced within one hundred eighty-two days after the termination of such physical care; or

(d) By a parent or person other than a parent who has been granted custody of a child or who has been allocated parental responsibilities through a juvenile court order entered pursuant to section 19-1-104 (6), C.R.S., by filing a certified copy of the juvenile court order in the county where the child is permanently resident. Such order shall be treated in the district court as any other decree issued in a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities.

(2) Except for a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities commenced pursuant to paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of this section, notice of a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities shall be given to the child's parent, guardian, and custodian or person allocated parental responsibilities, who may appear and be heard and may file a responsive pleading. The court may, upon a showing of good cause, permit the intervention of other interested parties.

(2.5) Upon the filing of a petition pursuant to subsection (1) of this section, each party shall provide to the court, in the manner prescribed by the court, his or her social security number and the social security number of each child named in the petition.

(3) (a) Upon the filing of a petition concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities pursuant to this section and upon personal service of the petition and summons on a respondent or upon waiver and acceptance of service by a respondent, a temporary injunction shall be in effect against both parties:

(I) Enjoining each party from molesting or disturbing the peace of the other party;
 (II) Restraining each party from removing a minor child who is the subject of the proceeding from the state without the consent of all other parties or an order of the court modifying the injunction; and

(III) Restraining each party, without at least fourteen days' advance notification and the written consent of all other parties or an order of the court modifying the injunction, from cancelling, modifying, terminating, or allowing to lapse for nonpayment of premiums a policy of health insurance or life insurance that provides coverage to a minor child who is the subject of the proceeding or that names the minor child as a beneficiary of a policy.

(b) The provisions of the temporary injunction shall be printed upon the summons and the petition. The temporary injunction shall be in effect upon personal service of the petition and summons on a respondent or upon waiver and acceptance of service by a respondent and shall remain in effect against each party until the court enters the final decree, dismisses the petition, or enters a further order modifying the injunction. A party may apply to the court for further temporary orders pursuant to section 14-10-125, an expanded temporary injunction, or modification or revocation of the temporary injunction.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b) of this subsection (3), the temporary injunction described in this subsection (3) shall not apply to a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities commenced pursuant to paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of this section or to a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities commenced by a parent that is governed by the automatic temporary injunction pursuant to section 14-10-107 (4) (b).

(d) For purposes of enforcing the automatic temporary injunction that becomes effective in accordance with this subsection (3), if the respondent shows a duly authorized peace officer, as described in section 16-2.5-101, C.R.S., a copy of the petition and summons filed and issued pursuant to this section, or if the petitioner shows the peace officer a copy of the petition and summons filed and issued pursuant to this section together with a certified copy of the affidavit of service of process or a certified copy of the waiver and acceptance of service, and the peace officer has cause to believe that a violation of the part of the automatic temporary injunction that enjoins a party from molesting or disturbing the peace of the other party has occurred, the peace officer shall use every reasonable means to enforce that part of the injunction against the petitioner or respondent, as applicable. A peace officer shall not be held civilly or criminally liable for his or her actions pursuant to this subsection (3) if the peace officer acts in good faith and without malice.

No jurisdiction. Colorado court lacks jurisdiction to hear a petition for custody filed by a parent when a child is not a permanent resident nor located in the state when the petition is filed. In re Barnes, 907 P.2d 679 (Colo. App. 1995).

This section permits the intervention of interested parties; it does not mandate that they be made parties. In re Trough, 631 P.2d 1183 (Colo. App. 1981).

Court retains jurisdiction over child custody issues until the child reaches the age of emancipation. In re Hartley, 886 P.2d 665 (Colo. 1994).

Petition need not be incidental to dissolution of marriage. Petitions for legal custody do not have to be incidental to a dissolution of marriage proceeding for the district court to have jurisdiction. In re Davis, 656 P.2d 42 (Colo. App. 1982); In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Applications for parental responsibilities by a nonparent implicate the fundamental constitutional right to family autonomy and privacy, and a legislative enactment that infringes on a fundamental right is constitu- tionally permissible only if it is necessary to promote a compelling state interest and does so in the least restrictive manner possible. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Subsection (1)(c) limits jurisdiction to the class of nonparents who may seek parental responsibilities to only those individuals who have had a recent or continuing role as a caretaker and thereby protects against undue interference with the parent-child relationship. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Subsection (1)(c) is the legislature's recognition of psychological parenting, and a determination of "physical care" includes the amount of time a child has spent in the actual, physical possession of a nonparent and the psychological bonds nonparents develop with children who have been in their physical possession and control for a significant period of time and does not require that this be exclusive physical care; but the jurisdictional requirements of this paragraph (c), which creates standing for non-parents, must be applied narrowly. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Nothing in subsection (1)(c) requires that a legal relationship exist between the nonparent and the child, but only that the nonparent had physical care of the child for at least six months. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

To establish standing, however, the nonparent must show that the natural parent or parents voluntarily relinquished custody of the child. The nonparent bears the burden of proving that the natural parent voluntarily permitted the nonparent to share in or assume the parent's responsibility to provide physical care to the child. In re C.R.C., 148 P.3d 458 (Colo. App. 2006).

Under any definition of psychological parent, emotional harm to a young child is intrinsic in the termination or significant curtailment of the child's relationship with the person who is the psychological parent. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Once a petition under this section is certified to be determined as part of a pending dependency and neglect action under the Children's Code, dissolution-of-marriage statutes cease to apply. Instead, provisions of the Children's Code govern, in view of the differing policies behind the respective statutes. People in Interest of D.C., 851 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1993).

This section does not give standing to a person on the basis that he is a presumptive father under the Uniform Parentage Act. In re Ohr, 97 P.3d 354 (Colo. App. 2004).

Nonparents who had physical custody of child beginning immediately after his birth had standing to seek custody under this section where, in adopting subsection (1)(b), the general assembly intended that a literal meaning be applied to the term "physical custody" and did not intend to equate "physical custody" with either "legal custody" or the "parental right to continued physical or legal custody". Thus, in keeping with the overriding policy of promoting the best interests of children, Colorado has adhered to a liberalized view as to the standing of nonparents to commence and participate in custody proceedings. In re Custody of C.C.R.S., 872 P.2d 1337 (Colo. App. 1993), aff'd, 892 P.2d 246 (Colo. 1995).

To establish standing, however, the nonparent must show that the natural parent or parents voluntarily relinquished custody of the child. The nonparent bears the burden of proving that the natural parent voluntarily permitted the nonparent to share in or assume the parent's responsibility to provide physical care to the child. In re C.R.C., 148 P.3d 458 (Colo. App. 2006).

Person fitting criteria in subsection (1) of this section may qualify as an "appropriate party" within the meaning of § 19-4-116. In re Ohr, 97 P.3d 354 (Colo. App. 2004).

To determine whether a nonparent had "physical care" and, thus, standing to seek allocation of parental responsibilities, courts should consider the nature, frequency, and duration of contacts between the child and the parent and between the child and the nonparent, including the amount of time the child has spent in the actual, physical possession of the nonparent and the parent, which physical care need not be uninterrupted or exclusive. In re L.F., 121 P.3d 267 (Colo. App. 2005).

The court should consider the manner in which a child came into the nonparent's physical possession in determining the threshold issue of whether the nonparent has standing under this section, and the nonparent must show that the natural parent voluntarily relinquished custody of the child. The nonparent bears the burden of proving that the natural parent voluntarily permitted the nonparent to share in or assume the parent's responsibility to provide physical care to the child. In re C.R.C., 148 P.3d 458 (Colo. App. 2006).

The existence of a bond between a caregiver and a child, or the lack of a bond between the parents and the child, where the parents continue to exercise their personal rights by directing the caregiver, is irrelevant to the determination of whether the caregiver had "physical care" of the child as required by subsection (1)(c). In re L.F., 121 P.3d 267 (Colo. App. 2005).

Granting standing under subsection (1)(c) to those who care for and nurture a child at the request of and under the ongoing direction and control of the parents could be disruptive of the parent-child relationship and implicate the parents' decision-making rights, regardless of whether the caregiver developed a bond with the child; it could also burden parents who continue to exercise their decision-making rights with the threat that those who provide care at their discretion and under their direction would be able to initiate emotionally and financially costly litigation. In re L.F., 121 P.3d 267 (Colo. App. 2005).

Subsection (1)(b) creates a basis for standing that is independent of subsection (1)(c), and, because it was not disputed that the child was in the care of her grandmother, stepfather met the requirements of subsection (1)(b). Based on the plain language of the statute, stepfather was eligible to bring the action even though child was not in his physical care. In re K.M.B., 80 P.3d 914 (Colo. App. 2003).

Nothing within the plain language of either subsection (1)(b) or (1)(c) requires the two subsections to be applied together or engrfts the physical care requirement imposed in the latter subsection upon nonparents who seek standing under the former subsection. By its terms, subsection (1)(b) establishes that any nonparent has standing as long as the child is not in the physical care of a parent. In re K.M.B., 80 P.3d 914 (Colo. App. 2003).

Both subsection (1)(b) and subsection (1)(c) are limited by the requirement that the biological parent consent or acquiesce in the transfer of physical care to the party seeking standing. Both subsections require volition on the part of the biological parents. In re C.R.C., 148 P.3d 458 (Colo. App. 2006).

Proof that the nonparent had become the psychological parent of the child is not a condition precedent to standing under either subsection (1)(b) or (1)(c). In re Custody of A.D.C., 969 P.2d 708 (Colo. App. 1998).

The fact that reported cases under this section involved step-parents or blood relatives of the child or his parents does not mean that only those persons should be accorded standing as “person(s) other than a parent” where no language in the statute or in any Colorado appellate decision indicates that such relationship is a legal requirement for nonparent standing to commence custody proceedings. In re Custody of C.C.R.S., 872 P.2d 1337 (Colo. App. 1993), aff’d, 892 P.2d 246 (Colo. 1995).

Petition filed within six months of child’s nonparent’s departure from the joint residence was timely, and court properly exercised jurisdiction over motion for parental responsibilities by second mother to child when both mothers lived with child for six and one-half years, both shared financial cost of supporting the child, and both shared in major decisions involving the child, even though only one mother was listed as the child’s mother on the child’s adoption papers. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Colorado district court had no jurisdiction under this section when it issued order granting full faith and credit to Wyoming court order. Gutierrez v. District Court, 183 Colo. 264, 516 P.2d 647 (1973).

Proceedings under the Uniform Dissolution of Marriage Act are not preempted by the Colorado Children’s Code where mother placed child with non-parents in contemplation of relinquishment and adoption proceedings under the Children’s Code, but such proceedings later became impossible when the mother withdrew her consent and did not honor her agreement to obtain counseling as required by the Children’s Code. In re Custody of C.C.R.S., 872 P.2d 1337 (Colo. App. 1993), aff’d, 892 P.2d 246 (Colo. 1995).

Showing of unfitness of biological parent is not required before parental responsibilities can be allocated to nonparent. People ex rel. A.M.K., 68 P.3d 563 (Colo. App. 2003).

Due process does not require a showing of parental unfitness or the use of an enhanced standard of proof in a case that does not involve the termination or relinquishment of parental rights nor their abrogation by adoption. In re Custody of C.C.R.S., 872 P.2d 1337 (Colo. App. 1993), aff’d, 892 P.2d 246 (Colo. 1995).

Due process does not require clear and convincing evidence to support the award of custody to a nonparent with standing to seek custody of a child, but, rather, a showing by a preponderance of the evidence that it is in the best interests of the child. In re Custody of A.D.C., 969 P.2d 708 (Colo. App. 1998).

Child is not an “other” party who may intervene through independent counsel pursuant to this section. Since a child is represented by a guardian ad litem in custody, visitation, and parenting time proceedings, a child is already fully represented and is not a party able to intervene in such proceedings. In re Hartley, 886 P.2d 665 (Colo. 1994).

Stepfather lacked standing to seek parenting time, even under argument of “psychological parent”, under subsection (1)(c) because he did not have physical care of the child in the six months prior to filing his motion as required by subsection (1). In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

Presumption favoring a parent’s determination regarding the best interests of the child may be rebutted by proof of clear and convincing evidence of either: (1) The parent’s unfitness; or (2) the best interests of the child. In re Adoption of C.A., 137 P.3d 318 (Colo. 2006); In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

Nonparent need not show demonstrated harm to child to satisfy “special weight” accorded to parental determinations. In re Adoption of C.A., 137 P.3d 318 (Colo. 2006); In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

Court may not allocate parental responsibilities to a nonparent unless it accords “special weight” to the parent’s determination of the best interests of the child. Application of the clear and convincing proof standard is necessary to accord special weight to a parent's determination of best interests. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

A court meets the due process requirement in Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57 (2000), to accord "special weight" to a parent's determination of the best interests of a child by considering all relevant factors set forth in § 14-10-124 and entering findings based on clear and convincing proof that the best interests of the child justify the award of parental responsibilities to the nonparent. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

The intrinsic threat of emotional harm to child from curtailment or termination of relationship with psychological parent is not, in itself, sufficient to satisfy the requirement that the court give special weight to the presumption that a parent's determination is in the best interests of the child. Section 14-10-124 identifies non-exclusive statutory factors courts should consider in determining the best interests of the child. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

Husband and wife who sought and were granted custody of a nonbiological child under a parental responsibility order owed a duty of support to the child, and trial court had the authority in their dissolution of marriage proceeding to order husband to pay child support pursuant to § 14-10-115 (1) and (17). In re Rodrick, 176 P.3d 806 (Colo. App. 2007).

Applied in In re Pilcher, 628 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1980); Deeb v. Morris, 14 Bankr. 217 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1981); In re Johnson, 634 P.2d 1034 (Colo. App. 1981); In re Matter of V.R.P.F., 939 P.2d 512 (Colo. App. 1997).

14-10-123.3. Requests for parental responsibility for a child by grandparents. Whenever a grandparent seeks parental responsibility for his or her grandchild pursuant to the provisions of this article, the court entering such order shall consider any credible evidence of the grandparent's past conduct of child abuse or neglect. Such evidence may include, but shall not be limited to, medical records, school records, police reports, information contained in records and reports of child abuse or neglect, and court records received by the court pursuant to section 19-1-307 (2) (f), C.R.S.

14-10-123.6. Required notice of prior restraining orders to prevent domestic abuse - proceedings concerning parental responsibilities relating to a child - resources for family services. (1) The general assembly hereby finds, determines, and declares that domestic violence is a pervasive problem in society and that a significant portion of domestic violence in society occurs in or near the home. The general assembly further recognizes research demonstrating that children in a home where domestic violence occurs are at greater risk of emotional, psychological, and physical harm. Studies have found that eighty to ninety percent of the children living in homes with domestic violence are aware of the violence. The general assembly finds that emerging research has established that these children are at greater risk of the following: Psychological, social, and behavioral problems; higher rates of academic problems; more physical illnesses, particularly stress-associated disorders; and a greater propensity to exhibit aggressive and violent behavior, sometimes carrying violent and violence-tolerant roles to their adult relationships. Studies have also noted that children are affected to varying degrees by witnessing violence in the home, and each child should be assessed on an independent basis. Accordingly, the general assembly determines that it is in the best interests of the children of the state of Colorado for the courts to advise the parents or guardians of children affected by domestic violence about the availability of resources and services and for such persons to be provided with information concerning the resources and services available to aid in the positive development of their children. It is the intent of the general assembly that such information would increase the awareness of the possible effects of domestic violence on children in the home, while providing the parents and legal guardians of these children with a comprehensive resource of available children's services as well as potential financial resources to assist parents and legal guardians seeking to retain services for their children affected by domestic violence.

(2) When filing a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities relating to a child pursuant to this article, the filing party shall have a duty to disclose to the court the existence of any prior temporary or permanent restraining orders to prevent domestic abuse issued pursuant to article 14 of title 13, C.R.S., and any emergency protection orders issued pursuant to section 13-14-103, C.R.S., entered against either party by any court within two years prior to the filing of the proceeding. The disclosure required pursuant to this section shall address the subject matter of the previous restraining orders or emergency protection orders, including the case number and jurisdiction issuing such orders.

(3) After the filing of the petition, the court shall advise the parties concerning domestic violence services and potential financial resources that may be available and shall strongly encourage the parties to obtain such services for their children, in appropriate cases. If the parties' children participate in such services, the court shall apportion the costs of such services between the parties as it deems appropriate.

(4) The parties to a domestic relations petition filed pursuant to this article shall receive information concerning domestic violence services and potential financial resources that may be available.

14-10-123.7. Parental education - legislative declaration. (1) The general assembly recognizes research that documents the negative impact divorce and separation can have on children when the parents continue the marital conflict, expose the children to this conflict, or place the children in the middle of the conflict or when one parent drops out of the child's life. This research establishes that children of divorce or separation may exhibit a decreased ability to function academically, socially, and psychologically because of the stress of the divorce or separation process. The general assembly also finds that, by understanding the process of divorce and its impact on both adults and children, parents can more effectively help and support their children during this time of family reconfiguration. Accordingly, the general assembly finds that it is in the best interests of children to authorize courts to establish, or contract with providers for the establishment of, educational programs for separating, divorcing, and divorced parents with minor children. The intent of these programs is to educate parents about the divorce process and its impact on adults and children and to teach coparenting skills and strategies so that parents may continue to parent their children in a cooperative manner.

(2) A court may order a parent whose child is under eighteen years of age to attend a program designed to provide education concerning the impact of separation and divorce on children in cases in which the parent of a minor is a named party in a dissolution of marriage proceeding, a legal separation proceeding, a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities, parenting time proceedings, or postdecree proceedings involving the allocation of parental responsibilities or parenting time or proceedings in which the parent is the subject of a protection order issued pursuant to this article.

(3) Each judicial district, or combination of judicial districts as designated by the chief justice of the Colorado supreme court, may establish an educational program for divorcing and separating parents who are parties to any of the types of proceedings specified in subsection (2) of this section or arrange for the provision of such educational programs by private providers through competitively negotiated contracts. The educational program shall inform parents about the divorce process and its impact on adults and children and shall teach parents coparenting skills and strategies so that they may continue to parent their children in a cooperative manner. Any such educational program shall be administered and monitored by the implementing judicial district or districts and shall be paid for by the participating parents in accordance with each parent's ability to pay.

14-10-123.8. Access to records. Access to information pertaining to a minor child, including but not limited to medical, dental, and school records, shall not be denied to any party allocated parental responsibilities, unless otherwise ordered by the court for good cause shown.

ANNOTATION

Because father receives parenting time, this section entitles him to have access to his child's records absent a showing of good cause for depriving him of that right, despite fact that mother is sole custodian. In re Schenck, 39 P.3d 1250 (Colo. App. 2001).

14-10-124. Best interests of child. (1) Legislative declaration. The general assembly finds and declares that it is in the best interest of all parties to encourage frequent and continuing contact between each parent and the minor children of the marriage after the parents have separated or dissolved their marriage. In order to effectuate this goal, the general assembly urges parents to share the rights and responsibilities of child-rearing and to encourage the love, affection, and contact between the children and the parents.

(1.3) Definitions. For purposes of this section and section 14-10-129 (2) (c), unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) “Domestic violence” means an act of violence or a threatened act of violence upon a person with whom the actor is or has been involved in an intimate relationship, and may include any act or threatened act against a person or against property, including an animal, when used as a method of coercion, control, punishment, intimidation, or revenge directed against a person with whom the actor is or has been involved in an intimate relationship.

(b) “Intimate relationship” means a relationship between spouses, former spouses, past or present unmarried couples, or persons who are both parents of the same child regardless of whether the persons have been married or have lived together at any time.

(1.5) Allocation of parental responsibilities. The court shall determine the allocation of parental responsibilities, including parenting time and decision-making responsibilities, in accordance with the best interests of the child giving paramount consideration to the physical, mental, and emotional conditions and needs of the child as follows:

(a) Determination of parenting time. The court, upon the motion of either party or upon its own motion, may make provisions for parenting time that the court finds are in the child’s best interests unless the court finds, after a hearing, that parenting time by the party would endanger the child’s physical health or significantly impair the child’s emotional development. In determining the best interests of the child for purposes of parenting time, the court shall consider all relevant factors, including:

- (I) The wishes of the child’s parents as to parenting time;
- (II) The wishes of the child if he or she is sufficiently mature to express reasoned and independent preferences as to the parenting time schedule;
- (III) The interaction and interrelationship of the child with his or her parents, his or her siblings, and any other person who may significantly affect the child’s best interests;
- (IV) The child’s adjustment to his or her home, school, and community;
- (V) The mental and physical health of all individuals involved, except that a disability alone shall not be a basis to deny or restrict parenting time;
- (VI) The ability of the parties to encourage the sharing of love, affection, and contact between the child and the other party;
- (VII) Whether the past pattern of involvement of the parties with the child reflects a system of values, time commitment, and mutual support;
- (VIII) The physical proximity of the parties to each other as this relates to the practical considerations of parenting time;
- (IX) Whether one of the parties has been a perpetrator of child abuse or neglect under section 18-6-401, C.R.S., or under the law of any state, which factor shall be supported by credible evidence;

(X) Whether one of the parties has been a perpetrator of domestic violence, which factor shall be supported by a preponderance of the evidence;

(XI) The ability of each party to place the needs of the child ahead of his or her own needs.

(b) Allocation of decision-making responsibility. The court, upon the motion of either party or its own motion, shall allocate the decision-making responsibilities between the parties based upon the best interests of the child. In determining decision-making responsibility, the court may allocate the decision-making responsibility with respect to each issue affecting the child mutually between both parties or individually to one or the other party or any combination thereof. In determining the best interests of the child for purposes of allocating decision-making responsibilities, the court shall consider, in addition to the factors set forth in paragraph (a) of this subsection (1.5), all relevant factors including:

(I) Credible evidence of the ability of the parties to cooperate and to make decisions jointly;

(II) Whether the past pattern of involvement of the parties with the child reflects a system of values, time commitment, and mutual support that would indicate an ability as mutual decision makers to provide a positive and nourishing relationship with the child;

(III) Whether an allocation of mutual decision-making responsibility on any one or a number of issues will promote more frequent or continuing contact between the child and each of the parties;

(IV) Whether one of the parties has been a perpetrator of child abuse or neglect under section 18-6-401, C.R.S., or under the law of any state, which factor shall be supported by credible evidence. If the court makes a finding of fact that one of the parties has been a perpetrator of child abuse or neglect, then it shall not be in the best interests of the child to allocate mutual decision-making with respect to any issue over the objection of the other party or the legal representative of the child.

(V) Whether one of the parties has been a perpetrator of domestic violence, which factor shall be supported by a preponderance of the evidence. If the court makes a finding of fact that one of the parties has been a perpetrator of domestic violence, then it shall not be in the best interests of the child to allocate mutual decision-making responsibility over the objection of the other party or the legal representative of the child, unless the court finds that the parties are able to make shared decisions about their children without physical confrontation and in a place and manner that is not a danger to the abused party or the child.

(2) The court shall not consider conduct of a party that does not affect that party's relationship to the child.

(3) In determining parenting time or decision-making responsibilities, the court shall not presume that any person is better able to serve the best interests of the child because of that person's sex.

(3.5) A request by either party for genetic testing shall not prejudice the requesting party in the allocation of parental responsibilities pursuant to subsection (1.5) of this section.

(4) If a party is absent or leaves home because of an act or threatened act of domestic violence committed by the other party, such absence or leaving shall not be a factor in determining the best interests of the child.

(5) Repealed.

(6) In the event of a medical emergency, either party shall be allowed to obtain necessary medical treatment for the minor child or children without being in violation of the order allocating decision-making responsibility or in contempt of court.

(7) In order to implement an order allocating parental responsibilities, both parties may submit a parenting plan or plans for the court's approval that shall address both parenting time and the allocation of decision-making responsibilities. If no parenting plan is submitted or if the court does not approve a submitted parenting plan, the court, on its own motion, shall formulate a parenting plan that shall address parenting time and the allocation of decision-making responsibilities.

(8) The court may order mediation, pursuant to section 13-22-311, C.R.S., to assist the parties in formulating or modifying a parenting plan or in implementing a parenting plan specified in subsection (7) of this section and may allocate the cost of said mediation between the parties.

Annotator's note. Since § 14-10-124 is similar to repealed § 46-1-5 (1)(b), C.R.S. 1963, § 46-1-5, CRS 53, and CSA, C. 56, § 8, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

Trial court should have applied the standard for an original determination of visitation, which is based on the best interests of the child, where the order awarding parenting time to stepfather was a temporary order. Although paternity decree operated as a final order and permanent allocation as to paternity and custody, its award of parenting time to stepfather was a temporary order because the parties had not reached an agreement on a permanent parenting time schedule but had agreed to maintain the interim schedule and work toward a permanent one. The fact that the parties adhered to the schedule for nearly three years did not change the nature of the order. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court erred by failing to afford parents their due process rights because court did not presume parents were acting in the child's best interests, but instead placed upon them the burden of demonstrating that visitation with stepfather would endanger the child; the court did not find that "special circumstances" existed which justified the intrusion on the parents' rights; and the court did not apply a clear and convincing evidence standard. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

Even if stepfather was a psychological parent, stepfather failed to present evidence to rebut presumption that parents were acting in their child's best interests by terminating stepfather's visitation and failed to show or proffer evidence of special circumstances that would justify trial court's order allowing visitation against the wishes of the parents. The visitation order infringed upon parents' fundamental right to direct the upbringing of their child. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

A court meets the due process requirement in Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57 (2000), to accord "special weight" to a parent's determination of the best interests of a child by considering all relevant factors set forth in this section and entering findings based on clear and convincing proof that the best interests of the child justify the award of parental responsibilities to the nonparent. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

The intrinsic threat of emotional harm to child from curtailment or termination of relationship with psychological parent is not, in itself, sufficient to satisfy the requirement that the court give special weight to the presumption that a parent's determination is in the best interests of the child. This section identifies non-exclusive statutory factors courts should consider in determining the best interests of the child. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

Applied in Woodhouse v. District Court, 196 Colo. 558, 587 P.2d 1199 (1978); In re Pilcher, 628 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1980); In re Rinow, 624 P.2d 365 (Colo. App. 1981); Dawson v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Ass'n, 664 P.2d 702 (Colo. 1983).

II. DETERMINATION OF BEST INTERESTS.

A. In General.

Applications for parental responsibilities by a nonparent implicate the fundamental constitutional right to family autonomy and privacy, and a legislative enactment that infringes on a fundamental right is constitutionally permissible only if it is necessary to promote a compelling state interest and does so in the least restrictive manner possible. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

The constitutional presumption that a fit parent acts in the best interests of the child applies to all stages of an allocation of parental responsibilities proceeding. The applicable standard for consideration of an order granting any parenting time to non-parents in the face of the parent's objection includes a presumption in favor of the parental determination; an opportunity to rebut this presumption with a showing by the non-parents through clear and convincing evidence that the parental determination is not in the child's best interests; and placement of the ultimate burden on the non-parents to establish by clear and convincing evidence that allocation of parenting time to them is in the best interests of the child. In re B.J., 242 P.3d 1128 (Colo. 2010).

Determining whether to apply the best interest standard or the endangerment standard may involve inquiry into both the quantitative and the qualitative aspects of the proposed change to parenting time, as well as the reason or reasons advanced for the change. In re West, 94 P.3d 1248 (Colo. App. 2004).

The principal issue before the courts is the welfare of the child, and to that welfare the rights and personal desires of the parents are subservient. Miller v. Miller, 129 Colo. 462, 271 P.2d 411 (1954); Hayes v. Hayes, 134 Colo. 315, 303 P.2d 238 (1956); Jensen v. Jensen, 142 Colo. 420, 351 P.2d 387 (1960); Grosso v. Grosso, 149 Colo. 183, 368 P.2d 561 (1962); Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962).

The prime criterion of a custody award in the court's determination is the welfare of the children. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973).

The primary focus of any custody determination, including one involving separation of children, must be the best interests of the children. In re Dickey, 658 P.2d 276 (Colo. App. 1982).

The best interests of the child must predominate in any custody determination. In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

It is the well-being of the child rather than the reward or punishment of a parent that ought to guide every aspect of a custody determination, including visitation. In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

Where trial court made no finding that father's conduct in his homosexual lifestyle endangered the child physically or impaired the child's emotional development, father could not be precluded from having overnight guests during his parenting time or taking child to gay environment of father's church. In re Dorworth, 33 P.3d 1260 (Colo. App. 2001).

The best interests of a child as an individual, and not as a sibling, are the controlling factors in divided custody determinations. In re Barnhouse, 765 P.2d 610 (Colo. App. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1021, 109 S. Ct. 1747, 104 L. Ed.2d 184 (1989).

In cases involving child custody the principal issue before the court is not the convenience of the parents. Kelley v. Kelley, 161 Colo. 486, 423 P.2d 315 (1967).

Section 14-10-123.4 coupled with the permissive language found throughout § 14-10-123.5 and this section indicates that the best interests of the child, and not the rights or wishes of either parent, must dictate the outcome of any custody dispute. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

In determining a custodial dispute between a parent and a nonparent, Colorado courts recognize that the best interests standard is subject to a presumption that the biological parent has a first and prior right to custody. Abrams v. Connolly, 781 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1989); In re Custody of C.C.R.S., 892 P.2d 246 (Colo. 1995); In re C.M., 74 P.3d 342 (Colo. App. 2002); People ex rel. A.M.K., 68 P.3d 563 (Colo. App. 2003).

Natural parents have a fundamental liberty interest in the companionship, care, custody, and management of their children. This fundamental liberty interest gives rise to a presumption that the best interests of the child will be furthered by a fit natural parent. People ex rel. A.M.K., 68 P.3d 563 (Colo. App. 2003).

This presumption may be rebutted by evidence establishing that the welfare of the child, i.e., the best interests of the child, is better served by granting custody to a nonparent. Abrams v. Connolly, 781 P.2d 651 (Colo. 1989); In re Custody of C.C.R.S., 892 P.2d 246 (Colo. 1995); In re C.M., 74 P.3d 342 (Colo. App.

The right of a parent to have the custody of his child must give way where the welfare of the child requires it. Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962).

When it is conducive to the child's best interests, a trial court may refuse to award custody to either parent and may award custody to someone other than a natural parent of the child and even to a nonresident of the state. Rippere v. Rippere, 157 Colo. 29, 400 P.2d 920 (1965).

In determining the best interests of the child, the court must consider all relevant factors, including those enumerated in subsection (1.5). In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990); In re Finer, 920 P.2d 325 (Colo. App. 1996); In re Fickling, 100 P.3d 571 (Colo. App. 2004).

When the court is determining the best interests of the child, the analysis must consider the least detrimental alternative. In re Martin, 42 P.3d 75 (Colo. App. 2002).

The phrase "best interests of the child" has identical meaning in this section and § 19-1-101 et seq. People in Interest of A.A.G., 902 P.2d 437 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 912 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1996).

Factors enumerated in subsection (1.5) may be considered in dependency action pursuant to the Children's Code. People in Interest of A.A.G., 902 P.2d 437 (Colo. App. 1995), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 912 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1996).

The general assembly did not intend to bar or presumptively bar an abusive parent or spouse from exercising individual decision-making responsibility with respect to children by enacting subsections (1.5)(b)(IV) and (1.5)(b)(V). The general assembly chose to either prohibit or presumptively prohibit only mutual decision-making responsibility. In re Bertsch, 97 P.3d 219 (Colo. App. 2004).

The general assembly's failure to amend bill following testimony from proponent noting that there was nothing in the bill requiring or prohibiting court from giving sole decision-making on every issue to one party or the other led court to conclude that the general assembly did not mean to preclude as a matter of law abusive parents or spouses from exercising individual, or even sole, decision-making responsibility. In re Bertsch, 97 P.3d 219 (Colo. App. 2004).

The court is to consider whether a parent has been a perpetrator of child or spouse abuse as but two, albeit important, factors in assessing the best interests of the child in determining whether to award parenting time or individual decision-making responsibility. In re

Bertsch, 97 P.3d 219 (Colo. App. 2004); In re Yates, 148 P.3d 304 (Colo. App. 2006).

This construction does not lead to an absurd result. Because the court makes a finding that a person has abused a child or spouse in the past does not necessarily and inevitably mean either that history is doomed to repeat itself or that the individual is capable of becoming a fit, or even the more fit, parent of a child. In re Bertsch, 97 P.3d 219 (Colo. App. 2004).

Allocation of parental responsibilities to wife was proper where wife, despite being previously convicted of child abuse, had since received and benefitted from counseling, and there was no suggestion of prospective child abuse; however, there was a greater concern about husband's parenting skills. In re Yates, 148 P.3d 304 (Colo. App. 2006).

Authority of court. A court has authority under the uniform act to award custody of a natural child of one spouse to the other spouse who is neither a natural, nor adoptive, parent of that child. In re Tricamo, 42 Colo. App. 493, 599 P.2d 273 (1979).

A court has authority under the uniform act to order a change of name of a minor child. In re Nguyen, 684 P.2d 258 (Colo. App. 1983), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1108, 105 S. Ct. 785, 83 L. Ed.2d 779 (1985).

Custody cases are not adversary proceedings, but hearings to determine what placement of the child will be in the child's best interests. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973).

The question as to whether a court may permit a child to be taken from the state first having jurisdiction to another jurisdiction was, like all other questions affecting the welfare and best interests of the child, vested in the sound legal discretion of a trial court. Hayes v. Hayes, 134 Colo. 315, 303 P.2d 238 (1956).

Policy of law in state is to permit removal of child from jurisdiction where it will serve the well-being and future interests of the child. In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

In an initial determination to allocate parental responsibilities, a court has no statutory authority to order a parent to live in a specific location. The court, rather, must accept the location in which each party intends to live and allocate parental responsibilities accordingly in the best interests of the child. Spahmer v. Gullette, 113 P.3d 158 (Colo. 2005).

Where the custody of a child was awarded in a divorce proceeding, the child became a ward of the court, and it was against the policy of the law to permit its removal to another jurisdiction unless its well-being and future welfare were served thereby. Holland v. Holland, 150 Colo. 442, 373 P.2d 523 (1962).

A change of custody should not be awarded as punishment for a parent's disregard of the court's orders prohibiting removal of the child from the jurisdiction, since the best interests of the child were paramount. Holland v. Holland, 150 Colo. 442, 373 P.2d 523 (1962).

"Joint selection of schools" provision in separation agreement is unenforceable because such a provision promotes discord between the parents and is not, therefore, "in the best interests of the child". Custodial parent retains the ultimate authority to select the child's school. Griffin v. Griffin, 699 P.2d 407 (Colo. 1985).

Guardian ad litem represents wishes of child. This section does not require representation of the child's wishes by an attorney chosen by the child rather than a court appointed guardian ad litem. In re Hartley, 886 P.2d 665 (Colo. 1994).

Representation of child's wishes by attorney chosen by child unnecessary and duplicative. The statutory safeguards inherent in the obligations of the guardian ad litem as well as the ability of the court to interview the child concerning the child's wishes provide sufficient opportunity for a child to be heard. In re Hartley, 886 P.2d 665 (Colo. 1994).

Permanent orders restriction on religious upbringing of minor child in dissolution of marriage unconstitutional. Permanent orders in a dissolution of marriage action that adopted the special advocate's recommendation to place a restriction on the mother's right to influence her child's upbringing, absent a finding of substantial harm to the child, violate the mother's constitutional right to free exercise of religion. In re McSoud, 131 P.3d 1208 (Colo. App. 2006).

Absent a clear showing of substantial harm to the child, a parent who does not have decision-making authority with respect to religion nevertheless retains a constitutional right to educate the child in that parent's religion. However, harm to the child will be found if one parent disparages the other parent's religion, thus justifying a limitation on that parent's right to religious education of the child. In re McSoud, 131 P.3d 1208 (Colo. App. 2006).

Harm to the child from conflicting religious instructions or practices must be demonstrated in detail and be substantial to warrant limitations on either parent's instructions or practices. In the absence of a demonstrated harm to the child, the best interests of the child standard is insufficient to serve as a compelling state interest that overrules the parents' fundamental rights to freedom of religion. In re McSoud, 131 P.3d 1208 (Colo. App. 2006).

B. Evidence.

The court did not err in determining under the rules of civil procedure and by a preponderance of the evidence that the criminal child abuse statute was violated. The use of the preponderancy standard in domestic proceedings does not offend due process and is adequate to protect a parent from false accusations of child abuse while serving the strong societal interest in protecting children from abusive parents. In re McCaulley-Elfert, 70 P.3d 590 (Colo. App. 2003).

Although subsections (1.5)(a)(IX) and (1.5)(b)(IV) do not say a factor must be proven by a preponderance of the evidence, those subsections do state that it shall be "supported by credible evidence". "Supported by credible evidence" means no more than supported by a preponderance of the evidence. In re McCaulley-Elfert, 70 P.3d 590 (Colo. App. 2003).

Because the presumption that a child's welfare is best served through custody of the natural parent is rebuttable, and where the evidence establishes that the best interest of the child will not be promoted by such custody, it will not be granted. Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962).

That the natural parents have a first and prior right to custody does not require that custody be awarded to the parent or parents merely because the evidence shows fitness and ability to care for the child. Coulter v. Coulter, 141 Colo. 237, 347 P.2d 492 (1959); Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962).

When considering non-parents' assertions of parental rights, Colorado rejects a requirement that a parent be found unfit before interfering with the parent's parenting plan. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Proof that a fit parent's exercise of parental responsibilities poses actual or threatened emotional harm to the child establishes a compelling state interest sufficient to permit state interference with parental rights. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

The fitness of the mother was not in issue when it was not established that the welfare of her children would be better served by changing the custody back to her. Munson v. Munson, 155 Colo. 427, 395 P.2d 103 (1964).

Where wife living with man to whom she is not married. It is an abuse of discretion for the trial court to impose its own standard in regard to the wife living with a man to whom she is not married in the face of the clear and mandatory language of the statute, where there was no evidence to infer that such conduct was detrimental to the children's welfare. In re Moore, 35 Colo. App. 280, 531 P.2d 995 (1975).

A natural father, shown to be a fit and proper person to have custody of his minor child, could have been denied custody where findings of trial court, amply supported by evidence, determined that such custody would not be in the best interests of the child. Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962).

Court presumed to disregard incompetent evidence. The presumption is that in making its decision to award custody of a child, the trial court disregards any incompetent evidence, or additional information to which it might have had access. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973).

Conduct of proposed custodian not affecting children is not to be considered. The general assembly has directed that in determining child custody the court shall not consider conduct of a proposed custodian that does not affect the children. In re Moore, 35 Colo. App. 280, 531 P.2d 995 (1975).

Inquiry into religious practices. Evidence of a party's religious beliefs or practices is relevant and admissible in a custody proceeding if it is shown that such beliefs or practices are reasonably likely to present or future harm to the physical or mental development of the child. In re Short, 698 P.2d 1310 (Colo. 1985).

Court order requiring children be returned to Colorado one year following the dissolution of marriage decree cannot stand since court made no finding that such a move would be in the best interests of the children. In re Hoffman, 701 P.2d 129 (Colo. App. 1985).

Record supported the trial court's determination that sole custody by mother was in children's best interests. Among the factors favoring this determination were the mother's status as primary-caretaker and the parties' lack of communication and poor ability to agree with each other. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

It is not necessary that the trial court make specific findings on each and every factor included in subsection (1.5). All that is required is an indication that the trial court considered those factors which were pertinent and that the findings are sufficient to enable this court to determine the grounds for the trial court's decision and whether the decision was supported by competent evidence. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990); In re Finer, 920 P.2d 325 (Colo. App. 1996).

It is not necessary that a trial court make specific findings on each and every factor included in the statute, but there must be some indication in the record that the trial court considered those factors that were pertinent. In re Garst, 955 P.2d 1056 (Colo. App. 1998); In re Custody of C.J.S., 37 P.3d 479 (Colo. App. 2001).

A party is entitled to an evidentiary hearing before a court may prohibit parenting time. In re D.R.V-A, 976 P.2d 881 (Colo. App. 1999).

Trial court did not err in entering findings with respect to husband's stepdaughter even though it did not have jurisdiction over her. Although the trial court had no jurisdiction over the stepdaughter, jurisdiction over the stepdaughter was not necessary for the trial court to consider evidence of the husband's sexual misconduct regarding the stepdaughter in determining the parental responsibility issues raised with respect to husband's son. Nothing precludes the court's inquiry into alleged child abuse or neglect when determining the best interests of the child, even if the alleged abuse or neglect involves other children. In re McCauley-Elfert, 70 P.3d 590 (Colo. App. 2003).

Trial court did not err in granting parental responsibilities to nonparent when trial court applied best interests standard and incorporated all relevant factors and further found clear and convincing evidence that the parent filed for joint custody of the child with the nonparent, requested co-parenting responsibilities with the nonparent, entered into a plan for joint parenting with the nonparent, permitted the nonparent to jointly parent the child during the course of their relationship, and encouraged the nonparent's participation in raising the child and that the child equally recognizes both parties as her parents and is doing extremely well both academically and socially. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Trial court's order granting the child's psychological parent, a nonparent, equal parental responsibilities was proper when curtailment and eventual termination of parental responsibilities threatened emotional harm to the child and constituted a compelling state interest justifying modification of parent's proposed parenting plan by the court. In re E.L.M.C., 100 P.3d 546 (Colo. App. 2004).

Presumption favoring a parent's determination regarding the best interests of the child may be rebutted by proof by clear and convincing evidence of either: (1) The parent's unfitness; or (2) the best interests of the child. In re Adoption of C.A., 137 P.3d 318 (Colo. 2006); In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

Nonparent need not show demonstrated harm to child to satisfy "special weight" accorded to parental determinations. In re Adoption of C.A., 137 P.3d 318 (Colo. 2006); In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

Court may not allocate parental responsibilities to a nonparent unless it accords "special weight" to the parent's determination of the best interests of the child. Application of the clear and convincing proof standard is necessary to accord special weight to a parent's determination of best interests. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

A court meets the due process requirement in Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57 (2000), to accord "special weight" to a parent's determination of the best interests of a child by considering all relevant factors set forth in this section and entering findings based on clear and convincing proof that the best interests of the child justify the award of parental responsibilities ties to the nonparent. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

The intrinsic threat of emotional harm to child from curtailment or termination of relationship with psychological parent is not, in itself, sufficient to satisfy the requirement that the court give special weight to the presumption that a parent's determination is in the best interests of the child. This section identifies non-exclusive statutory factors courts should consider in determining the best interests of the child. In re Reese, 227 P.3d 900 (Colo. App. 2010).

C. Discretion of Court.

Questions of custody must of necessity rest upon the judgment of the trier of facts; hence are best left in the hands of the trial court, and its determination should not be disturbed if there is sufficient competent evidence to support its conclusion. Miller v. Miller, 129 Colo. 462, 271 P.2d 411 (1954); Harris v. Harris, 140 Colo. 591, 345 P.2d 1061 (1959); Parker v. Parker, 142 Colo. 416, 350 P.2d 1067 (1960); Jensen v. Jensen, 142 Colo. 420, 351 P.2d 387 (1960); Flor v. Flor, 148 Colo. 514, 366 P.2d 664 (1961); Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962); Smith v. Smith, 172 Colo. 516, 474 P.2d 619 (1970); Meene v. Meene, 194 Colo. 304, 572 P.2d 472 (1977).

The trial court is best able to appraise the circumstances of the parties and best fitted to make the factual determinations regarding custody. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973).

The determination of custody is left to the discretion of the trial judge, and in the absence of an abuse of that discretion, an appellate court will not disturb these determinations. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973); In re Dickman, 670 P.2d 20 (Colo. App. 1983).

Custody awards in dissolution of marriage proceedings are a matter to be determined within the sound discretion of the trial court. In re Armbeck, 33 Colo. App. 260, 518 P.2d 300 (1974).

Question of custody is a matter within the discretion of the trial court after taking into consideration the various factors outlined in this section for the purpose of determining the best interest of the child. Rhoades v. Rhoades, 188 Colo. 423, 535 P.2d 1122 (1975).

In a custody and support proceeding, where a defendant presented his entire case and made no request for a further hearing, fact that trial court did not hold additional hearing after indicating it might do so, did not deprive defendant of his day in court. Grosso v. Grosso, 149 Colo. 183, 368 P.2d 561 (1962).

Prior to the enactment of subsection (1.5) in its present form, an imposition of joint custody over the objection of either parent constituted an abuse of discretion. However, that subsection now permits the trial court to order joint or sole custody after determining which form of custody is in the best interest of the child. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

The general assembly did not intend to state a preference or a mandate for joint custody under subsection (1.5). In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

Where one expert testified that he felt the mother to be the best guardian for the child at his current age of one year, but felt that the mother's psychiatric problems would begin to tell on the child as he reached four or five, the trial court did not err in ruling that it must look at the whole picture, and decided that it would be best to merely allow the mother liberal visitation rights for the first few years. Smith v. Smith, 172 Colo. 516, 474 P.2d 619 (1970).

Where the record revealed absolutely nothing as to the conditions in a home maintained by the paternal grandparents in New Jersey, or that the paternal grandparents ever desired custody of their grandchild, there quite clearly was an abuse of discretion by the trial court in awarding them custody. Rippere v. Rippere, 157 Colo. 29, 400 P.2d 920 (1965).

Where the trial court did not make any finding of fact or even assert the conclusion of law that the mother was unfit to have custody of the minor children of the parties, and the findings were also deficient in that there were no facts set forth or determination made that it was for the best interests of the children that their custody be given to the father, the court could not have ordered an award of custody to any party, because such findings and conclusions were necessary. Cacic v. Cacic, 164 Colo. 103, 432 P.2d 768 (1967).

A statement by a trial judge, disclosing that his decision in a custody matter was based largely on irritation and aggravation, and not on the evidence, indicated such failure to exercise a sound judicial discretion as to require reversal. Crites v. Crites, 137 Colo. 220, 322 P.2d 1045 (1958).

Court improperly restricted the visitation rights of the mother where court made no finding that her instability was so severe as to endanger the child physically or impair his emotional development. In re Jarman, 752 P.2d 1068 (Colo. App. 1988).

Visitation orders are within the sound discretion of the trial court. This discretion must, however, be exercised consistently with the express public policy of encouraging contact between each parent and the children. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

The trial court abused its discretion by effectively reducing father's visitation rights where court limited the father to four days per four-week period where he previously had portions of eight days in any four-week period and there was no evidence that the children would benefit by this reduction in visitation. This restriction was both contrary to the public policy of encouraging frequent visitation and to the evidence in the record. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

D. Custody and Visitation.

Award of joint custody absent agreement of the parties is contrary to the best interests of the child. In re Lampton, 677 P.2d 352 (Colo. App. 1983); In re Posinoff, 683 P.2d 377 (Colo. App. 1984) (decided prior to 1987 amendment).

Joint custody warranted only in the most exceptional cases. In re Lampton, 704 P.2d 847 (Colo. 1985) (decided prior to 1983 amendment).

Division of the children between the parents was not generally proper unless the paramount interest of the children required it. Songster v. Songster, 150 Colo. 466, 374 P.2d 197 (1962).

The trial court does not abuse its discretion in separating the children by awarding custody of the youngest son to the wife. In re Dickey, 658 P.2d 276 (Colo. App. 1982).

General visitation order does not meet purposes for which visitation intended when evidence shows a total lack of cooperation. In re Plummer, 709 P.2d 1388 (Colo. App. 1985).

Although the stability of the environment is a valid consideration in awarding custody, instability alone is not sufficient to justify a restriction on visitation. In re Jarman, 752 P.2d 1068 (Colo. App. 1988).

Where evidence shows a lack of cooperation between the parties or between the therapists for the mother and the child, the general visitation order does not meet the purposes for which the visitation was intended and is in essence a nullity. In re Sepmeier, 782 P.2d 876 (Colo. App. 1989).

In determining custody in dependency and neglect hearing, juvenile court committed reversible error by failing to consider any purposes of §19-1-101 et seq. and in relying solely on a limited number of purposes set forth in this section. L.A.G. v. People in Interest of A.A.G., 912 P.2d 1385 (Colo. 1996).

Where neither party submitted a plan for implementing previously ordered joint custody, court acted properly in ordering the parties to contact a parenting-time coordinator to facilitate and improve the parties' communication in the exercise of joint custody and to establish father's parenting time, given mother's move out of state. In re Garst, 955 P.2d 1056 (Colo. App. 1998) (decided under former §14-10-123.5 prior to its 1999 repeal).

Alienation is a significant and foreseeable harm. When a psychotherapist of a divorced mother, who sought counseling because she believed her ex-husband, the father of the mother's two children, had abused her children, sent a letter to the father and the new therapist for the mother and children opining the mother's conduct was alienating the father from the children, the psychotherapist did breach her duty to the mother. Mitchell v. Ryder, 20 P.3d 1229 (Colo. App. 2000).

Applied in In re Murphy, 834 P.2d 1287 (Colo. App. 1992).

III. TENDER YEARS DOCTRINE.

In its concern for children, particularly those of tender years, the supreme court formerly enunciated guides for trial courts in the disposition of controversies regarding their custody. Songster v. Songster, 150 Colo. 466, 374 P.2d 197 (1962).

Formerly, courts did not deprive the mother of the custody of her children of tender years, unless it was clearly shown that she was so unfit a person as to endanger the welfare of the minors. Hayes v. Hayes, 134 Colo. 315, 303 P.2d 238 (1956); Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957); Green v. Green, 139 Colo. 551, 342 P.2d 659 (1959).

A mother's love, care, and affection for a child of tender years were considered the most unselfish of all factors in human relations, and a child was not to be deprived thereof unless for a very good reason, founded on lack of moral fitness and proper home surroundings. Hayes v. Hayes, 134 Colo. 315, 303 P.2d 238 (1956).

Mere fact of motherhood is not sufficient to give a mother any special standing in the proceeding or preference as to custody. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973).

Court's undue emphasis on motherly instincts reversible error. Court's undue emphasis on "motherly instincts" constituted a presumption that the mother was better able to serve the best interests of the child because of her sex and was both an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Miller, 670 P.2d 819 (Colo. App. 1983).

Sufficient findings unrelated to parental gender. Although the court states that one of its considerations in making a custody award is a belief in the importance of a "meaningful relationship" between a father and son, the remark does not rise to the level of a presumption where the court makes sufficient findings unrelated to parental gender to support the award. In re Clarke, 671 P.2d 1334 (Colo. App. 1983).

IV. JURISDICTION OF COURT.

The trial court had a continuing jurisdiction and control based upon the welfare of the child. Coulter v. Coulter, 141 Colo. 237, 347 P.2d 492 (1959).

Where the court could provide for custody of children by orders made "before or after" the entry of a final decree, the trial court could provide for the custody of the child even though the subject was not mentioned in the original decree. Kelley v. Kelley, 161 Colo. 486, 423 P.2d 315 (1967).

When the wife-defendant died before any divorce decree had entered, the divorce action thereupon abated, and thereafter the court was without jurisdiction to enter any order concerning custody or right of visitation. Wood v. Parkerson, 163 Colo. 271, 430 P.2d 467 (1967).

Contempt for failure to comply with custody order was not separate procedure, but continuance of divorce action. Brown v. Brown, 31 Colo. App. 557, 506 P.2d 386 (1972).

The district court in a divorce action could not acquire exclusive jurisdiction over custody of minor children residing in a foreign jurisdiction. Scheer v. District Court, 147 Colo. 265, 363 P.2d 1059 (1961).

A custody award entered by one court is not binding on courts of another state under the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution after the child has become domiciled in the latter state, because when a child's domicile is changed he is no longer subject to the control of the court which first awarded his custody. Scheer v. District Court, 147 Colo. 265, 363 P.2d 1059 (1961).

A child's domicile is that of the parent with whom it lives. Scheer v. District Court, 147 Colo. 265, 363 P.2d 1059 (1961).

V. MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

The court could make an order for the care and custody of minor children, and make provision for their maintenance, and this in the same decree making an award for alimony.

14-10-125. Temporary orders. (1) A party to a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities may move for a temporary order. The court may allocate temporary parental responsibilities, including temporary parenting time and temporary decision-making responsibility, after a hearing.

(2) If a proceeding for dissolution of marriage or legal separation is dismissed, any temporary order concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities is vacated unless a parent or the person allocated parental responsibilities moves that the proceeding continue as a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities and the court finds, after a hearing, that the circumstances of the parents and the best interests of the child require that a decree concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities be issued.

(3) If a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities commenced in the absence of a petition for dissolution of marriage or legal separation is dismissed, any temporary order concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities is vacated.

Brown v. Brown, 131 Colo. 467, 283 P.2d 951 (1955).

Motions for determination of custody of children are different in kind from actions to enforce wholly personal rights as property or alimony, because the question of custody of children deals with a status and the issue on such a motion is the welfare of the children. Kelley v. Kelley, 161 Colo. 486, 423 P.2d 315 (1967).

An order determining custody of children, like an order determining alimony, was reviewable in the supreme court. Miller v. Miller, 129 Colo. 462, 271 P.2d 411 (1954).

Trial court findings necessary for review. While it is not necessary that a trial court make specific findings on each and every factor included in this section, there must be some indication in the record that the trial court considered such of those factors as were pertinent, and the findings thereon must be sufficient to enable this court to determine on what ground the trial court reached its decision, and whether that decision was supported by competent evidence. In re Jaramillo, 37 Colo. App. 171, 543 P.2d 1281 (1975).

C.R.C.P. 52 is applicable to judgments in custody proceedings. In re Jaramillo, 37 Colo. App. 171, 543 P.2d 1281 (1975).

In a divorce action involving the custody of minor children, where no reporter was present and no record made of the evidence, and the written conclusions of the trial judge indicate that the orders entered were arbitrary and unsupported by evidence, the judgment must be reversed. Crites v. Crites, 137 Colo. 220, 322 P.2d 1045 (1958).

Where custodial orders of the trial court were silent on the question of character and fitness of either parent to have custody of the children, the trial court should have made findings of fact thereon, because lacking such findings the supreme court was without compass to ascertain whether trial court acted properly. Songster v. Songster, 150 Colo. 466, 374 P.2d 197 (1962).

Temporary order is not “in any way res judicata” as to permanent order. In re Lawson, 44 Colo. App. 105, 608 P.2d 378 (1980).

Order granting temporary custody of children is not final for purposes of appeal. In re Henne, 620 P.2d 62 (Colo. App. 1980).

14-10-126. Interviews. (1) The court may interview the child in chambers to ascertain the child’s wishes as to the allocation of parental responsibilities. The court may permit counsel to be present at the interview. The court shall cause a record of the interview to be made, and it shall be made part of the record in the case.

(2) The court may seek the advice of professional personnel whether or not they are employed on a regular basis by the court. The advice given shall be in writing and shall be made available by the court to counsel of record, parties, and other expert witnesses upon request, but it shall otherwise be considered confidential and shall be sealed and shall not be open to inspection, except by consent of the court. Counsel may call for cross-examination any professional personnel consulted by the court.

Requirement for record of interview concerning child’s preference not violated.

14-10-127. Evaluation and reports - disclosure. (1) (a) (I) In all proceedings concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities with respect to a child, the court shall, upon motion of either party or upon its own motion, order the court probation department, any county or district social services department, or a licensed mental health professional qualified pursuant to subsection (4) of this section to perform an evaluation and file a written report concerning the disputed issues relating to the allocation of parental responsibilities for the child, unless such motion by either party is made for the purpose of delaying the proceedings. Any court or social services department personnel appointed by the court to do such evaluation shall be qualified pursuant to subsection (4) of this section. When a mental health professional performs the evaluation, the court shall appoint or approve the selection of the mental health professional. Within seven days after the appointment, the evaluator shall comply with the disclosure provisions of subsection (1.2) of this section. The court shall, at the time of the appointment of the evaluator, order one or more of the parties to deposit a reasonable sum with the court to pay the cost of the evaluation. The court may order the reasonable charge for such evaluation and report to be assessed as costs between the parties at the time the evaluation is completed.

(I.5) A party may request a supplemental evaluation to the evaluation ordered pursuant to subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (a). The court shall appoint another mental health professional to perform the supplemental evaluation at the initial expense of the moving party. The person appointed to perform the supplemental evaluation shall comply with the disclosure provisions of subsection (1.2) of this section. The court shall not order a supplemental evaluation if it determines that any of the following applies, based on motion and supporting affidavits:

(A) Such motion is interposed for purposes of delay;

(B) A party objects, and the party who objects or the child has a physical or mental condition that would make it harmful for such party or the child to participate in the supplemental evaluation;

(C) The purpose of such motion is to harass or oppress the other party;

(D) The moving party has failed or refused to cooperate with the first evaluation;

(E) The weight of the evidence other than the evaluation concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities or parenting time by the mental health professional demonstrates that a second evaluation would not be of benefit to the court in determining the allocation of parental responsibilities and parenting time; or

(F) In addition to the evaluation ordered pursuant to subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (a), there has been an investigation and report prepared by a child and family investigator pursuant to section 14-10-116.5, and the court finds that a supplemental evaluation concerning parental responsibilities will not serve the best interests of the child.

(II) Each party and the child shall cooperate in the supplemental evaluation. If the court finds that the supplemental evaluation was necessary and materially assisted the court, the court may order the costs of such supplemental evaluation to be assessed as costs between the parties. Except as otherwise provided in this section, such report shall be considered confidential and shall not be available for public inspection unless by order of court. The cost of each probation department or department of human services evaluation shall be based on an ability to pay and shall be assessed as part of the costs of the action or proceeding, and, upon receipt of such sum by the clerk of court, it shall be transmitted to the department or agency performing the evaluation.

(b) The person signing a report or evaluation and supervising its preparation shall be a licensed mental health professional. The mental health professional may have associates or persons working under him or her who are unlicensed.

(1.2) (a) Within seven days after his or her appointment, the evaluator shall disclose to each party, attorneys of record, and the court any familial, financial, or social relationship that the evaluator has or has had with the child, either party, the attorneys of record, or the judicial officer and, if a relationship exists, the nature of the relationship.

(b) Based on the disclosure required pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (1.2), the court may, in its discretion, terminate the appointment and appoint a different evaluator in the proceedings. A party has seven days from the date of the disclosure to object to the appointment based upon information contained in the disclosure. If a party objects to the appointment, the court shall appoint a different person or confirm the appointment within seven days after the date of the party's objection. If no party timely objects to the appointment, then the appointment is deemed confirmed.

(2) In preparing the report concerning a child, the evaluator may consult any person who may have information about the child and the child's potential parenting arrangements. Upon order of the court, the evaluator may refer the child to other professional personnel for diagnosis. The evaluator may consult with and obtain information from medical, mental health, educational, or other expert persons who have served the child in the past without obtaining the consent of the parent or the person allocated parental responsibilities for the child; but the child's consent must be obtained if the child has reached the age of fifteen years unless the court finds that the child lacks mental capacity to consent. If the requirements of subsections (3) to (7) of this section are fulfilled, the evaluator's report may be received in evidence at the hearing.

(3) The evaluator shall mail the report to the court and to counsel and to any party not represented by counsel at least twenty-one days prior to the hearing. The evaluator shall make available to counsel and to any party not represented by counsel his or her file of underlying data and reports, complete texts of diagnostic reports made to the evaluator pursuant to the provisions of subsections (2), (5), and (6) of this section, and the names and addresses of all persons whom the evaluator has consulted. Any party to the proceeding may call the evaluator and any person with whom the evaluator has consulted for cross-examination. No party may waive his or her right of cross-examination prior to the hearing.

(4) A person shall not be allowed to testify regarding a parental responsibilities or parenting time evaluation that the person has performed pursuant to this section unless the court finds that the person is qualified as competent, by training and experience, in the areas of:

- (a) The effects of divorce and remarriage on children, adults, and families;
- (b) Appropriate parenting techniques;
- (c) Child development, including cognitive, personality, emotional, and psychological development;

- (d) Child and adult psychopathology;
  - (e) Applicable clinical assessment techniques; and
  - (f) Applicable legal and ethical requirements of parental responsibilities evaluation.
- (5) If evaluation is indicated in an area which is beyond the training or experience of the evaluator, the evaluator shall consult with a mental health professional qualified by training or experience in that area. Such areas may include, but are not limited to, domestic violence, child abuse, alcohol or substance abuse, or psychological testing.

(6) (a) A mental health professional may make specific recommendations when the mental health professional has interviewed and assessed all parties to the dispute, assessed the quality of the relationship, or the potential for establishing a quality relationship, between the child and each of the parties, and had access to pertinent information from outside sources.

(b) A mental health professional may make recommendations even though all parties and the child have not been evaluated by the same mental health professional in the following circumstances if the mental health professional states with particularity in his or her opinion the limitations of his or her findings and recommendations:

- (I) Any of the parties reside outside Colorado and it would not be feasible for all parties and the child to be evaluated by the same mental health professional; or
- (II) One party refuses or is unable to cooperate with the court-ordered evaluation; or
- (III) The mental health professional is a member of a team of professionals that performed the evaluation and is presenting recommendations of the team that has interviewed and assessed all parties to the dispute.

(7) (a) A written report of the evaluation shall be provided to the court and to the parties pursuant to subsection (3) of this section.

(b) The report of the evaluation shall include, but need not be limited to, the following information:

- (I) A description of the procedures employed during the evaluation;
- (II) A report of the data collected;
- (III) A conclusion that explains how the resulting recommendations were reached from the data collected, with specific reference to criteria listed in section 14-10-124 (1.5), and, if applicable, to the criteria listed in section 14-10-131, and their relationship to the results of the evaluation;
- (IV) Recommendations concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities for the child, including decision-making responsibility, parenting time, and other considerations; and

(V) An explanation of any limitations in the evaluations or any reservations regarding the resulting recommendations.

(8) All evaluations and reports, including but not limited to supplemental evaluations and related medical and mental health information, that are submitted to the court pursuant to this section shall be deemed confidential without the necessity of filing a motion to seal or otherwise limit access to the court file under the Colorado rules of civil procedure. An evaluation or report that is deemed confidential under this subsection (8) shall not be made available for public inspection without an order of the court authorizing public inspection.

Annotator's note. Since § 14-10-127 is similar to repealed § 46-1-5 (7), C.R.S. 1963, relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this section.

The purpose of the legislation providing for the preparation and filing of reports in custody proceedings is to make the information contained therein available to assist the court in determining what is in the best interest of the children concerned. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

The purpose of the legislation providing for court assistants in the capacity of investigators of domestic relations cases to assist the court in the transaction of the judicial business of said court was obviously to assist the court and not to replace it. The general assembly would have no power to substitute an investigator for a judge, and neither would such legislation authorize a trial court to deny to the parties any of the usual attributes of a fair trial in open court upon due notice. Anderson v. Anderson, 167 Colo. 88, 445 P.2d 397 (1968).

Provisions of this section do not apply to custody determination in a dependency proceeding under the Children's Code. People in Interest of D.C., 851 P.2d 291 (Colo. App. 1993).

Provisions of this section do not apply to the child's treating therapist who was designated as a witness to testify as to her observations of the minor child. In re Woolley, 25 P.3d 1284 (Colo. App. 2001).

The act of the general assembly (§ 46-1-5 (7), C.R.S. 1963), which purported to authorize the trial court to call upon the probation department for a report concerning "the ability of each party to serve the best interest of the child", and further directing that "Each report shall be considered by the court" could not be so construed as to deny due process which includes the right to be heard in open court and to have a determination of issues based upon competent evidence offered by persons who submit themselves to cross examination. Anderson v. Anderson, 167 Colo. 88, 445 P.2d 397 (1968).

A probation officer, or other persons, who have been designated to investigate and report to the court in custody hearings matters involving the ability or fitness of parents to best serve the interests of their children, are subject to examination as witnesses concerning matters contained in their reports. Saucerman v. Saucerman, 170 Colo. 318, 461 P.2d 18 (1969).

However, touching upon matters related to them in confidence, the trial court should preliminarily rule in each instance what matters are in fact confidential, and whether the public interest requires the confidence to be preserved, and no examination of the officer should be permitted with respect to such confidential matters. Saucerman v. Saucerman, 170 Colo. 318, 461 P.2d 18 (1969).

Where the trial court received in evidence the investigative reports of welfare and health department employees in reference to conditions found in the respective homes of the two contestants, and in reference to the psychological effects living with the father or the mother might have on one of the children, and the record indicated that at one hearing after the reports were filed the individuals who made the reports were either in court or could have been made available to the parties for cross-examination, there was no unfairness nor a denial of due process. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

Opportunity to test report's reliability and offer evidence exists. Because any party has the right to call for cross-examination of the investigator and any person he has consulted, and because the investigator's file is available to counsel, ample opportunity exists for a party to test the reliability of the report and to offer evidence in explanation of or to disprove any statements or conclusions based on hearsay. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

In making an order changing the custody of children, the trial court is actually making the decision, though such order is based on the recommendations of a psychiatrist and welfare personnel whose reports constitute nothing more than recommendations. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

Court did not improperly utilize an investigative report made by an officer of the juvenile probation department in arriving at its decision relative to custody, for while it is true that the investigative report was not formally offered and received in evidence, the report was made a part of the record and had been furnished previously to both parties, and although she did not choose to do so, the wife had the right to call and examine the author of the report. Rayer v. Rayer, 32 Colo. App. 400, 512 P.2d 637 (1973); In re Lorenzo, 721 P.2d 155 (Colo. App. 1986).

The reports simply furnish specific information of a specialized nature for aid and assistance to the trial court, but in the final analysis the judge makes the decision, and whatever recommendations may be made to the judge, be they by experts or counsel, are merely recommendations and nothing more. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

Where objections and exceptions were filed to the report of the probation department, since it was a hearsay document, if the conclusions reached therein were objected to by either party, it would be necessary that competent evidence, upon which the conclusions were based, be presented in open court. Anderson v. Anderson, 167 Colo. 88, 445 P.2d 397 (1968).

Waiver of objections to admission of report. Unless a party notifies the court and the opposing party within 10 days after receipt of a copy of the report (or if a copy has not been received at least 10 days prior to the hearing day, then at or prior to the commencement of the hearing at which the report may be used) that he intends to object to the admission of the report on the grounds of noncompliance with the 10-day rule or the hearsay nature of the report, any such objections are waived. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

Where a copy of the report was received by counsel a reasonable time prior to the hearing and no objection was made thereto until after the commencement of the hearing, objections as to hearsay and the 10-day rule were waived. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

Effect of valid objection. If a valid objection is made within the period specified above, then, on motion of either party or of the court, the court shall grant a reasonable continuance of the custody hearing date in order that the parties may obtain appropriate testimony. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

The trial court erred in relying upon the probation report where it afforded no opportunity for the husband to offer evidence in explanation thereof, or to disprove any conclusions based on hearsay that were contained therein. Anderson v. Anderson, 167 Colo. 88, 445 P.2d 397 (1968).

It was not prejudicial error for the trial court to have received in evidence the hearsay reports of the case worker of the welfare department in custody proceedings, since the nature of the "report" was such that the father could not possibly have been prejudiced by anything contained therein, and furthermore, it affirmatively appeared from the court's decree that it did not in any manner enter into the court's thinking to the prejudice of the father. Suzuki v. Suzuki, 162 Colo. 204, 425 P.2d 44 (1967).

Compliance with the 10-day provisions of this section is not a condition precedent to the reception of the report. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

Effect of noncompliance. Noncompliance with the 10-day rule merely prohibits the court from proceeding with a hearing wherein the report can be considered absent consent of or waiver by the parties. Pacheco v. Pacheco, 38 Colo. App. 181, 554 P.2d 720 (1976).

14-10-128. Hearings. (1) Proceedings concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities with respect to a child shall receive priority in being set for hearing.

(2) The court may tax as costs the payment of necessary travel and other expenses incurred by any person whose presence at the hearing the court deems necessary to determine the best interests of the child.

(3) The court without a jury shall determine questions of law and fact. If it finds that a public hearing may be detrimental to the child's best interests, the court may exclude the public from a hearing concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities but may admit any person who has a direct and legitimate interest in the particular case or a legitimate educational or research interest in the work of the court.

(4) If the court finds it necessary in order to protect the child's welfare that the record of any interview, report, investigation, or testimony in a proceeding concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities be kept secret, the court shall make an appropriate order sealing the record.

Trial court erred when it denied petitioner's request for an evaluation. This section applies to both the determination of parenting time and the allocation of parental decision-making when a court is asked to rule on the intended relocation of one of the parents. 14-10-128.1. Appointment of parenting coordinator - disclosure. (1) Pursuant to the provisions of this section, at any time after the entry of an order concerning parental responsibilities and upon notice to the parties, the court may, on its own motion, a motion by either party, or an agreement of the parties, appoint a parenting coordinator as a neutral third party to assist in the resolution of disputes between the parties concerning parental responsibilities, including but not limited to implementation of the court-ordered parenting plan. The parenting coordinator shall be a neutral person with appropriate training and qualifications and an independent perspective acceptable to the court. Within seven days after the appointment, the appointed person shall comply with the disclosure provisions of subsection (2.5) of this section.

(2) (a) Absent agreement of the parties, a court shall not appoint a parenting coordinator unless the court makes the following findings:

(I) That the parties have failed to adequately implement the parenting plan;

(II) That mediation has been determined by the court to be inappropriate, or, if not inappropriate, that mediation has been attempted and was unsuccessful; and

(III) That the appointment of a parenting coordinator is in the best interests of the child or children involved in the parenting plan.

(b) In addition to making the findings required pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (2), prior to appointing a parenting coordinator, the court may consider the effect of any claim or documented evidence of domestic violence, as defined in section 14-10-124 (1.3) (a), by the other party on the parties' ability to engage in parent coordination.

(2.5) (a) Within seven days after his or her appointment, the appointed person shall disclose to each party, attorneys of record, and the court any familial, financial, or social relationship that the appointed person has or has had with the child, either party, the attorneys of record, or the judicial officer and, if a relationship exists, the nature of the relationship.

(b) Based on the disclosure required pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (2.5), the court may, in its discretion, terminate the appointment and appoint a different person in the proceedings. A party has seven days from the date of the disclosure to object to the appointment based upon information contained in the disclosure. If a party objects to the appointment, the court shall appoint a different person or confirm the appointment within seven days after the date of the party's objection. If no party timely objects to the appointment, then the appointment is deemed confirmed.

(3) A parenting coordinator shall assist the parties in implementing the terms of the parenting plan. Duties of a parenting coordinator include, but are not limited to, the following:

(a) Assisting the parties in creating an agreed-upon, structured guideline for implementation of the parenting plan;

(b) Developing guidelines for communication between the parties and suggesting appropriate resources to assist the parties in learning appropriate communication skills;

(c) Informing the parties about appropriate resources to assist them in developing improved parenting skills;

(d) Assisting the parties in realistically identifying the sources and causes of conflict between them, including but not limited to identifying each party's contribution to the conflict, when appropriate; and

(e) Assisting the parties in developing parenting strategies to minimize conflict.

(4) (a) The court may not appoint a person pursuant to this section to serve in a case as a parenting coordinator if the person has served or is serving in the same case as an evaluator pursuant to section 14-10-127 or a representative of the child pursuant to section 14-10-116. After appointing a person pursuant to this section to serve as a parenting coordinator in a case, the court may not subsequently appoint the person to serve in the same case as an evaluator pursuant to section 14-10-127 or a representative of the child pursuant to section 14-10-116.

(b) The court may appoint a person who has served or is serving in a case as a child and family investigator pursuant to section 14-10-116.5 to serve in the same case as the parenting coordinator, upon the agreement of the parties. After appointing a person pursuant to this section to serve as a parenting coordinator in a case, the court may not subsequently appoint the person to serve as a child and family investigator in the same case pursuant to section 14-10-116.5.

(5) A court order appointing a parenting coordinator shall be for a specified term; except that the court order shall not appoint a parenting coordinator for a period of longer than two years. If an order fails to specify the length of the court-ordered appointment, it shall be construed to be two years from the date of appointment. Upon agreement of the parties, the court may extend, modify, or terminate the appointment, including extending the appointment beyond two years from the date of the original appointment. The court may terminate the appointment of the parenting coordinator at any time for good cause. The court shall allow the parenting coordinator to withdraw at any time.

(6) A court order appointing a parenting coordinator shall include apportionment of the responsibility for payment of all of the parenting coordinator's fees between the parties. The state shall not be responsible for payment of fees to a parenting coordinator appointed pursuant to this section.

(7) (a) A parenting coordinator appointed by the court pursuant to this section shall be immune from civil liability in any claim for injury that arises out of an act or omission of the parenting coordinator occurring on or after April 16, 2009, during the performance of his or her duties or during the performance of any act that a reasonable parenting coordinator would believe was within the scope of his or her duties unless the act or omission causing the injury was willful and wanton.

(b) Nothing in this subsection (7) shall be construed to bar a party from asserting a claim:

(I) Based upon a parenting coordinator's failure to comply with the provision set forth in subsection (8) of this section;

(II) Related to the reasonableness or accuracy of any fee charged or time billed by a parenting coordinator; or

(III) Based upon a negligent act or omission involving the operation of a motor vehicle by a parenting coordinator.

(c) (I) In a judicial proceeding, administrative proceeding, or other similar proceeding between the parties to the action, a parenting coordinator shall not be competent to testify and may not be required to produce records as to any statement, conduct, or decision that occurred during the parenting coordinator's appointment to the same extent as a judge of a court of this state acting in a judicial capacity.

(II) This paragraph (c) shall not apply:

(A) To the extent testimony or production of records by the parenting coordinator is necessary to determine a claim of the parenting coordinator against a party; or

(B) To the extent testimony or production of records by the parenting coordinator is necessary to determine a claim of a party against a parenting coordinator; or

(C) When both parties have agreed, in writing, to authorize the parenting coordinator to testify.

(d) If a person commences a civil action against a parenting coordinator arising from the services of the parenting coordinator, or if a person seeks to compel a parenting coordinator to testify or produce records in violation of paragraph (c) of this subsection (7), and the court determines that the parenting coordinator is immune from civil liability or that the parenting coordinator is not competent to testify, the court shall award to the parenting coordinator reasonable attorney fees and reasonable expenses of litigation.

(8) The parenting coordinator shall comply with any applicable provisions set forth in chief justice directives and any other practice or ethical standards established by rule, statute, guideline, or licensing board that regulates the parenting coordinator.

This section does not permit the parenting coordinator to make decisions or resolve disputes that the parents are unable to resolve. A grant of decision-making authority to the parenting coordinator is contrary to subsection (3). In re Dauwe, 148 P.3d 282 (Colo. App. 2006).

This section and § 13-22-313 are in conflict and cannot be harmonized with respect to the standards for the appointment of a parenting coordinator if abuse is alleged by one parent by the other. Although § 13-22-313 bars the court from referring a case to any ancillary form of alternative dispute resolution if one of the parties claims abuse by the other party, under this section, a mere claim of abuse by one parent is insufficient to bar the appointment of a parenting coordinator. Even documented evidence of domestic violence does not automatically bar such an appointment. Rather, the court is required only to consider the effect of the evidence on the parties' ability to engage in parenting coordination. In re Rozzi, 190 P.3d 815 (Colo. App. 2008).

Court erred in directing that the parenting coordinator should assume the duties of a special master and follow the procedures set forth in C.R.C.P. 53. However, the court was proper in providing that the parenting coordinator may make nonbinding recommendations to the parties in the event that they are unable to resolve a dispute themselves. In re Rozzi, 190 P.3d 815 (Colo. App. 2008).

14-10-128.3. Appointment of decision-maker - disclosure. (1) In addition to the appointment of a parenting coordinator pursuant to section 14-10-128.1 or an arbitrator pursuant to section 14-10-128.5, at any time after the entry of an order concerning parental responsibilities and upon written consent of both parties, the court may appoint a qualified domestic relations decision-maker and grant to the decision-maker binding authority to resolve disputes between the parties as to implementation or clarification of existing orders concerning the parties' minor or dependent children, including but not limited to disputes concerning parenting time, specific disputed parental decisions, and child support. A decision-maker shall have the authority to make binding determinations to implement or clarify the provisions of a pre-existing court order in a manner that is consistent with the substantive intent of the court order. The decision-maker appointed pursuant to the provisions of this section may be the same person as the parenting coordinator appointed pursuant to section 14-10-128.1. At the time of the appointment, the appointed person shall comply with the disclosure provisions of subsection (4.5) of this section.

(2) The decision-maker's procedures for making determinations shall be in writing and shall be approved by the parties prior to the time the decision-maker begins to resolve a dispute of the parties. If a party is unable or unwilling to agree to the decision-maker's procedures, the decision-maker shall be allowed to withdraw from the matter.

(3) All decisions made by the decision-maker pursuant to this section shall be in writing, dated, and signed by the decision-maker. Decisions of the decision-maker shall be filed with the court and mailed to the parties or to counsel for the parties, if any, no later than twenty days after the date the decision is issued. All decisions shall be effective immediately upon issuance and shall continue in effect until vacated, corrected, or modified by the decision-maker or until an order is entered by a court pursuant to a de novo hearing under subsection (4) of this section.

(4) (a) A party may file a motion with the court requesting that a decision of the decision-maker be modified by the court pursuant to a de novo hearing. A motion for a de novo hearing shall be filed no later than thirty-five days after the date the decision is issued pursuant to subsection (3) of this section.

(b) If a court, in its discretion based on the pleadings filed, grants a party's request for a de novo hearing to modify the decision of the decision-maker and the court substantially upholds the decision of the decision-maker, the party that requested the de novo hearing shall pay the fees and costs of the other party and shall pay the fees and costs incurred by the decision-maker in connection with the request for de novo hearing, unless the court finds that it would be manifestly unjust.

(4.5) (a) Within seven days after his or her appointment, the appointed person shall disclose to each party, attorneys of record, and the court any familial, financial, or social relationship that the appointed person has or has had with the child, either party, the attorneys of record, or the judicial officer and, if a relationship exists, the nature of the relationship.

(b) Based on the disclosure required pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (4.5), the court may, in its discretion, terminate the appointment and appoint a different person in the proceedings. A party has seven days from the date of the disclosure to object to the appointment based upon information contained in the disclosure. If a party objects to the appointment, the court shall appoint a different person or confirm the appointment within seven days after the date of the party's objection. If no party timely objects to the appointment, then the appointment is deemed confirmed.

(5) A court order appointing a decision-maker shall be for a specified term; except that the court order shall not appoint a decision-maker for a period of longer than two years. If an order fails to specify the length of the court-ordered appointment, it shall be construed to be two years from the date of appointment. Upon agreement of the parties, the court may extend, modify, or terminate the appointment, including extending the appointment beyond two years from the date of the original appointment. The court may terminate the appointment of the decision-maker at any time for good cause. The court shall allow the decision-maker to withdraw at any time.

(6) A court order appointing a decision-maker shall include apportionment of the responsibility for payment of all of the decision-maker's fees between the parties. The state shall not be responsible for payment of fees to a decision-maker appointed pursuant to this section.

(7) (a) A decision-maker shall be immune from liability in any claim for injury that arises out of an act or omission of the decision-maker occurring during the performance of his or her duties or during the performance of an act that the decision-maker reasonably believed was within the scope of his or her duties unless the act or omission causing such injury was willful and wanton.

(b) Nothing in this subsection (7) shall be construed to bar a party from asserting a claim related to the reasonableness or accuracy of any fee charged or time billed by a decision-maker.

(c) (I) In a judicial proceeding, administrative proceeding, or other similar proceeding, a decision-maker shall not be competent to testify and may not be required to produce records as to any statement, conduct, or decision, that occurred during the decision-maker's appointment, to the same extent as a judge of a court of this state acting in a judicial capacity.

(II) This paragraph (c) shall not apply:

(A) To the extent testimony or production of records by the decision-maker is necessary to determine the claim of the decision-maker against a party; or

(B) To the extent testimony or production of records by the decision-maker is necessary to determine a claim of a party against a decision-maker; or

(C) When both parties have agreed, in writing, to authorize the decision-maker to testify.

(d) If a person commences a civil action against a decision-maker arising from the services of the decision-maker, or if a person seeks to compel a decision-maker to testify or produce records in violation of paragraph (c) of this subsection (7), and the court decides that the decision-maker is immune from civil liability or that the decision-maker is not competent to testify, the court shall award to the decision-maker reasonable attorney fees and reasonable expenses of litigation.

(8) The decision-maker shall comply with any applicable provisions set forth in chief justice directives and any other practice or ethical standards established by rule, statute, or licensing board that regulates the decision-maker.

14-10-128.5. Appointment of arbitrator - de novo hearing of award. (1) With the consent of all parties, the court may appoint an arbitrator to resolve disputes between the parties concerning the parties' minor or dependent children, including but not limited to parenting time, nonrecurring adjustments to child support, and disputed parental decisions. Notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary, all awards entered by an arbitrator appointed pursuant to this section shall be in writing. The arbitrator's award shall be effective immediately upon entry and shall continue in effect until vacated by the arbitrator pursuant to part 2 of article 22 of title 13, C.R.S., modified or corrected by the arbitrator pursuant to part 2 of article 22 of title 13, C.R.S., or modified by the court pursuant to a de novo hearing under subsection (2) of this section.

(2) Any party may apply to have the arbitrator's award vacated, modified, or corrected pursuant to part 2 of article 22 of title 13, C.R.S., or may move the court to modify the arbitrator's award pursuant to a de novo hearing concerning such award by filing a motion for hearing no later than thirty-five days after the date of the award. In circumstances in which a party moves for a de novo hearing by the court, if the court, in its discretion based on the pleadings filed, grants the motion and the court substantially upholds the decision of the arbitrator, the party that requested the de novo hearing shall be ordered to pay the fees and costs of the other party and the fees of the arbitrator incurred in responding to the application or motion unless the court finds that it would be manifestly unjust.

While issues of child custody, visitation, child support, and other matters relating to the children are arbitrable, the trial court retains jurisdiction to decide all issues relating to the children de novo upon the request of either party. In re Popack, 998 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 2000).

Because there was no arbitration award issued pursuant to this section, mother was not entitled to a trial de novo. Although the order of appointment clothed the parenting coordinator with arbitration power, the court found no arbitration occurred. In re Kniskern, 80 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2003).

Trial court is not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing on an arbitrator's request for payment of fees. Although the necessity or reasonableness of an arbitrator's fees may be subject to dispute, the parties' due process rights to litigate the scope of the services and the amounts requested are well protected by written motion practice. In re Eggert, 53 P.3d 794 (Colo. App. 2002).

Requests for de novo review must be filed within 30 days after the arbitrator's ruling. This conclusion is consistent with the plain meaning of the statute since it specifically refers to the Uniform Arbitration Act of 1975 that creates the 30-day time frame. In re Schmitt, 89 P.3d 510 (Colo. App. 2004).

14-10-129. Modification of parenting time. (1) (a) (I) Except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (I) of paragraph (b) of this subsection (1), the court may make or modify an order granting or denying parenting time rights whenever such order or modification would serve the best interests of the child.

(II) In those cases in which a party with whom the child resides a majority of the time is seeking to relocate with the child to a residence that substantially changes the geographical ties between the child and the other party, the court, in determining whether the modification of parenting time is in the best interests of the child, shall take into account all relevant factors, including those enumerated in paragraph (c) of subsection (2) of this section. The party who is intending to relocate with the child to a residence that substantially changes the geographical ties between the child and the other party shall provide the other party with written notice as soon as practicable of his or her intent to relocate, the location where the party intends to reside, the reason for the relocation, and a proposed revised parenting time plan. A court hearing on any modification of parenting time due to an intent to relocate shall be given a priority on the court's docket.

(b) (I) The court shall not restrict a parent's parenting time rights unless it finds that the parenting time would endanger the child's physical health or significantly impair the child's emotional development. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect grandparent visitation granted pursuant to section 19-1-117, C.R.S.

(II) The provisions of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b) shall not apply in those cases in which a party with whom the child resides a majority of the time is intending to relocate with the child to a residence that substantially changes the geographical ties between the child and the other party.

(1.5) If a motion for a substantial modification of parenting time which also changes the party with whom the child resides a majority of the time has been filed, whether or not it has been granted, no subsequent motion may be filed within two years after disposition of the prior motion unless the court decides, on the basis of affidavits, that the child's present environment may endanger the child's physical health or significantly impair the child's emotional development or that the party with whom the child resides a majority of the time is intending to relocate with the child to a residence that substantially changes the geographical ties between the child and the other party.

(2) The court shall not modify a prior order concerning parenting time that substantially changes the parenting time as well as changes the party with whom the child resides a majority of the time unless it finds, upon the basis of facts that have arisen since the prior decree or that were unknown to the court at the time of the prior decree, that a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or the party with whom the child resides the majority of the time and that the modification is necessary to serve the best interests of the child. In applying these standards, the court shall retain the parenting time schedule established in the prior decree unless:

(a) The parties agree to the modification; or

(b) The child has been integrated into the family of the moving party with the consent of the other party; or

(c) The party with whom the child resides a majority of the time is intending to relocate with the child to a residence that substantially changes the geographical ties between the child and the other party. A court hearing on any modification of parenting time due to an intent to relocate shall be given a priority on the court's docket. In determining whether the modification of parenting time is in the best interests of the child, the court shall take into account all relevant factors, including whether a party has been a perpetrator of domestic violence as that term is defined in section 14-10-124 (1.3), which factor shall be supported by a preponderance of the evidence, whether such domestic violence occurred before or after the prior decree, and all other factors enumerated in section 14-10-124 (1.5) (a) and:

- (I) The reasons why the party wishes to relocate with the child;
- (II) The reasons why the opposing party is objecting to the proposed relocation;
- (III) The history and quality of each party's relationship with the child since any previous parenting time order;
- (IV) The educational opportunities for the child at the existing location and at the proposed new location;
- (V) The presence or absence of extended family at the existing location and at the proposed new location;
- (VI) Any advantages of the child remaining with the primary caregiver;
- (VII) The anticipated impact of the move on the child;
- (VIII) Whether the court will be able to fashion a reasonable parenting time schedule if the change requested is permitted; and
- (IX) Any other relevant factors bearing on the best interests of the child; or

(d) The child's present environment endangers the child's physical health or significantly impairs the child's emotional development and the harm likely to be caused by a change of environment is outweighed by the advantage of a change to the child.

(3) (a) If a parent has been convicted of any of the crimes listed in paragraph (b) of this subsection (3) or convicted in another state or jurisdiction, including but not limited to a military or federal jurisdiction, of an offense that, if committed in Colorado, would constitute any of the crimes listed in paragraph (b) of this subsection (3), or convicted of any crime in which the underlying factual basis has been found by the court on the record to include an act of domestic violence, as defined in section 18-6-800.3 (1), C.R.S., that constitutes a potential threat or endangerment to the child, the other parent, or any other person who has been granted custody of or parental responsibility for the child pursuant to court order may file an objection to parenting time with the court. The other parent or other person having custody or parental responsibility shall give notice to the offending parent of such objection as provided by the Colorado rules of civil procedure, and the offending parent shall have twenty-one days from such notice to respond. If the offending parent fails to respond within twenty-one days, the parenting time rights of such parent shall be suspended until further order of the court. If such parent responds and objects, a hearing shall be held within thirty-five days of such response. The court may determine that any offending parent who responds and objects shall be responsible for the costs associated with any hearing, including reasonable attorney fees incurred by the other parent. In making such determination, the court shall consider the criminal record of the offending parent and any actions to harass the other parent and the children, any mitigating actions by the offending parent, and whether the actions of either parent have been substantially frivolous, substantially groundless, or substantially vexatious. The offending parent shall have the burden at the hearing to prove that parenting time by such parent is in the best interests of the child or children.

(b) The provisions of paragraph (a) of this subsection (3) shall apply to the following crimes:

- (I) Murder in the first degree, as defined in section 18-3-102, C.R.S.;
- (II) Murder in the second degree, as defined in section 18-3-103, C.R.S.;
- (III) Enticement of a child, as defined in section 18-3-305, C.R.S.;
- (IV) (A) Sexual assault, as described in section 18-3-402, C.R.S.; and

(B) Sexual assault in the first degree, as described in section 18-3-402, C.R.S., as it existed prior to July 1, 2000;

(V) Sexual assault in the second degree, as described in section 18-3-403, C.R.S., as it existed prior to July 1, 2000;

(VI) (A) Unlawful sexual contact if the victim is compelled to submit, as described in section 18-3-404 (2), C.R.S.; and

(B) Sexual assault in the third degree if the victim is compelled to submit, as described in section 18-3-404 (2), C.R.S., as it existed prior to July 1, 2000;

(VII) Sexual assault on a child, as defined in section 18-3-405, C.R.S.;

(VIII) Incest, as described in section 18-6-301, C.R.S.;

(X) Child abuse, as described in section 18-6-401 (7) (a) (I) to (7) (a) (IV), C.R.S.;

(XI) Trafficking in children, as defined in section 18-3-502, C.R.S.;

(XII) Sexual exploitation of children, as defined in section 18-6-403, C.R.S.;

(XIII) Procurement of a child for sexual exploitation, as defined in section 18-6-404, C.R.S.;

(XIV) Soliciting for child prostitution, as defined in section 18-7-402, C.R.S.;

(XV) Pandering of a child, as defined in section 18-7-403, C.R.S.;

(XVI) Procurement of a child, as defined in section 18-7-403.5, C.R.S.;

(XIX) Inducement of child prostitution, as defined in section 18-7-405.5, C.R.S.;

(XX) Patronizing a prostituted child, as defined in section 18-7-406, C.R.S.

(c) If the party was convicted in another state or jurisdiction of an offense that, if committed in Colorado, would constitute an offense listed in subparagraphs (III) to (XX) of paragraph (b) of this subsection (3), the court shall order that party to submit to a sex-offense-specific evaluation and a parental risk assessment in Colorado and the court shall consider the recommendations of the evaluation and the assessment in any order the court makes relating to parenting time or parental contact. The convicted party shall pay for the costs of the evaluation and the assessment.

(4) A motion to restrict parenting time or parental contact with a parent which alleges that the child is in imminent physical or emotional danger due to the parenting time or contact by the parent shall be heard and ruled upon by the court not later than seven days after the day of the filing of the motion. Any parenting time which occurs during such seven-day period after the filing of such a motion shall be supervised by an unrelated third party deemed suitable by the court or by a licensed mental health professional, as defined in section 14-10-127 (1) (b). This subsection (4) shall not apply to any motion which is filed pursuant to subsection (3) of this section.

(5) If the court finds that the filing of a motion under subsection (4) of this section was substantially frivolous, substantially groundless, or substantially vexatious, the court shall require the moving party to pay the reasonable and necessary attorney fees and costs of the other party.

Annotator's note. Cases relevant to § 14-10-129 decided prior to its earliest source, L. 71, p. 531, § 1, have been included in the annotations to this section.

Best interests of child must predominate in any custody determination. In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

The court did not abuse its discretion in adopting an agreement and modifying the parenting time despite the fact that the agreement was not reduced to writing or signed. This section allows the trial court to modify parenting time whenever doing so would be in the child's best interests. In re Barker, 251 P.3d 591 (Colo. App. 2010).

Determining whether to apply the best-interests standard or the endangerment standard may involve inquiry into both the quantitative and the qualitative aspects of the proposed change to parenting time, as well as the reason or reasons advanced for the change. In re West, 94 P.3d 1248 (Colo. App. 2004).

While endangerment will necessarily encompass best interests, few best interests arguments will show endangerment. In re West, 94 P.3d 1248 (Colo. App. 2004).

Before parenting time may be completely eliminated, court must consider both the endangerment standard and the best interests of the child. Although trial court may allocate parenting time substantially to one parent under the endangerment standard, it may not completely deny other parent parenting time under the best interests standard without express consideration of whether doing so is the least detrimental alternative. In re Hatton, 160 P.3d 326 (Colo. App. 2007).

A reduction in parenting time resulting from the other parent's relocation with the child is not to be construed as a restriction requiring the court to apply the endangerment standard set forth in subsection (1)(b). In re DeZalia, 151 P.3d 647 (Colo. App. 2006).

This section eliminates the In re Francis test in relocation cases, including the presumption in favor of the majority-time parent. The trial court, however, abused its discretion in applying this section to the facts of this case, and such abuse of discretion unconstitutionally infringed upon mother's right to travel. In re Ciesluk, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

The well-being of child rather than reward or punishment of parent ought to guide every aspect of a custody determination, including visitation. In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

In the best interests of a minor child, a trial court may deny visitation rights. Grosso v. Grosso, 149 Colo. 183, 368 P.2d 561 (1962).

Both parents' constitutional interests, the right to travel and the right to the care and control of the child, as well as the best interests of the child, will be best protected if each parent shares equally in the burden of demonstrating how the child's best interests will be affected by a proposed relocation. In re Ciesluk, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

This procedure applies to a parent who shares parenting time equally with the other parent but who desires to relocate with the child and to modify parenting time so as to become the majority time parent. In re DeZalia, 151 P.3d 647 (Colo. App. 2006).

It is incumbent upon the trial court to consider all the relevant factors to determine what arrangement will serve the child's best interests. Though the best interests of the child are of primary importance in making this determination, they do not automatically overcome the constitutional interests of the parents, which must be weighed against each other in the best-interests analysis. In re Ciesluk, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005); In re Newell, 192 P.3d 529 (Colo. App. 2008).

Presumption that parent has "first and prior" right to custody of children is not implicated when dispute is between mother and father and not mother and stepmother. As between two fit parents, duty of court is to weigh the wishes of both to determine what is in the best interests of the children. In re DePalma, 176 P.3d 829 (Colo. App. 2007).

Where a parent's role as day-to-day caregiver of a minor is relinquished through contested or uncontested judicial proceedings and with no indication by the court that the relinquishment was intended to be temporary, the parent has enjoyed and exercised his or her fundamental rights. In re M.J.K., 200 P.3d 1106 (Colo. App. 2008).

Subsequent application of the statutory standards for terminating guardianships or modifying allocations of parental responsibility, which standards certainly allow a court to consider the relationship between the biological parent and the child, does not violate the parent's constitutional rights. In re M.J.K., 200 P.3d 1106 (Colo. App. 2008).

To hold otherwise would effectively afford a parent who relinquishes his or her day-to-day parenting responsibilities through judicial processes a substantial, if not automatic, right to terminate a guardianship or modify an allocation of parental rights with no regard for the perhaps significant impact on his or her children. In re M.J.K., 200 P.3d 1106 (Colo. App. 2008).

Where father wished to delegate his parenting time to his new wife while deployed in Iraq, the court did not err by considering first the presumption that father was acting in the best interests of the children because father was not attempting to impermissibly establish parental rights for his new wife over the established parental rights of the children's mother. In re DePalma, 176 P.3d 829 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court abused its discretion when it prematurely concluded that it would be in the child's best interests to remain in close proximity to both parents. The effect of this conclusion was to create a presumption in father's favor contrary to the legislative intent of subsection (2)(c). In re Ciesluk, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

It is against the policy of the law in Colorado to permit the removal of a child from the jurisdiction, unless his best interests would be served thereby. Tanttila v. Tanttila, 152 Colo. 445, 382 P.2d 798 (1963); In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

Before a court may allow a majority-time parent to relocate with the child, subsection (2)(c) dictates that the court must consider 21 relevant factors, including 11 factors listed in § 14-10-124 (1.5)(a), and nine factors in subsection (2)(c) specifically tailored to modification proceedings arising out of a majority-time parent's desire to relocate. In re Ciesluk, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

Where it was established that removal of the child from the jurisdiction would be conducive to the child's best interests, then the court should have permitted removal from the jurisdiction. Tanttila v. Tanttila, 152 Colo. 445, 382 P.2d 798 (1963).

In determining what was for the best welfare of a child of tender years, the courts considered not only food, clothing, shelter, care, education, and environment, but also kept in mind that every such child was entitled to the love, nurture, advice, and training of both father and mother, and to deny to the child an opportunity to know, associate with, love, and be loved by either parent may have been a more serious ill than to refuse him in some part those things which money can buy. Tanttila v. Tanttila, 152 Colo. 445, 382 P.2d 798 (1963).

Trial court need not make specific findings on each factor when considering the statutory factors that affect the child's best interest, so long as the court's findings indicate the court considered all pertinent factors and enable the appellate court to understand the basis of the trial court's order. In re Ciesluk, 100 P.3d 527 (Colo. App. 2004), rev'd on other grounds, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

Trial court can determine relative weight to be given each relevant factor in making a decision regarding parenting time. As decisions regarding parenting time are matters within the sound discretion of the trial court, it follows that it is within the discretion of the trial court to determine the weight to be given to each relevant factor in making a decision regarding the effect relocation of the primary residential parent and the child would have on the parenting time of the other parent. In re Ciesluk, 100 P.3d 527 (Colo. App. 2004), rev'd on other grounds, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

Where the trial court specifically found that the best interests of the child would be served in permitting her removal to California, and there was evidence to support this finding, a change in the father's visitation privileges was an unfortunate, but not unusual, result of a broken marriage. Nelson v. Card, 162 Colo. 274, 425 P.2d 276 (1967).

Determination of whether a child should relocate with one parent or remain in Colorado with another depends on assessment of the child's best interests, and the court's decision, based on special advocate's research and opinions concerning the factors specified in § 14-10-124, was supported by the record. In re Graham, 121 P.3d 279 (Colo. App. 2005).

Where, for all practical purposes, an order authorizing removal of the children of the parties to another state eliminated any opportunity for visitation by the father, except during summer vacations, and there was no showing of any substantial reasons of health, cultural opportunities, or other advantages contributing to the best interests of the children justifying such removal, such order was erroneous. Tanttila v. Tanttila, 152 Colo. 445, 382 P.2d 798 (1963).

The suggestion, advanced for the first time in the supreme court, that defendant having been denied visitation rights should be relieved of the duty to support his minor child was without merit. Grosso v. Grosso, 149 Colo. 183, 368 P.2d 561 (1962).

Parent seeking enlarged visitation rights need not establish that child's present circumstances are harmful. When the issue is whether visitation rights should be enlarged, the suggestion that a parent seeking greater visitation rights must establish that the child's present circumstances are harmful is not only not authorized by this section but, if adopted, would defeat the legislative policy. In re Adamson, 626 P.2d 739 (Colo. App. 1981).

Evidence sufficient for denial of motion to reduce father's visitation rights. Where the court found that the visitation rights previously granted to the father would not endanger the children's physical health or significantly impair their emotional development, this was sufficient to warrant denial of mother's motion which sought to reduce father's visitation rights. Manson v. Manson, 35 Colo. App. 144, 529 P.2d 1345 (1974).

Motion under subsection (4) does not require any third party verification. A party's verification suffices under the statute, therefore the trial court erred in dismissing father's motion under subsection (4) without a hearing. In re Slowinski, 199 P.3d 48 (Colo. App. 2008).

Visitation rights within sound discretion of court. The question of visitation rights is within the sound discretion of the district court, taking into account the best interests of the children. In re Mann, 655 P.2d 814 (Colo. 1982); In re Schenck, 39 P.3d 1250 (Colo. App. 2001).

Visitation orders are within the sound discretion of the trial court. This discretion must, however, be exercised consistently with the express public policy of encouraging contact between each parent and the children. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

The determination of parenting time is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, taking into consideration the child's best interests and the policy of encouraging the parent-child relationship. In re Velasquez, 773 P.2d 635 (Colo. App. 1989); In re Finer, 920 P.2d 325 (Colo. App. 1996).

Even a parent who is unfit to be the custodial parent may be entitled to liberal visitation rights. In re Jarman, 752 P.2d 1068 (Colo. App. 1988).

Subsection (3)(a) does not usurp the court's authority to make an individualized determination of the best interests of the child after a hearing. Thus, it does not presume that termination of parenting time and contact is in the best interests of every sexually abused child, nor does it require that the court give greater weight to any particular opinion or testimony. People ex rel. A.R.D., 43 P.3d 632 (Colo. App. 2001).

Permanent orders that substantially reduce the amount of parenting time originally specified in the temporary orders are not subject to the endangerment standard but rather the best interests of the child standard. In re Fickling, 100 P.3d 571 (Colo. App. 2004).

Trial court should have applied the standard for an original determination of visitation, which is based on the best interests of the child, where the order awarding parenting time to stepfather was a temporary order. Although paternity decree operated as a final order and permanent allocation as to paternity and custody, its award of parenting time to stepfather was a temporary order because the parties had not reached an agreement on a permanent parenting time schedule but had agreed to maintain the interim schedule and work toward a permanent one. The fact that the parties adhered to the schedule for nearly three years did not change the nature of the order. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

Trial court erred by failing to afford parents their due process rights because court did not presume parents were acting in the child's best interests, but instead placed upon them the burden of demonstrating that visitation with stepfather would endanger the child; the court did not find that "special circumstances" existed which justified the intrusion on the parents' rights; and the court did not apply a clear and convincing evidence standard. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

Even if stepfather was a psychological parent, stepfather failed to present evidence to rebut presumption that parents were acting in their child's best interests by terminating stepfather's visitation and failed to show or proffer evidence of special circumstances that would justify trial court's order allowing visitation against the wishes of the parents. The visitation order infringed upon parents' fundamental right to direct the upbringing of their child. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

The court did not err in applying the best interests standard set forth in subsection (1)(a)(II) and considering the factors mandated under that subsection rather than applying the endangerment standard set forth in subsection (1)(b)(I) to mother's motion to relocate the children where children did not reside with either parent a majority of the time. In re DeZalia, 151 P.3d 647 (Colo. App. 2006).

Court abused its discretion in limiting father's visitation rights. Where the trial court found that the father was fit and proper to be a custodial parent and there was no finding by the court, nor anything in the record to indicate that reasonable visitation by the father would endanger the child's physical health or significantly impair her emotional development, visitation limited to one week per year to be held in jurisdiction of mother's residence was unreasonable and an abuse of discretion. In re McGee, 44 Colo. App. 330, 613 P.2d 348 (1980).

The trial court's order limiting visitation to two days per month during the school year amounted to an abuse of discretion since it reduced the father's visitation rights and was contrary to the public policy of encouraging frequent visitation. In re Velasquez, 773 P.2d 635 (Colo. App. 1989).

Trial court's order granting wife parenting time with child only for one week at Christmas and four weeks each summer is unreasonable considering wife's extensive time spent with the child prior to the entry of permanent orders. In re Finer, 920 P.2d 325 (Colo. App. 1996).

Modification of parenting plan to return to supervised visits required a finding of endangerment by the trial court, which it failed to do. In re Parr, 240 P.3d 509 (Colo. App. 2010).

Trial court had no authority to delegate to the child's psychiatrist the decision when overnight visitation could begin to occur. In re Elmer, 936 P.2d 617 (Colo. App. 1997).

It was improper for trial court to delegate decisions regarding parenting time to the guardian and the therapist, and then, when the guardian withdrew, to the therapist, alone. Trial court's order that effectively defers to the family therapist the trial court's decisions as to when the mother should be allowed to participate in family therapy or to exercise unsupervised parenting time constitutes an improper delegation of the court's authority. In re D.R.V-A, 976 P.2d 881 (Colo. App. 1999).

Trial court may not delegate to one parent or a third party decision-making responsibility regarding other parent's exercise of parenting time, even assuming that parent or third party were to rely on professionals for reasonable advice in his or her decisions. Decisions regarding the exercise of parenting time are the sole discretion of the court and may not be allocated to a third party, even a parent. In re Hatton, 160 P.3d 326 (Colo. App. 2007).

But a court's discretion to impose conditions precedent to the exercise of parenting time is distinguishable from the improper delegation of decision-making authority. Court did not err when it limited father's right to file motion for modification of parenting time until after he completed sex offender treatment program. Such limitation did not deny the father access to the courts. People ex rel. A.R.D., 43 P.3d 632 (Colo. App. 2001).

Award of custody to breastfeeding mother not sex bias. Sex bias is not readily found in a visitation order awarding custody to a mother who is breastfeeding her child. In re Norton, 640 P.2d 254 (Colo. App. 1981).

Two-year rule in § 14-10-131 does not apply to motions for modification of visitation rights under this section. Manson v. Manson, 35 Colo. App. 144, 529 P.2d 1345 (1974).

In a dissolution of marriage proceeding, the trial court may grant visitation privileges to a stepparent or surrogate parent under the following conditions: (1) The nonparent is jurisdictionally capable of litigating custody under § 14-10-123 (1); (2) the nonparent has acted in a custodial and parental capacity toward the minor child; and (3) visitation would be in the minor child's best interest. In re Duren, 854 P.2d 1352 (Colo. App. 1992).

A court lacks authority to proceed under subsection (4) after failing to conduct the hearing as required by statute. Therefore, the automatic sanction of supervised visitation terminates as a result of failing to conduct a timely hearing. In re Slowinski, 199 P.3d 48 (Colo. App. 2008).

The trial court abused its discretion by effectively reducing father's visitation rights where court limited the father to four days per four-week period where he previously had portions of eight days in any four-week period and there was no evidence that the children would benefit by this reduction in visitation. This restriction was both contrary to the public policy of encouraging frequent visitation and to the evidence in the record. In re Lester, 791 P.2d 1244 (Colo. App. 1990).

Where trial court made no finding that father's conduct in his homosexual lifestyle endangered the child physically or impaired the child's emotional development, father could not be precluded from having overnight guests during his parenting time or taking child to gay environment of father's church. In re Dorworth, 33 P.3d 1260 (Colo. App. 2001).

Parenting time issues related to guardianship may be determined in accordance with this section by the probate court in which the guardianship was established. People ex rel. A.R.D., 43 P.3d 632 (Colo. App. 2001).

Entry of permanent orders does not trigger the start of the two-year period during which motions for modification of parenting time are limited. The initial order concerning parenting time is not a motion seeking "substantial modification of parenting time". In re F.A.G., 148 P.3d 375 (Colo. App. 2006).

Order allowing father to delegate his parenting time to new wife during his deployment to Iraq does not violate mother's constitutional right to care, custody, or control of the children because it does not provide the stepmother with any legal rights. In re DePalma, 176 P.3d 829 (Colo. App. 2007).

Right of first refusal in parties' parenting plan not violated by allowing father to offer time to stepmother before offering it to mother if inconsistent with the parenting plan as a whole. Here, where father wished to delegate his parenting time to stepmother while he was deployed in Iraq, the court held that given the circumstances and evidence presented, requiring him to offer children to mother during that time would be inconsistent with the parenting plan as a whole and not in the children's best interests. In re DePalma, 176 P.3d 829 (Colo. App. 2007).

Prohibition on use of medical marijuana while parenting constitutes a modification to existing parenting plan rather than a restriction that requires a finding of endangerment. Because the prohibition is consistent with the parenting plan and did not present a qualitative change in the nature of the father's parenting time, it does not constitute a restriction of parenting time. In re Parr, 240 P.3d 509 (Colo. App. 2010).

Applied in Wise v. Bravo, 666 F.2d 1328 (10th Cir. 1981); In re Brown, 626 P.2d 755 (Colo. App. 1981); In re Casida v. Casida, 659 P.2d 56 (Colo. App. 1982).

14-10-129.5. Disputes concerning parenting time. (1) Within thirty-five days after the filing of a verified motion by either parent or upon the court's own motion alleging that a parent is not complying with a parenting time order or schedule and setting forth the possible sanctions that may be imposed by the court, the court shall determine from the verified motion, and response to the motion, if any, whether there has been or is likely to be substantial or continuing noncompliance with the parenting time order or schedule and either:

- (a) Deny the motion, if there is an inadequate allegation; or
  - (b) Set the matter for hearing with notice to the parents of the time and place of the hearing as expeditiously as possible; or
  - (c) Require the parties to seek mediation and report back to the court on the results of the mediation within sixty-three days. Mediation services shall be provided in accordance with section 13-22-305, C.R.S. At the end of the mediation period, the court may approve an agreement reached by the parents or shall set the matter for hearing.
- (2) After the hearing, if a court finds that a parent has not complied with the parenting time order or schedule and has violated the court order, the court, in the best interests of the child, shall issue an order that may include but not be limited to one or more of the following orders:

- (a) An order imposing additional terms and conditions that are consistent with the court's previous order; except that the court shall separate the issues of child support and parenting time and shall not condition child support upon parenting time;
- (b) An order modifying the previous order to meet the best interests of the child;
- (b.3) An order requiring either parent or both parents to attend a parental education program as described in section 14-10-123.7, at the expense of the noncomplying parent;
- (b.7) An order requiring the parties to participate in family counseling pursuant to section 13-22-313, C.R.S., at the expense of the noncomplying parent;
- (c) An order requiring the violator to post bond or security to insure future compliance;
- (d) An order requiring that makeup parenting time be provided for the aggrieved parent or child under the following conditions:
  - (I) That such parenting time is of the same type and duration of parenting time as that which was denied, including but not limited to parenting time during weekends, on holidays, and on weekdays and during the summer;
  - (II) That such parenting time is made up within six months after the noncompliance occurs, unless the period of time or holiday can not be made up within six months in which case the parenting time shall be made up within one year after the noncompliance occurs;
  - (III) That such parenting time takes place at the time and in the manner chosen by the aggrieved parent if it is in the best interests of the child;
- (e) An order finding the parent who did not comply with the parenting time schedule in contempt of court and imposing a fine or jail sentence;
- (e.5) An order imposing on the noncomplying parent a civil fine not to exceed one hundred dollars per incident of denied parenting time;
- (f) An order scheduling a hearing for modification of the existing order concerning custody or the allocation of parental responsibilities with respect to a motion filed pursuant to section 14-10-131;
- (g) (Deleted by amendment, L. 97, p. 970, § 1, effective August 6, 1997.)

(h) Any other order that may promote the best interests of the child or children involved.

(3) Any civil fines collected as a result of an order entered pursuant to paragraph (e.5) of subsection (2) of this section shall be transmitted to the state treasurer, who shall credit the same to the dispute resolution fund created in section 13-22-310, C.R.S.

(4) In addition to any other order entered pursuant to subsection (2) of this section, the court shall order a parent who has failed to provide court-ordered parenting time or to exercise court-ordered parenting time to pay to the aggrieved party, attorney's fees, court costs, and expenses that are associated with an action brought pursuant to this section. In the event the parent responding to an action brought pursuant to this section is found not to be in violation of the parenting time order or schedule, the court may order the petitioning parent to pay the court costs, attorney fees, and expenses incurred by such responding parent. Nothing in this section shall preclude a party's right to a separate and independent legal action in tort.

Notice of potential punitive sanctions is all the notice required to satisfy due process under section. Notice of possible remedial orders of the court is not required. In re Herrera, 772 P.2d 676 (Colo. App. 1989).

Wages lost by parent for attending contempt proceedings under section are a reimbursable expense. In re Herrera, 772 P.2d 676 (Colo. App. 1989).

Bond required to insure future compliance of parent need not be dismissed by court upon dismissal of contempt citation. In re Herrera, 772 P.2d 676 (Colo. App. 1989).

The plain language of this section requires, upon the filing of a motion to clarify visitation, that the court deny the motion, conduct a hearing, or refer the matter to mediation. Where cross motions of mother and father sought to modify father's visitation, the trial court erred in granting the father's motion and denying the mother's motion. In re Williams-Off, 867 P.2d 205 (Colo. App. 1993).

Trial court erred in imposing sanctions based upon an unverified motion. In re Slowinski, 199 P.3d 48 (Colo. App. 2008).

The trial court abused its discretion by conditioning child support on an anticipated lack of parenting time when mother was planning to move to Singapore with children and father was entitled to "reasonable and liberal" parenting time. In re Hoffman, 878 P.2d 103 (Colo. App. 1994).

Order of abatement of child support was not proper as an award of actual travel expenses when the abatement order was not premised on any actual expenses incurred as a result of the mother's failure to provide parenting time but only on anticipated future expenses. In re Hoffman, 878 P.2d 103 (Colo. App. 1994).

If a parenting time dispute gives rise to a tort claim for damages, that claim must be brought, not in the dissolution court (which is authorized to award only attorney's fees, court costs, and expenses), but in a court that has jurisdiction over the parties and subject matter. Therefore, the court erred in dismissing father's tort claims under C.R.C.P. 12(b)(1). The court had subject matter jurisdiction over those claims, even though the claims arose from a dispute over parenting time. Marshall v. Marshall, 183 P.3d 699 (Colo. App. 2008).

14-10-130. Judicial supervision. (1) Except as otherwise agreed by the parties in writing at the time of the decree concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities with respect to a child, the person or persons with responsibility for decision-making may determine the child's upbringing, including his or her education, health care, and religious training, unless the court, after hearing and upon motion by the other party, finds that, in the absence of a specific limitation of the person's or persons' decision-making authority, the child's physical health would be endangered or the child's emotional development significantly impaired.

(2) If both parties or all contestants agree to the order or if the court finds that in the absence of the order the child's physical health would be endangered or the child's emotional development significantly impaired, the court may order the county or district welfare department or the court's probation department to exercise continuing supervision over the case to assure that the terms relating to the allocation of parental responsibilities with respect to the child or parenting time terms of the decree are carried out.

Section does not deny noncustodial parent equal protection. The contention that this section, which gives the custodial parent the right to determine the child's upbringing, "including his education, health care, and religious training", denies to a noncustodial parent the equal protection of the law is totally without merit. Rhoades v. Rhoades, 188 Colo. 423, 535 P.2d 1122 (1975).

Premarital agreements concerning religious training of unborn children are unenforceable in courts. In re Wolfert, 42 Colo. App. 433, 598 P.2d 524 (1979).

"Joint selection of schools" provision in separation agreement is unenforceable and the custodial parent retains the ultimate authority to select the child's school. Griffin v. Griffin, 699 P.2d 407 (Colo. 1985).

Section does not deny noncustodial parent first amendment rights where noncustodial parent does not allege physical or emotional harm to child and custodial parent approves and ratifies court's order specifying terms of mental health counseling for child. In re Jaeger, 883 P.2d 577 (Colo. App. 1994).

Ability to permit child to initiate litigation is within authority of custodial parent only. Montoya by Montoya v. Bebensee, 761 P.2d 285 (Colo. App. 1988).

Order allowing noncustodial grandparent to take children to church was invalid where unsupported by any finding that, absent order, children's physical or mental health would be at risk. In re Oswald, 847 P.2d 251 (Colo. App. 1993).

Grandparent visitation statute does not authorize an order impinging on custodial parent's rights under this section. In re Oswald, 847 P.2d 251 (Colo. App. 1993).

Order tending to negate custodial parent's preference concerning religion is unconstitutional, even if parent chooses to provide no religious instruction at all. In re Oswald, 847 P.2d 251 (Colo. App. 1993).

14-10-131. Modification of custody or decision-making responsibility. (1) If a motion for modification of a custody decree or a decree allocating decision-making responsibility has been filed, whether or not it was granted, no subsequent motion may be filed within two years after disposition of the prior motion unless the court decides, on the basis of affidavits, that there is reason to believe that a continuation of the prior decree of custody or order allocating decision-making responsibility may endanger the child's physical health or significantly impair the child's emotional development.

(2) The court shall not modify a custody decree or a decree allocating decision-making responsibility unless it finds, upon the basis of facts that have arisen since the prior decree or that were unknown to the court at the time of the prior decree, that a change has occurred in the circumstances of the child or the child's custodian or party to whom decision-making responsibility was allocated and that the modification is necessary to serve the best interests of the child. In applying these standards, the court shall retain the allocation of decision-making responsibility established by the prior decree unless:

- (a) The parties agree to the modification;
- (b) The child has been integrated into the family of the petitioner with the consent of the other party and such situation warrants a modification of the allocation of decision-making responsibilities;
- (b.5) There has been a modification in the parenting time order pursuant to section 14-10-129, that warrants a modification of the allocation of decision-making responsibilities;
- (b.7) A party has consistently consented to the other party making individual decisions for the child which decisions the party was to make individually or the parties were to make mutually; or
- (c) The retention of the allocation of decision-making responsibility would endanger the child's physical health or significantly impairs the child's emotional development and the harm likely to be caused by a change of environment is outweighed by the advantage of a change to the child.

Annotator's note. Cases relevant to § 14-10-131 decided prior to its earliest source, L. 71, p. 532, § 1, have been included in the annotations to this section.

This section applies only where there is motion filed by noncustodial parent seeking a change of permanent custody. In re Lawson, 44 Colo. App. 105, 608 P.2d 378 (1980).

This section does not apply to modification of child support. In re Jones, 703 P.2d 1328 (Colo. App. 1985).

This section applies only in cases where a noncustodial parent is seeking a change of custody. In re Dickman, 670 P.2d 20 (Colo. App. 1983).

Where the parties share custody of the child, and both seek sole custody, the statutory criteria for modification in this section are inapplicable. In re Dickman, 670 P.2d 20 (Colo. App. 1983).

The "best interests" standard is governing standard for modification of parental responsibilities where the parents equally share joint legal and physical custody under the original decree and where the permanent orders did not designate a residential parent. In re Stewart, 43 P.3d 740 (Colo. App. 2002).

This section is limited to those cases where a parent has been awarded sole custody and the noncustodial parent is seeking sole custody. Where a parent seeks a change in custody from sole custody to joint custody, § 14-10-131.5 (4) provides the correct standards for determining whether joint custody shall be granted. In re Wall, 868 P.2d 387 (Colo. 1994) (disapproving In re Murphy, 834 P.2d 1287 (Colo. App. 1992), to the extent it holds that § 14-10-131 applies to a motion for a change in the prior order of sole custody to that of joint custody).

When modifying sole custody from one parent to another would result in a residential change in custody, then the “endangerment” standard should apply. In re Francis, 919 P.2d 776 (Colo. 1996).

When the court is considering a removal motion that involves a change in the residential custody of the children, it must similarly apply the “endangerment” standard of this section. In re Francis, 919 P.2d 776 (Colo. 1996).

In a modification of sole to joint custody, the “best interest of the child” standard of § 14-10-131.5 should apply only to those situations where only modification of legal custody and not residential custody is at stake. In re Francis, 919 P.2d 776 (Colo. 1996).

In amending § 14-10-129 in 2001, the general assembly intended to eliminate the three-part test set forth in In re Francis in relocation cases, including the presumption in favor of the majority-time parent seeking to relocate. In re Ciesluk, 113 P.3d 135 (Colo. 2005).

Both prongs of subsection (2)(c) must be established to warrant a change in custody or relocation. In re Steving, 980 P.2d 540 (Colo. App. 1999) (decided under law in effect prior to 1998 amendment).

The endangerment standard applies when removal is sought by a party who shares joint legal custody. In re Garst, 955 P.2d 1056 (Colo. App. 1998).

Where the separation agreement addressed the consequences of mother’s continued alienation of the children from father, the father’s motion was in the nature of enforcement rather than modification. Given that there was no modification, the court correctly ruled that the endangerment or removal standard was inapplicable and that the parenting plan in the decree had already been reviewed under the best interests standard. In re Kniskern, 80 P.3d 939 (Colo. App. 2003).

Two-year rule in this section does not apply to motions for modification of visitation rights under § 14-10-129. Manson v. Manson, 35 Colo. App. 144, 529 P.2d 1345 (1974).

Application where original custody order entered before article enacted. This article does not apply to proceedings between parents to change custody of children when the original order relative to custody was entered pursuant to Colorado statutes in effect prior to this article. Spurling v. Spurling, 34 Colo. App. 341, 526 P.2d 671 (1974).

Subsection (2) is constitutional. Ford v. Ford, 194 Colo. 134, 571 P.2d 717 (1977).

Change in physical custody is tantamount to modification of custody. McGraw v. District Court, 198 Colo. 489, 601 P.2d 1383 (1979); Darnier v. District Court, 680 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1984).

Parties may not alter requirements of this section through an agreement incorporated into the decree of dissolution. In re Johnson, 42 Colo. App. 198, 591 P.2d 1043 (1979).

“Joint selection of schools” provision in separation agreement is unenforceable and the custodial parent retains the ultimate authority to select the child’s school. Griffin v. Griffin, 699 P.2d 407 (Colo. 1985).

There was nothing irrevocable about a custody order. Wiederspahn v. Wiederspahn, 146 Colo. 214, 361 P.2d 125 (1961).

Section does not apply since request was not for decree to place sole custody with a different parent but for change from sole to joint custody. Section 14-10-131.5 applies. In re Wall, 851 P.2d 224 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court should have applied the standard for an original determination of visitation, which is based on the best interests of the child, where the order awarding parenting time to stepfather was a temporary order. Although paternity decree operated as a final order and permanent allocation as to paternity and custody, its award of parenting time to stepfather was a temporary order because the parties had not reached an agreement on a permanent parenting time schedule but had agreed to maintain the interim schedule and work toward a permanent one. The fact that the parties adhered to the schedule for nearly three years did not change the nature of the order. In re C.T.G., 179 P.3d 213 (Colo. App. 2007).

Applied in In re Rinow, 624 P.2d 365 (Colo. App. 1981); In re Eckman, 645 P.2d 866 (Colo. App. 1982); In re Davis, 656 P.2d 42 (Colo. App. 1982).

II. PROCEDURE.

An ex parte order of court changing the custody of children was void because a parent cannot be deprived of the custody of his or her children without the notice required by due process of law. Parker v. Parker, 142 Colo. 416, 350 P.2d 1067 (1960); Ashlock v. District Court, 717 P.2d 483 (Colo. 1986).

Section limits scope of inquiry. For the sake of continuity and stability, this section limits the scope of inquiry to the change in circumstances of the child or the custodial parent, and dictates that “the court shall retain the custodian established by the prior decree” absent the showing required by subsection (2)(c). In re Larrison, 38 Colo. App. 408, 561 P.2d 17 (1976).

III. CHANGE OF CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. In General.

Repeated decisions of the supreme court authorized a modification of a custodial order where there was a change in circumstances and conditions, and the modification would have been beneficial to the minor. Bird v. Bird, 132 Colo. 116, 285 P.2d 816 (1955); Coulter v. Coulter, 141 Colo. 237, 347 P.2d 492 (1959); Wiederspahn v. Wiederspahn, 146 Colo. 214, 361 P.2d 125 (1961); Deines v. Deines, 157 Colo. 363, 402 P.2d 602 (1965).

A change in circumstances alone does not compel award of custody. Coulter v. Coulter, 141 Colo. 237, 347 P.2d 492 (1959).

The mere fact that the mother's circumstances may have changed for the better does not constitute a sufficient basis for changing the original custody order. In re Larington, 38 Colo. App. 408, 561 P.2d 17 (1976).

A mere change of circumstances alone is insufficient to justify a change of custody. Christian v. Randall, 33 Colo. App. 129, 516 P.2d 132 (1973).

The interest and welfare of the children was the primary and controlling consideration of the court in ordering the change of custody. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

Subsection (2)(c) recognizes that a modification of custody is likely to result in some harm to the child involved. Christian v. Randall, 33 Colo. App. 129, 516 P.2d 132 (1973).

In determining the issue of integration, the trial court should consider the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) The frequency, duration, and quality of the child's contacts with the custodial parent and the proposed custodial parent; (2) the identity of the person making the primary decisions with respect to health care, education, religious training, and the child's general welfare; and (3) the views of the child as to which environment constitutes his or her "home". In re Chatten, 967 P.2d 206 (Colo. App. 1998).

The consent requirement is satisfied when the custodian has voluntarily placed the child with the noncustodial parent and willingly permitted the child to become integrated into the new family. In re Chatten, 967 P.2d 206 (Colo. App. 1998).

Consent of the custodial parent may be implied from a voluntary transfer of custody that results in the child's integration into the family of the noncustodial parent. In re Chatten, 967 P.2d 206 (Colo. App. 1998).

B. Evidence.

Strong showing needed to justify modification of custody. The public policy of this state as expressed in this section favors retention of the child in a stable atmosphere, thus requiring a strong showing, including a change in circumstances, to justify modification of custody. The protection for children created by this statute would be defeated by allowing parents to determine independently that a lesser showing is sufficient grounds for changing custody arrangements. In re Johnson, 42 Colo. App. 198, 591 P.2d 1043 (1979).

To support the trial court's finding of a sufficient change in circumstances to justify changing the custody of the children, it was necessary to show a change of circumstances or new facts which were not in existence at the time of the prior order. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

Noncustodial parent must demonstrate change of circumstances necessitating change of custody, and change of custody may not be based solely on custodial parent's misconduct. Ashlock v. District Court, 717 P.2d 483 (Colo. 1986).

When the power of the court is invoked to place an infant into the custody of its parents and to withdraw such child from other persons, the court will scrutinize all the circumstances and ascertain if a change of custody would be disadvantageous to the infant; if so, the change will not be made, and it matters not whether it is through the fault or the mere misfortune of the legal guardian that the infant has come to be out of his custody. Root v. Allen, 151 Colo. 311, 377 P.2d 117 (1962).

Party seeking modification of prior custody decree has burden of proving that the statutory standards justifying the change are present. In re Davis, 43 Colo. App. 302, 602 P.2d 904 (1979).

Evidence of events which occurred prior to the original custody order, unless such were unknown to the trial court at the time the original order was entered, or unless the trial court was in some fashion imposed upon through fraud and concealment, may not be basis for a modification of the earlier custody order, because there must be proof of a change of circumstances in order to justify any modification of the order and decree awarding custody. Deines v. Deines, 157 Colo. 363, 402 P.2d 602 (1965).

In the hearing of a petition for the modification of a decree awarding custody of a minor child in a divorce proceeding, the contention that the court erred in considering evidence of matters that occurred prior to the entry of the original decree, overruled. Ross v. Ross, 89 Colo. 536, 5 P.2d 246 (1931).

Where the custody of a child was awarded in a divorce proceeding, the child became the ward of the court, and it was against the policy of the law to permit its removal to another jurisdiction unless its well-being and future welfare could have been better served thereby. Holland v. Holland, 150 Colo. 442, 373 P.2d 523 (1962).

Fact that mother who had been awarded custody was undergoing a transsexual change from female to male was not sufficient for changing custody in view of uncontradicted evidence of the high quality of the environment and home life between mother and children and in absence of a showing that the mother's relationship with the children had been adversely affected or that their emotional development had been impaired. Christian v. Randall, 33 Colo. App. 129, 516 P.2d 132 (1973).

Evidence of ex-wife's inability to properly supervise older children is relevant to the determination of a motion to modify custody of the youngest child. In re Pilcher, 628 P.2d 126 (Colo. App. 1980).

Evidence of sexual abuse in record is sufficient to justify change of custody. In re Utzinger, 721 P.2d 703 (Colo. App. 1986).

Even though a court could modify an earlier decree to insure the carrying out of provisions for the best interests of the child, and violation of a decree was a good ground to file a motion to modify, nevertheless, a change of custody should not have been awarded as punishment for a parent's unwarranted acts, for the best interest of the child was paramount. Holland v. Holland, 150 Colo. 442, 373 P.2d 523 (1962); Heckel v. Heckel, 156 Colo. 20, 396 P.2d 602 (1964).

Although the mother sought to prevent the father from visiting the children by hiding them, this alone, unaccompanied by other evidence, did not constitute sufficient grounds for a change in custody of the children because the father did not produce evidence of changed circumstances and produced nothing to show that the change would have been in the best interests of his two children, and the evidence, therefore, was legally insufficient to support the change of custody. Deines v. Deines, 157 Colo. 363, 402 P.2d 602 (1965).

When a parent showed little or no regard for the legitimate order of a court relating to custody, that fact was certainly one factor for the court to weigh in considering suitability of who should have custody of a child along with other facts such as the consequences of removal to a foreign jurisdiction, and this was true no matter how laudable the desire of the offending parent. Holland v. Holland, 150 Colo. 442, 373 P.2d 523 (1962).

While it was true that custody of children of tender years was ordinarily given to the mother, and that custody of several children would normally not be split between the parents, it was also clear that the overriding concern of the court should have been for the welfare of the children. Kelley v. Kelley, 161 Colo. 486, 423 P.2d 315 (1967).

A new family situation of the mother was sufficient to justify a change of custody from the father to the mother providing always that the interest and welfare of the children was the primary and controlling consideration of the trial court in ordering such change of custody. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

In the absence of a clear showing to the contrary, decisions of custodial parent reasonably made in a good faith attempt to fulfill the responsibility imposed by award of custody should be presumed to have been made in the best interests of children. Bernick v. Bernick, 31 Colo. App. 485, 505 P.2d 14 (1972).

The authority that must be exercised and the decisions that must be made by a custodial parent, both on a daily and long term basis, in carrying out the responsibility of custody of minor children, are entitled to the support of the court which initially awarded custody to the parent. Bernick v. Bernick, 31 Colo. App. 485, 505 P.2d 14 (1972).

Custodial parent has great latitude in carrying out custodial responsibilities. Absent some restrictive conditions in the applicable dissolution decree or separation agreement, a custodial parent is permitted great latitude in carrying out the custodial responsibilities of providing a primary home for the minor children of the parties. In re Casida, 659 P.2d 56 (Colo. App. 1982).

Custodial discretion may include the removal of the child from the jurisdiction of the court which entered the permanent orders. In re Casida, 659 P.2d 56 (Colo. App. 1982).

C. Discretion of Court.

In sound exercise of its discretion, a trial court has authority to modify its previous orders relative to custody and visitation upon a showing of circumstances warranting a change in the best interests of the children. Bird v. Bird, 132 Colo. 116, 285 P.2d 816 (1955); Bernick v. Bernick, 31 Colo. App. 485, 505 P.2d 14 (1972).

In awarding custody, the trial court has the advantage of personal contact with the parties, to appraise the worth of their testimony, and consider the circumstances involved, and if desirable to interview the subject child. Coulter v. Coulter, 141 Colo. 237, 347 P.2d 492 (1959); Schlabach v. Schlabach, 155 Colo. 377, 394 P.2d 844 (1964).

Where the one parent acts in disregard of the decree so as to deny the other parent the rights he had under it, the court was not limited to mere punitive measures, but could modify the decree in such a way as to insure the carrying out of those provisions which it conceived to be for the best interests of the child. Holland v. Holland, 150 Colo. 442, 373 P.2d 523 (1962).

The trial court erred in using a custodial change to punish the mother for her unjustified actions in secreting the children to prevent visitation. Pearson v. Pearson, 141 Colo. 336, 347 P.2d 779 (1959).

IV. JURISDICTION OF COURT.

Trial court has continuing jurisdiction by implication. Under former § 46-1-5(4), C.R.S.

1963, the trial court was specifically granted continuing jurisdiction "of the action" for the purpose of revising orders determining child custody. This article does not expressly grant such jurisdiction, but, since it contains a section permitting modification of child custody orders, it does give continuing jurisdiction by implication. Dockum v. Dockum, 34 Colo. App. 98, 522 P.2d 744 (1974).

Although juvenile court has exclusive jurisdiction to make custody determinations with respect to a child who is the subject of a valid petition in dependency and neglect, juvenile court cannot retain jurisdiction of a motion for modification of custody filed pursuant to this section once it has been determined that the child is not dependent and neglected. People in Interest of T.R.W., 759 P.2d 768 (Colo. App. 1988).

A court had continuing authority to modify existing orders or enter additional orders to minimize any detrimental effect of a move upon the relationship between a noncustodial parent and his children. Johnson v. Black, 137 Colo. 119, 322 P.2d 99 (1958); Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970); Bernick v. Bernick, 31 Colo. App. 485, 505 P.2d 14 (1972); Wood v. District Court, 181 Colo. 95, 508 P.2d 134 (1973).

Where the original custody award of a child and a subsequent habeas corpus proceeding were in the same state, but in different courts, although the habeas corpus court would not have jurisdiction to test the wisdom of or to modify the custody decree, it could and should have made the writ permanent to enforce the decree, and should have ordered the child returned to the one lawfully entitled to custody. Wood v. District Court, 181 Colo. 95, 508 P.2d 134 (1973).

The trial court which acquired personal jurisdiction over party in divorce proceedings had continuing in personam jurisdiction to modify child support orders and to enforce original custody orders through the exercise power of contempt, therefore, personal service on a party out of state was sufficient and party's failure to appear did not deprive court of jurisdiction or power to punish for contempt. Brown v. Brown, 31 Colo. App. 557, 506 P.2d 386 (1972).

Well-established was the rule that when a child from another state became domiciled in Colorado, and there was a material change in the circumstances of the divorced parents which would have justified modification of the rights to custody of the child, the Colorado courts could have and did take jurisdiction of the custody proceedings and enter appropriate orders based on conditions as they then appeared, and in such a case the supreme court held that the custody provisions of a decree rendered by the court of former domicile was subject to modification in Colorado if there was a change in conditions arising after the decree in the foreign state, which could not have been considered by that court in making the award. Petition of Kraudel v. Benner, 148 Colo. 525, 366 P.2d 667 (1961).

Factors listed in this section are not relevant in determining custody in a dependency proceeding under the Children's Code. People in Interest of R.E., 721 P.2d 1233 (Colo. App. 1986).

Applied in In re Murphy, 834 P.2d 1287 (Colo. App. 1992).

V. APPELLATE REVIEW.

Any final order in a custody proceeding regardless of the label placed upon it by the trial court was appealable as a matter of law. Aylor v. Aylor, 173 Colo. 294, 478 P.2d 302 (1970).

On appellate review of such an order modifying a previous order relative to custody and visitation, every presumption will be made in favor of the validity of the trial court's decision and only where a clear abuse of discretion can be shown will an appellate court interfere with orders of a trial court delineating visitation rights and awarding custody. Bernick v. Bernick, 31 Colo. App. 485, 505 P.2d 14 (1972).

In reviewing an order affecting the custody of a child, appellate courts will make every reasonable presumption in favor of the action of the trial court. Christian v. Randall, 33 Colo. App. 129, 516 P.2d 132 (1973).

Questions of custody must of necessity rest upon the judgment of the trier of fact, and its determination will not be disturbed if there is evidence to support its conclusion. In re Trouth, 631 P.2d 1183 (Colo. App. 1981); In re Agner, 659 P.2d 53 (Colo. App. 1982); In re Utzinger, 721 P.2d 703 (Colo. App. 1986).

Appellate courts are reluctant to disturb rulings of the trial court in custody matters, absent circumstances clearly disclosing an abuse of discretion. Christian v. Randall, 33 Colo. App. 129, 516 P.2d 132 (1973).

The modification of a divorce decree with respect to custody of minor children lies within the sound discretion of the trial court and will be disturbed on review only if clear abuse of discretion is shown. Dockum v. Dockum, 34 Colo. App. 98, 522 P.2d 744 (1974); In re Utzinger, 721 P.2d 703 (Colo. App. 1986).

Change of custody in violation of subsection (2) cannot stand. Although appellate courts are reluctant to disturb the trial court's ruling in a custody matter, subsection (2) is clear and the trial court must comply with its provisions. If the trial court's findings show no indication of endangered physical health or impairment of emotional development, an order changing custody cannot stand. In re Harris, 670 P.2d 446 (Colo. App. 1983).

rulings of the trial court in custody matters, this section is clear, and the trial court must comply with its provisions. In re Larington, 38 Colo. App. 408, 561 P.2d 17 (1976).

14-10-131.3. Modification of the allocation of parental responsibilities and parenting time based upon military service - legislative declaration - definitions. (1) (a) The general assembly hereby finds that:

(I) An armed forces reserve or state National Guard member who is called to active duty faces unique challenges with respect to parenting his or her child while at the same time meeting his or her obligation to serve in the military;

(II) The allocation of parental responsibilities and the parenting plan for a child is often modified as a result of a parent being deployed or called to federal active duty. It is important that service members, children, and other parents share the same expectation as to what the parental responsibilities and parenting time orders will be when the service member parent returns and that the relationship between a service member parent and his or her child will not be unfairly impacted due to military service.

(b) The general assembly therefore finds that the interests of the parents and the child are best served when:

(I) Modifications of parental responsibilities and parenting time that are based solely upon the deployment or federal active duty of reserve or National Guard members are limited in duration; and

(II) Upon the service member parent's return from deployment or active duty, the allocation of parental responsibilities and parenting time reverts to the orders in place at the time the service member was deployed or called to federal active duty.

(2) As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Active duty" means full-time service in:

(I) A reserve component of the armed forces; or

(II) The National Guard for a period that exceeds thirty consecutive days in a calendar year.

(b) "Armed forces" includes the reserve components of the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, and Coast Guard.

(c) "Parent" means parent, legal guardian, or person awarded parental decision-making responsibilities or parenting time.

(d) "Service member" means a member of a reserve component of the United States armed forces or a member of a state National Guard.

(3) (a) If a motion to modify an order concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities or parenting time is filed either prior to or during a service member parent's active duty deployment, and the court finds that the service member parent's active duty deployment is the sole basis for the modification, any resulting order shall be an interim order.

(b) Upon a service member parent's filing of written notice with the court of his or her return to Colorado from active duty deployment, and service of the notice on the other parent, the interim orders are vacated, and the orders concerning the allocation of parental responsibilities and parenting time that were in effect at the time the interim orders were entered shall be immediately reinstated without the need for court action.

(4) Nothing in this section restricts the right of a parent to:

(a) Consent to a modification of the allocation of parental responsibilities or parenting time that continues beyond the end of the service member parent's active duty deployment; or

(b) File a motion, pursuant to applicable law, seeking a modification of the allocation of parental responsibilities or parenting time after the interim orders are vacated.

(5) A service member parent's agreement to a modification of parental responsibilities or parenting time on an interim basis, due to his or her active duty deployment, shall not be considered agreement to a modification or consent to the integration of the child into the other parent's household for the purpose of a motion filed pursuant to section 14-10-129 (2) or 14-10-131 (2).

(6) Modification of child support may be appropriate when an interim order is entered based upon a service member parent's active duty deployment. In any motion filed pursuant to this section, it is the parties' responsibility to address child support at that time pursuant to sections 14-10-115 and 14-10-122.

(7) Motions filed pursuant to this section shall not qualify as motions filed for purposes of the two-year limitation on motions contained in sections 14-10-129 and 14-10-131.

ANNOTATION

An ex parte order changing custody of a child without notice to the custodial parent violates due process and is, therefore, void. Ashlock v. District Court, 717 P.2d 483 (Colo. 1986).

Verified motion for modification does not change burden of proof. A verified motion for modification of a prior custody decree, alleging various changes of circumstances for the mother, the father and the children, does not place the burden of proof or of going forward on the custodial parent. In re Davis, 43 Colo. App. 302, 602 P.2d 904 (1979).

Where affidavits show noncooperation which renders the general order for visitation, in essence, a nullity, adequate cause for a hearing is established and the court should set a date for a hearing to show cause why the requested modification should not be granted. 14-10.5-101. Short title. This article shall be known and may be cited as the "Colorado Parenting Time Enforcement Act".

14-10.5-102. Legislative declaration. (1) The general assembly hereby finds and declares that in most situations it is important to the healthy development of children that the children spend quality time with both parents. The general assembly further finds that due to dissolution of marriage, legal separation, and out-of-wedlock births, families are often divided and as a result, many children do not have the opportunity to spend the time with both parents that a court may have determined is in their best interests.

(2) The general assembly further finds that the federal "Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996", Public Law 104-193, allows states to seek grants of federal funds for the establishment and administration of programs and to support and facilitate children's access to time with their noncustodial parent.

(3) It is the purpose of this article to enhance children's opportunities for access to their parent with whom the child does not reside the majority of the time pursuant to court order in compliance with any orders entered in that regard. To that end, the general assembly hereby determines that it is appropriate for the state to seek the federal grant described in section 391 of the federal "Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996", Public Law 104-193, in order to explore alternative methods by which to support and facilitate a child's access to and time with his or her parent with whom the child does not reside the majority of the time in contested parenting time proceedings.

14-10.5-104. Parenting time enforcement program - authorization. (1) (a) The appropriate state agency, as determined by the governor, is hereby authorized to develop a parenting time enforcement program. The program, if developed, shall comply with all requirements and restrictions, if any, set forth in federal law or in federal regulation promulgated by the secretary of the federal department of health and human services and, if in compliance with federal law and regulation, shall address the enhancement and facilitation of children's access to the parents with whom such children reside less than the majority of the time by any one or any combination of the following methods:

- (I) Mediation, both voluntary and mandatory;
  - (II) Family counseling;
  - (III) Parental education;
  - (IV) Development of parenting plans;
  - (V) Parenting time enforcement procedures, including monitored parenting time, supervised parenting time, or neutral drop-off and pickup locations;
  - (VI) Parenting time guidelines;
  - (VII) Alternative arrangements with respect to parental responsibilities.
- (b) The parenting time enforcement program, if developed, may be operated on a statewide basis or on a representative pilot basis.

(2) The selected state agency shall monitor, evaluate, and report on the parenting time enforcement program, if developed, in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the secretary of the federal department of health and human services. Such agency shall also evaluate and report on the effectiveness of the amendments made to section 14-10-129.5, as contained in House Bill 97-1164.

Actions Originating in Other Jurisdictions

14-11-101. Foreign decrees - how handled.

14-11-101. Foreign decrees - how handled. (1) Upon the docketing in a court of competent jurisdiction in this state of exemplified copies of all the written pleadings and court orders, judgments, and decrees in a case of divorce, separate maintenance, or annulment, or for support of minor children or a spouse, or for a protection order or other court order issued for the protection of a party or parties, or for a combination of the same entered in any court of competent jurisdiction in any other state or jurisdiction having reciprocal provisions for a like enforcement of orders, judgments, or decrees entered in the state of Colorado and upon obtaining jurisdiction by personal service of process as provided by the Colorado rules of civil procedure, said court in this state shall have jurisdiction over the subject matter and of the person in like manner as if the original suit or action had been commenced in this state, and is empowered to amend, modify, set aside, and make new orders as the court may find necessary and proper so as to do justice and equity to all parties to the action according to the public policy of this state, and has the same right, power, and authority to enter orders for temporary alimony, support money, and attorney fees as in similar actions originating in this state.

(2) The courts of this state in cases of dissolution of marriage, legal separation, or declaration of invalidity of marriage, or for support of minor children or a spouse, or for the protection of a party or parties by means of a protection order, however styled or designated, or for any combination of the same, where the action originated in this state, have the power to enforce the decrees, judgments, and orders of other states or jurisdictions made pursuant to statutes similar to this statute, or to amend the same, or to enter new orders to the same extent and in the same manner as though such decrees, judgments, and orders were entered in the courts of this state.

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of this article, a restraining or protection order issued by a court of any state, any Indian tribe, or any United States territory shall be enforced pursuant to section 13-14-104, C.R.S.

(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of this article, a child-custody determination, as that term is defined in section 14-13-102 (3), issued by a court of another state shall be registered in accordance with section 14-13-305.

Annotator's note. Since § 14-11-101 is similar to repealed § 46-4-1, CRS 53, and laws antecedent thereto, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

General assembly, in reenacting section, granted state courts power to modify or alter foreign judgment for child support and such legislation does not offend the full faith and credit clause of the United States constitution. Glickman v. Mesigh, 200 Colo. 320, 615 P.2d 23 (1980).

This section confers subject matter jurisdiction with respect to the issue of enforcement of the foreign orders of Nebraska for support but in personam jurisdiction can be exercised by the state of Colorado only if defendant has "minimum contacts" with the state. In re Ness, 759 P.2d 844 (Colo. App. 1988).

Section reflects legislative effort to prevent state from becoming haven for parent against whom minimal or no support orders have been entered in the jurisdiction of rendition by granting Colorado courts explicit authority to enter appropriate orders in a manner consistent with the full faith and credit clause. Glickman v. Mesigh, 200 Colo. 320, 615 P.2d 23 (1980); Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

The former § 46-4-1, CRS 53, was held unconstitutional as in violation of the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution. Minnear v. Minnear, 131 Colo. 319, 281 P.2d 517 (1955).

Where the issue of alleged fraud in the procurement of the divorce decree either was, or could have been, litigated in a foreign court where it was raised by the wife, the disposition made of that issue in the sister state was res judicata in Colorado. Petition of Kraudel v. Benner, 148 Colo. 525, 366 P.2d 667 (1961).

The argument that the divorce decree of a sister state should not have been recognized in Colorado because personal service of process was not made upon the wife in the action was without merit where it was disclosed by the record that she was a resident of the sister state temporarily residing in Colorado at the time of service of process upon her, and service of process upon her was effected by publication and mailing under the practice and procedure of the sister state, and the record showed that she had actual notice of the pendency of the divorce action, but chose not to appear or to contest it. Petition of Kraudel v. Benner, 148 Colo. 525, 366 P.2d 667 (1961).

The former CSA, C. 56, § 30 disclosed the general intent of the general assembly regarding foreign divorces as being allowed to affect decrees of separate maintenance, it being stated therein that they were not to be admitted in evidence in any proceedings to enforce, or concerning, affecting or involving in any way, such marriage settlement, separate maintenance agreement, or decree of separate maintenance. Johnson v. Johnson, 119 Colo. 551, 206 P.2d 597 (1949).

"Other jurisdictions" construed. The reference to "other jurisdictions", in subsection (2), denotes only foreign jurisdictions which, although not states, are empowered to enter orders entitled to full faith and credit under art. IV, § 1, U.S. Const. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

In situations where a child support order was entered in another state, the obligee is a resident of this state, and the obligor is a nonresident, the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) controls to the extent the requirements for modification of child support in UIFSA and the remedy allowed by this section differ. In re Hillstrom, 126 P.3d 315 (Colo. App. 2005).

Subsection (2) has no intrastate application. Because "other jurisdictions" do not refer to other judicial districts within the state of Colorado, subsection (2) has no intrastate application and confers no jurisdiction on a district court to try a contempt committed against another district court. Gonzales v. District Court, 629 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1981).

State courts need not give conclusive effect to foreign decree when that decree is subject to modification by the courts of the rendering state. Glickman v. Mesigh, 200 Colo. 320, 615 P.2d 23 (1980).

Where California decree expressly provided for modification upon changed circumstances, Colorado courts had as much leeway to modify

GENERAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 13. UNIFORM CHILD CUSTODY JURISDICTION
PREFATORY NOTE

This Act, the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA), revisits the problem of the interstate child almost thirty years after the Conference promulgated the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA). The UCCJEA accomplishes two major purposes.

First, it revises the law on child custody jurisdiction in light of federal enactments and almost thirty years of inconsistent case law. Part 2 of this Act provides clearer standards for which States can exercise original jurisdiction over a child custody determination. It also, for the first time, enunciates a standard of continuing jurisdiction and clarifies modification jurisdiction. Other aspects of the part harmonize the law on simultaneous proceedings, clean hands, and forum non conveniens.

Second, this Act provides in Part 3 for a remedial process to enforce interstate child custody and visitation determinations. In doing so, it brings a uniform procedure to the law of interstate enforcement that is currently producing inconsistent results. In many respects, this Act accomplishes for custody and visitation determinations the same uniformity that has occurred in interstate child support with the promulgation of the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA).

Revision of Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act

The UCCJA was adopted as law in all 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Virgin Islands. A number of adoptions, however, significantly departed from the original text. In addition, almost thirty years of litigation since the promulgation of the UCCJA produced substantial inconsistency in interpretation by state courts. As a result, the goals of the UCCJA were rendered unobtainable in many cases.

In 1980, the federal government enacted the Parental Kidnaping Prevention Act (PKPA), 28 U.S.C. § 1738A, to address the interstate custody jurisdictional problems that continued to exist after the adoption of the UCCJA. The PKPA mandates that state authorities give full faith and credit to other states' custody determinations, so long as those determinations were made in conformity with the provisions of the PKPA. The PKPA provisions regarding bases for jurisdiction, restrictions on modifications, preclusion of simultaneous proceedings, and notice requirements are similar to those in the UCCJA. There are, however, some significant differences. For example, the PKPA authorizes continuing exclusive jurisdiction in the original decree State so long as one parent or the child remains there and that State has continuing jurisdiction under its own law. The UCCJA did not directly address this issue. To further complicate the process, the PKPA partially incorporates state UCCJA law in its language. The relationship between these two statutes became "technical enough to delight a medieval property lawyer." Homer H. Clark, Domestic Relations § 12.5 at 494 (2d ed. 1988).

As documented in an extensive study by the American Bar Association's Center on Children and the Law, Obstacles to the Recovery and Return of Parentally Abducted Children (1993) (Obstacles Study), inconsistency of interpretation of the UCCJA and the technicalities of applying the PKPA, resulted in a loss of uniformity among the States. The Obstacles Study suggested a number of amendments which would eliminate the inconsistent state interpretations and harmonize the UCCJA with the PKPA.

The revisions of the jurisdictional aspects of the UCCJA eliminate the inconsistent state interpretations and can be summarized as follows:

1. Home state priority. The PKPA prioritizes "home state" jurisdiction by requiring that full faith and credit cannot be given to a child custody determination by a State that exercises initial jurisdiction as a "significant connection state" when there is a "home State." Initial custody determinations based on "significant connections" are not entitled to PKPA enforcement unless there is no home State. The UCCJA, however, specifically authorizes four independent bases of jurisdiction without prioritization. Under the UCCJA, a significant connection custody determination may have to be enforced even if it would be denied enforcement under the PKPA. The UCCJA prioritizes home state jurisdiction in Section 201.

2. Clarification of emergency jurisdiction.

There are several problems with the current emergency jurisdiction provision of the UCCJA § 3(a)(3). First, the language of the UCCJA does not specify that emergency jurisdiction may be exercised only to protect the child on a temporary basis until the court with appropriate jurisdiction issues a permanent order. Some courts have interpreted the UCCJA language to so provide. Other courts, however, have held that there is no time limit on a custody determination based on emergency jurisdiction. Simultaneous proceedings and conflicting custody orders have resulted from these different interpretations.

Second, the emergency jurisdiction provisions predated the widespread enactment of state domestic violence statutes. Those statutes are often invoked to keep one parent away from the other parent and the children when there is a threat of violence. Whether these situations are sufficient to invoke the emergency jurisdiction provision of the UCCJA has been the subject of some confusion since the emergency jurisdiction provision does not specifically refer to violence directed against the parent of the child or against a sibling of the child.

The UCCJA contains a separate section on emergency jurisdiction at Section 14-13-204 which addresses these issues.

3. Exclusive continuing jurisdiction for the State that entered the decree.

The failure of the UCCJA to clearly enunciate that the decree-granting State retains exclusive continuing jurisdiction to modify a decree has resulted in two major problems. First, different interpretations of the UCCJA on continuing jurisdiction have produced conflicting custody decrees. States also have different interpretations as to how long continuing jurisdiction lasts. Some courts have held that modification jurisdiction continues until the last contestant leaves the State, regardless of how many years the child has lived outside the State or how tenuous the child's connections to the State have become. Other courts have held that continuing modification jurisdiction ends as soon as the child has established a new home State, regardless of how significant the child's connections to the decree State remain. Still other States distinguish between custody orders and visitation orders. This divergence of views leads to simultaneous proceedings and conflicting custody orders.

The second problem arises when it is necessary to determine whether the State with continuing jurisdiction has relinquished it. There should be a clear basis to determine when that court has relinquished jurisdiction. The UCCJA provided no guidance on this issue. The ambiguity regarding whether a court has declined jurisdiction can result in one court improperly exercising jurisdiction because it erroneously believes that the other court has declined jurisdiction. This caused simultaneous proceedings and conflicting custody orders. In addition, some courts have declined jurisdiction after only informal contact between courts with no opportunity for the parties to be heard. This raised significant due process concerns. The UCCJEA addresses these issues in Sections 14-13-110, 14-13-202, and 14-13-206.

4. Specification of what custody proceedings are covered. The definition of custody proceeding in the UCCJA is ambiguous. States have rendered conflicting decisions regarding certain types of proceedings. There is no general agreement on whether the UCCJA applies to neglect, abuse, dependency, wardship, guardianship, termination of parental rights, and protection from domestic violence proceedings. The UCCJEA includes a sweeping definition that, with the exception of adoption, includes virtually all cases that can involve custody of or visitation with a child as a "custody determination."

5. Role of "Best Interests." The jurisdictional scheme of the UCCJA was designed to promote the best interests of the children whose custody was at issue by discouraging parental abduction and providing that, in general, the State with the closest connections to, and the most evidence regarding, a child should decide that child's custody. The "best interest" language in the jurisdictional sections of the UCCJA was not intended to be an invitation to address the merits of the custody dispute in the jurisdictional determination or to otherwise provide that "best interests" considerations should override jurisdictional determinations or provide an additional jurisdictional basis.

The UCCJEA eliminates the term "best interests" in order to clearly distinguish between the jurisdictional standards and the substantive standards relating to custody and visitation of children.

6. Other Changes. This draft also makes a number of additional amendments to the UCCJA. Many of these changes were made to harmonize the provisions of this Act with those of the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act. One of the policy bases underlying this Act is to make uniform the law of interstate family proceedings to the extent possible, given the very different jurisdictional foundations. It simplifies the life of the family law practitioner when the same or similar provisions are found in both Acts.

Enforcement Provisions

One of the major purposes of the revision of the UCCJA was to provide a remedy for interstate visitation and custody cases. As with child support, state borders have become one of the biggest obstacles to enforcement of custody and visitation orders. If either parent leaves the State where the custody determination was made, the other parent faces considerable difficulty in enforcing the visitation and custody provisions of the decree. Locating the child, making service of process, and preventing adverse modification in a new forum all present problems.

There is currently no uniform method of enforcing custody and visitation orders validly entered in another State. As documented by the Obstacles Study, despite the fact that both the UCCJA and the PKPA direct the enforcement of visitation and custody orders entered in accordance with mandated jurisdictional prerequisites and due process, neither act provides enforcement procedures or remedies.

As the Obstacles Study pointed out, the lack of specificity in enforcement procedures has resulted in the law of enforcement evolving differently in different jurisdictions. In one State, it might be common practice to file a Motion to Enforce or a Motion to Grant Full Faith and Credit to initiate an enforcement proceeding. In another State, a Writ of Habeas Corpus or a Citation for Contempt might be commonly used. In some States, Mandamus and Prohibition also may be utilized. All of these enforcement procedures differ from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. While many States tend to limit considerations in enforcement proceedings to whether the court which issued the decree had jurisdiction to make the custody determination, others broaden the considerations to scrutiny of whether enforcement would be in the best interests of the child.

Lack of uniformity complicates the enforcement process in several ways: (1) It increases the costs of the enforcement action in part because the services of more than one lawyer may be required one in the original forum and one in the State where enforcement is sought; (2) It decreases the certainty of outcome; (3) It can turn enforcement into a long and drawn out procedure. A parent opposed to the provisions of a visitation determination may be able to delay implementation for many months, possibly even years, thereby frustrating not only the other parent, but also the process that led to the issuance of the original court order.

The provisions of Part 3 provide several remedies for the enforcement of a custody determination. First, there is a simple procedure for registering a custody determination in another State. This will allow a party to know in advance whether that State will recognize the party's custody determination. This is extremely important in estimating the risk of the child's non-return when the child is sent on visitation. The provision should prove to be very useful in international custody cases.

Second, the Act provides a swift remedy along the lines of habeas corpus. Time is extremely important in visitation and custody cases. If visitation rights cannot be enforced quickly, they often cannot be enforced at all. This is particularly true if there is a limited time within which visitation can be exercised such as may be the case when one parent has been granted visitation during the winter or spring holiday period. Without speedy consideration and resolution of the enforcement of such visitation rights, the ability to visit may be lost entirely. Similarly, a custodial parent must be able to obtain prompt enforcement when the noncustodial parent refuses to return a child at the end of authorized visitation, particularly when a summer visitation extension will infringe on the school year. A swift enforcement mechanism is desirable for violations of both custody and visitation provisions.

The scope of the enforcing court's inquiry is limited to the issue of whether the decree court had jurisdiction and complied with due process in rendering the original custody decree. No further inquiry is necessary because neither Part 2 nor the PKPA allows an enforcing court to modify a custody determination.

Third, the enforcing court will be able to utilize an extraordinary remedy. If the enforcing court is concerned that the parent, who has physical custody of the child, will flee or harm the child, a warrant to take physical possession of the child is available.

Finally, there is a role for public authorities, such as prosecutors, in the enforcement process. Their involvement will encourage the parties to abide by the terms of the custody determination. If the parties know that public authorities and law enforcement officers are available to help in securing compliance with custody determinations, the parties may be deterred from interfering with the exercise of rights established by court order.

The involvement of public authorities will also prove more effective in remedying violations of custody determinations. Most parties do not have the resources to enforce a custody determination in another jurisdiction. The availability of the public authorities as an enforcement agency will help ensure that this remedy can be made available regardless of income level. In addition, the public authorities may have resources to draw on that are unavailable to the average litigant.

This Act does not authorize the public authorities to be involved in the action leading up to the making of the custody determination, except when requested by the court, when there is a violation of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, or when the person holding the child has violated a criminal statute. The Act does not mandate that public authorities be involved in all cases. Not all States, or local authorities, have the funds necessary for an effective custody and visitation enforcement program.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Section 1 of the UCCJA was a statement of the purposes of the Act. Although extensively cited by courts, it was eliminated because Uniform Acts no longer contain such a section. Nonetheless, this Act should be interpreted according to its purposes which are to:

(1) Avoid jurisdictional competition and conflict with courts of other States in matters of child custody which have in the past resulted in the shifting of children from State to State with harmful effects on their well-being;

(2) Promote cooperation with the courts of other States to the end that a custody decree is rendered in that State which can best decide the case in the interest of the child;

(3) Discourage the use of the interstate system for continuing controversies over child custody;

(4) Deter abductions of children;

(5) Avoid relitigation of custody decisions of other States in this State;

(6) Facilitate the enforcement of custody decrees of other States.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The UCCJA did not contain a definition of "child." The definition here is taken from the PKPA.

The definition of "child-custody determination" now closely tracks the PKPA definition. It encompasses any judgment, decree or other order which provides for the custody of, or visitation with, a child, regardless of local terminology, including such labels as "managing conservatorship" or "parenting plan."

The definition of "child-custody proceeding" has been expanded from the comparable definition in the UCCJA. These listed proceedings have generally been determined to be the type of proceeding to which the UCCJA and PKPA are applicable. The list of examples removes any controversy about the types of proceedings where a custody determination can occur. Proceedings that affect access to the child are subject to this Act. The inclusion of proceedings related to protection from domestic violence is necessary because in some States domestic violence proceedings may affect custody of and visitation with a child. Juvenile delinquency or proceedings to confer contractual rights are not "custody proceedings" because they do not relate to civil aspects of access to a child. While a determination of paternity is covered under the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act, the custody and visitation aspects of paternity cases are custody proceedings. Cases involving the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction have not been included at this point because custody of the child is not determined in a proceeding under the International Child Abductions Remedies Act. Those proceedings are specially included in the part 3 enforcement process.

"Commencement" has been included in the definitions as a replacement for the term "pending" found in the UCCJA. Its inclusion simplifies some of the simultaneous proceedings provisions of this Act.

The definition of "home State" has been reworded slightly. No substantive change is intended from the UCCJA.

The term "issuing State" is borrowed from UIFSA. In UIFSA, it refers to the court that issued the support or parentage order. Here, it refers to the State, or the court, which made the custody determination that is sought to be enforced. It is used primarily in part 3.

The term "person" has been added to ensure that the provisions of this Act apply when the State is the moving party in a custody proceeding or has legal custody of a child. The definition of "person" is the one that is mandated for all Uniform Acts.

The term "person acting as a parent" has been slightly redefined. It has been broadened from the definition in the UCCJA to include a person who has acted as a parent for a significant period of time prior to the filing of the custody proceeding as well as a person who currently has physical custody of the child. In addition, a person acting as a parent must either have legal custody or claim a right to legal custody under the law of this State. The reference to the law of this State means that a court determines the issue of whether someone is a "person acting as a parent" under its own law. This reaffirms the traditional view that a court in a child custody case applies its own substantive law. The court does not have to undertake a choice-of-law analysis to determine whether the individual who is claiming to be a person acting as a parent has standing to seek custody of the child.

The definition of "tribe" is the one mandated for use in Uniform Acts. Should a State choose to apply this Act to tribal adjudications, this definition should be enacted as well as the entirety of Section 104. (Note: Section 104 of the Act deals with the application to Indian tribes. Colorado did not adopt this section of the Act.)

Law reviews. For article, "The Rights of Children and the Crisis in Custody Litigation: Modification of Custody in and out of State", see 46 U. Colo. L. Rev. 495 (1974-75).

Annotator's note. Since § 14-13-102 is similar to § 14-13-103 as it existed prior to the 2000 repeal and reenactment of this article, relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this section.

Modification of visitation rights is a "custody determination" under subsection (2), and so, pursuant to § 14-13-104(1)(b), where a child and his parents have been living in this state for over a year, a trial court of this state has the jurisdiction to modify a foreign child visitation order. The definition of "home state" refers to the child's physical residence, not his legal residence or domicile. McCarron v. District Court

The term "contestant" as has been omitted from this revision. It was defined in the UCCJA § 2(1) as "a person, including a parent, who claims a right to custody or visitation rights with respect to a child." It seems to have served little purpose over the years, and whatever function it once had has been subsumed by state laws on who has standing to seek custody of or visitation with a child. In addition UCCJA § 2(5) of the which defined "decree" and "custody decree" has been eliminated as duplicative of the definition of "custody determination."

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Two proceedings are governed by other acts. Adoption cases are excluded from this Act because adoption is a specialized area which is thoroughly covered by the Uniform Adoption Act (UAA) (1994). Most States either will adopt that Act or will adopt the jurisdictional provisions of that Act. Therefore the jurisdictional provisions governing adoption proceeding are generally found elsewhere.

However, there are likely to be a number of instances where it will be necessary to apply this Act in an adoption proceeding. For example, if a State adopts the UAA then Section 3-101 of the Act specifically refers in places to the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act which will become a reference to this Act. Second, the UAA requires that if an adoption is denied or set aside, the court is to determine the child's custody. UAA § 3-704. Those custody proceedings would be subject to this Act. See Joan Heifetz Hollinger, The Uniform Adoption Act: Reporter's Ruminations, 30 Fam.L.Q. 345 (1996).

Children that are the subject of interstate placements for adoption or foster care are governed by the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children (ICPC). The UAA § 2-107 provides that the provisions of the compact, although not jurisdictional, supply the governing rules for all children who are subject to it. As stated in the Comments to that section: "Once a court exercises jurisdiction, the ICPC helps determine the legality of an interstate placement." For a discussion of the relationship between the UCCJA and the ICPC see J.D.S. v. Franks, 893 P.2d 732 (Ariz. 1995).

Proceedings pertaining to the authorization of emergency medical care for children are outside the scope of this Act since they are not custody determinations. All States have procedures which allow the State to temporarily supersede parental authority for purposes of emergency medical procedures. Those provisions will govern without regard to this Act.

ANNOTATION

Specific language of statute precludes UCCJEA application to failed adoption proceedings, however, exclusion of jurisdiction of adoption proceedings relied upon expectation that states would adopt the Uniform Adoption Act and enter a final custody order after a failed adoption based on the best interests of the child. People ex rel. A.J.C., 88 P.3d 599 (Colo. 2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 987, 125 S. Ct. 495, 160 L. Ed. 2d 371 (2004).

In case involving failed adoption and resulting litigation with mother located in Missouri, a UCCJA state, and child and potential adoptive parents residing in Colorado, a UCCJEA state, it was proper for Colorado court to exercise jurisdiction over question of custody of the child after Missouri court dismissed petition for adoption and ordered child to be returned to the mother's custody for the following reasons: (1) Under provisions of the UCCJA, a court of a second state can exercise jurisdiction after an initial custody decree has been entered if the court of the first state declined to exercise jurisdiction; (2) Missouri court's failure to determine custody of child according to child's best interest was akin to declining to exercise jurisdiction over custody issues, and Colorado was therefore not obligated to give full faith and credit to Missouri court's order concerning custody of the child; (3) in both Missouri and Colorado, there are provisions that authorize the court, subsequent to a failed adoption, to provide for the care and custody of the child according to the child's best interests, including a custody request from a nonparent; (4) the UCCJEA's exclusion of adoption was based on the expectation that states enacting the UCCJEA would adopt the Uniform Adoption Act, and the Uniform Adoption Act contemplates that when an adoption fails after a child has been with the prospective parents for a period of time, the court must take into account the best interests of the child in making determinations about continuing placement; and (5) Missouri does not retain jurisdiction over the case under the interstate compact on the placement of children (ICPC) since under the facts of the case, there was no proper request pursuant to the ICPC to return the child to Missouri. People ex rel. A.J.C., 88 P.3d 599 (Colo. 2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 987, 125 S. Ct. 495, 160 L. Ed. 2d 371 (2004).

14-13-104. International application of article. (1) A court of this state shall treat a foreign country as if it were a state of the United States for the purpose of applying this part 1 and part 2 of this article.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (3) of this section, a child-custody determination made in a foreign country under factual circumstances in substantial conformity with the jurisdictional standards of this article must be recognized and enforced under part 3 of this article.

(3) A court of this state need not apply this article if the child-custody law of a foreign country violates fundamental principles of human rights.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The provisions of this Act have international application to child custody proceedings and determinations of other countries. Another country will be treated as if it were a State of the United States for purposes of applying parts 1 and 2 of this Act. Custody determinations of other countries will be enforced if the facts of the case indicate that jurisdiction was in substantial compliance with the requirements of this Act.

In this section, the term “child-custody determination” should be interpreted to include proceedings relating to custody or analogous institutions of the other country. See generally, Article 3 of The Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Co-operation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children. 35 I.L.M. 1391 (1996).

A court of this State may refuse to apply this Act when the child custody law of the other country violates basic principles relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The same concept is found in of the Section 20 of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction (return of the child may be refused if this would not be permitted by the fundamental principles of the requested State relating to the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms). In applying subsection (3), the court’s scrutiny should be on the child custody law of the foreign country and not on other aspects of the other legal system. This Act takes no position on what laws relating to child custody would violate fundamental freedoms. While the provision is a traditional one in international agreements, it is invoked only in the most egregious cases.

This section is derived from Section 23 of the UCCJA.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

No substantive change was made to this section which was Section 24 of the UCCJA. The section is placed toward the beginning of part 1 to emphasize its importance.

The language change from "case" to "question" is intended to clarify that it is the jurisdictional issue which must be expedited and not the entire custody case. Whether the entire custody case should be given priority is a matter of local law.

Notice must be given in a manner reasonably calculated to give actual notice but may be by publication if other means are not effective.

(2) Proof of service may be made in the manner prescribed by the law of this state or by the law of the state in which the service is made.

(3) Notice is not required for the exercise of jurisdiction with respect to a person who submits to the jurisdiction of the court.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section authorizes notice and proof of service to be made by any method allowed by either the State which issues the notice or the State where the notice is received. This eliminates the need to specify the type of notice in the Act and therefore the provisions of Section 5 of the UCCJA which specified how notice was to be accomplished were eliminated. The change reflects an approach in this Act to use local law to determine many procedural issues. Thus, service by facsimile is permissible if allowed by local rule in either State. In addition, where special service or notice rules are available for some procedures, in either jurisdiction, they could be utilized under this Act. For example, if a case involves domestic violence and the statute of either State would authorize notice to be served by a peace officer, such service could be used under this Act.

Although section 14-13-104 requires foreign countries to be treated as States for purposes of this Act, attorneys should be cautioned about service and notice in foreign countries. Countries have their own rules on service which must usually be followed. Attorneys should consult the Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters, 20 U.S.T. 36, T.I.A.S. 6638 (1965).

14-13-109. Appearance and limited immunity. (1) A party to a child-custody proceeding, including a modification proceeding, or a petitioner or respondent in a proceeding to enforce or register a child-custody determination, is not subject to personal jurisdiction in this state for another proceeding or purpose solely by reason of having participated, or of having been physically present for the purpose of participating, in the proceeding.

(2) A person who is subject to personal jurisdiction in this state on a basis other than physical presence is not immune from service of process in this state. A party present in this state who is subject to the jurisdiction of another state is not immune from service of process allowable under the laws of that state.

(3) The immunity granted by subsection (1) of this section does not extend to civil litigation based on acts unrelated to the participation in a proceeding under this article committed by an individual while present in this state.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section establishes a general principle that participation in a custody proceeding does not, by itself, give the court jurisdiction over any issue for which personal jurisdiction over the individual is required. The term “participate” should be read broadly. For example, if jurisdiction is proper under part 2, a respondent in an original custody determination, or a party in a modification determination, should be able to request custody without this constituting the seeking of affirmative relief that would waive personal jurisdictional objections. Once jurisdiction is proper under part 2, a party should not be placed in the dilemma of choosing between seeking custody or protecting a right not to be subject to a monetary judgment by a court with no other relationship to the party.

This section is comparable to the immunity provision of UIFSA § 314. A party who is otherwise not subject to personal jurisdiction can appear in a custody proceeding or an enforcement action without being subject to the general jurisdiction of the State by virtue of the appearance. However, if the petitioner would otherwise be subject to the jurisdiction of the State, appearing in a custody proceeding or filing an enforcement proceeding will not provide immunity. Thus, if the non-custodial parent moves from the State that decided the custody determination, that parent is still subject to the state’s jurisdiction for enforcement of child support if the child or an individual obligee continues to reside there. See UIFSA § 205. If the non-custodial parent returns to enforce the visitation aspects of the custody determination, the State can utilize any appropriate means to collect the back-due child support. However, the situation is different if both parties move from State A after the determination, with the custodial parent and the child establishing a new home State in State B, and the non-custodial parent moving to State C. The non-custodial parent is not, at this point, subject to the jurisdiction of State B for monetary matters. See Kulko v. Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84 (1978). If the non-custodial parent comes into State B to enforce the visitation aspects of the determination, the non-custodial parent is not subject to the jurisdiction of State B for those proceedings and issues requiring personal jurisdiction by filing the enforcement action.

A party also is immune from service of process during the time in the State for an enforcement action except for those claims for which jurisdiction could be based on contacts other than mere physical presence. Thus, when the non-custodial parent comes into State B to enforce the visitation aspects of the decree, State B cannot acquire jurisdiction over the child support aspects of the decree by serving the non-custodial parent in the State. Cf. UIFSA § 611 (personally serving the obligor in the State of the residence of the obligee is not by itself a sufficient jurisdictional basis to authorize a modification of child support). However, a party who is in this State and subject to the jurisdiction of another State may be served with process to appear in that State, if allowable under the laws of that State.

As the Comments to UIFSA § 314 note, the immunity provided by this section is limited. It does not provide immunity for civil litigation unrelated to the enforcement action. For example, a party to an enforcement action is not immune from service regarding a claim that involves an automobile accident occurring while the party is in the State.

14-13-110. Communication between courts. (1) A court of this state may communicate with a court in another state concerning a proceeding arising under this article.

(2) The court may allow the parties to participate in the communication. If the parties are not able to participate in the communication, they must be given the opportunity to present facts and legal arguments before a decision on jurisdiction is made.

(3) Communication between courts on schedules, calendars, court records, and similar matters may occur without informing the parties. A record need not be made of the communication.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (3) of this section, a record must be made of a communication under this section. The parties must be informed promptly of the communication and granted access to the record.

(5) For the purposes of this section, "record" means information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section emphasizes the role of judicial communications. It authorizes a court to communicate concerning any proceeding arising under this Act. This includes communication with foreign tribunals and tribal courts. Communication can occur in many different ways such as by telephonic conference and by on-line or other electronic communication. The Act does not preclude any method of communication and recognizes that there will be increasing use of modern communication techniques.

Communication between courts is required under Sections 14-13-204, 14-13-206, and 14-13-306 and strongly suggested in applying Section 14-13-207. Apart from those sections, there may be less need under this Act for courts to communicate concerning jurisdiction due to the prioritization of home state jurisdiction. Communication is authorized, however, whenever the court finds it would be helpful. The court may authorize the parties to participate in the communication. However, the Act does not mandate participation. Communication between courts is often difficult to schedule and participation by the parties may be impractical. Phone calls often have to be made after-hours or when-ever the schedules of judges allow.

This section does require that a record be made of the conversation and that the parties have access to that record in order to be informed of the content of the conversation. The only exception to this requirement is when the communication involves relatively inconsequential matters such as scheduling, calendars, and court records. Included within this latter type of communication would be matters of cooperation between courts under Section 14-13-112. A record includes notes or transcripts of a court reporter who listened to a conference call between the courts, an electronic recording of a telephone call, a memorandum or an electronic record of the communication between the courts, or a memorandum or an electronic record made by a court after the communication.

The second sentence of subsection (2) protects the parties against unauthorized ex parte communications. The parties' participation in the communication may amount to a hearing if there is an opportunity to present facts and jurisdictional arguments. However, absent such an opportunity, the participation of the parties should not to be considered a substitute for a hearing and the parties must be given an opportunity to fairly and fully present facts and arguments on the jurisdictional issue before a determination is made. This may be done through a hearing or, if appropriate, by affidavit or memorandum. The court is expected to set forth the basis for its jurisdictional decision, including any court-to-court communication which may have been a factor in the decision.

ANNOTATION

Because this section does not specify which court must make a record, the statute is satisfied if either the Colorado or the non-Colorado court makes a record. People ex rel. D.P., 181 P.3d 403 (Colo. App. 2008).

Trial court erred when judge allowed law clerk to conduct telephone conference with non-Colorado court. However, such error was harmless and does not warrant reversal. People ex rel. D.P., 181 P.3d 403 (Colo. App. 2008).

Prior to assuming jurisdiction to modify an out-of-state custody order, the court must communicate with the state that initially issued the custody order and conduct a hearing at which both sides are allowed to present evidence concerning any disputed residency issue. The burden of proof is on the parent who petitioned the court to assume jurisdiction. In re Brandt, 2012 CO 3, 268 P.3d 406.

14-13-111. Taking testimony in another state. (1) In addition to other procedures available to a party, a party to a child-custody proceeding or other legal representative of the child may offer testimony of witnesses who are located in another state, including testimony of the parties and the child, by deposition or other means allowable in this state for testimony taken in another state. The court on its own motion may order that the testimony of a person be taken in another state and may prescribe the manner in which and the terms upon which the testimony is taken.

(2) A court of this state may permit an individual residing in another state to be deposed or to testify by telephone, audiovisual means, or other electronic means before a designated court or at another location in that state. A court of this state shall cooperate with courts of other states in designating an appropriate location for the deposition or testimony.

(3) Documentary evidence transmitted from another state to a court of this state by technological means that do not produce an original writing may not be excluded from evidence on an objection based on the means of transmission.

No substantive changes have been made to subsection (1) which was Section 18 of the UCCJA.

Subsections (2) and (3) merely provide that modern modes of communication are permissible in the taking of testimony and the transmittal of documents. See UIFSA § 316.

- (d) Forward to the court of this state a certified copy of the transcript of the record of

(e) Order a party to a child-custody proceeding or any person having physical custody of the child to appear in the proceeding with or without the child.

(2) Upon request of a court of another state, a court of this state may hold a hearing or enter an order described in subsection (1) of this section.

(3) Travel and other necessary and reasonable expenses incurred under subsections (1) and (2) of this section may be assessed against the parties according to the law of this state.

(4) A court of this state shall preserve the pleadings, orders, decrees, records of hearings, evaluations, and other pertinent records with respect to a child-custody proceeding until the child attains eighteen years of age. Upon appropriate request by a court or law enforcement official of another state, the court shall forward a certified copy of those records.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is the heart of judicial cooperation provision of this Act. It provides mechanisms for courts to cooperate with each other in order to decide cases in an efficient manner without causing undue expense to the parties. Courts may request assistance from courts of other States and may assist courts of other States.

The provision on the assessment of costs for travel provided in the UCCJA § 19 has been changed. The UCCJA provided that the costs may be assessed against the parties or the State or county. Assessment of costs against a government entity in a case where the government is not involved is inappropriate and therefore that provision has been removed. In addition, if the State is involved as a party, assessment of costs and expenses against the State must be authorized by other law. It should be noted that the term "expenses" means out-of-pocket costs. Overhead costs should not be assessed as expenses.

No other substantive changes have been made. The term "social study" as used in the UCCJA was replaced with the modern term: "custody evaluation." The Act does not take a position on the admissibility of a custody evaluation that was conducted in another State. It merely authorizes a court to seek assistance of, or render assistance to, a court of another State.

JURISDICTION

14-13-201. Initial child-custody jurisdiction. (1) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-204, a court of this state has jurisdiction to make an initial child-custody determination only if:

(a) This state is the home state of the child on the date of the commencement of the proceeding, or was the home state of the child within one hundred eighty-two days before the commencement of the proceeding and the child is absent from this state but a parent or person acting as a parent continues to live in this state;

(b) A court of another state does not have jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with paragraph (a) of this subsection (1), or a court of the home state of the child has declined to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that this state is the more appropriate forum under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-207 or 14-13-208, and:

(I) The child and the child's parents, or the child and at least one parent or a person acting as a parent, have a significant connection with this state other than mere physical presence; and

(II) Substantial evidence is available in this state concerning the child's care, protection, training, and personal relationships;

(c) All courts having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with paragraph (a) or (b) of this subsection (1) have declined to exercise jurisdiction on the ground that a court of this state is the more appropriate forum to determine the custody of the child under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-207 or 14-13-208; or

(d) No court of any other state would have jurisdiction under the criteria specified in a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with paragraph (a), (b), or (c) of this subsection (1).

(2) Subsection (1) of this section is the exclusive jurisdictional basis for making a child-custody determination by a court of this state.

(3) Physical presence of, or personal jurisdiction over, a party or a child is not necessary or sufficient to make a child-custody determination.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section provides mandatory jurisdictional rules for the original child custody proceeding. It generally continues the provisions of the UCCJA § 3. However, there have been a number of changes to the jurisdictional bases.

1. Home State Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the home State has been prioritized over other jurisdictional bases. Section 3 of the UCCJA provided four independent and concurrent bases of jurisdiction. The PKPA provides that full faith and credit can only be given to an initial custody determination of a "significant connection" State when there is no home State. This Act prioritizes home state jurisdiction in the same manner as the PKPA thereby eliminating any potential conflict between the two acts.

The six-month extended home state provision of subsection (1)(a) has been modified slightly from the UCCJA. The UCCJA provided that home state jurisdiction continued for six months when the child had been removed by a person seeking the child's custody or for other reasons and a parent or a person acting as a parent continues to reside in the home State. Under this Act, it is no longer necessary to determine why the child has been removed. The only inquiry relates to the status of the person left behind. This change provides a slightly more refined home state standard than the UCCJA or the PKPA, which also requires a determination that the child has been removed "by a contestant or for other reasons." The scope of the PKPA's provision is theoretically narrower than this Act. However, the phrase "or for other reasons" covers most fact situations where the child is not in the home State and, therefore, the difference has no substantive effect.

In another sense, the six-month extended home state jurisdiction provision in this Act is narrower than the comparable provision in the PKPA. The PKPA's definition of extended home State is more expansive because it applies whenever a "contestant" remains in the home State. That class of individuals has been eliminated in this Act. This Act retains the original UCCJA classification of "parent or person acting as parent" to define who must remain for a State to exercise the six-month extended home state jurisdiction. This eliminates the undesirable jurisdictional determinations which would occur as a result of differing state substantive laws on visitation involving grandparents and others. For example, if State A's law provided that grandparents could obtain visitation with a child after the death of one of the parents, then the grandparents, who would be considered "contestants" under the PKPA, could file a proceeding within six months after the remaining parent moved and have the case heard in State A. However, if State A did not provide that grandparents could seek visitation under such circumstances, the grandparents would not be considered "contestants" and State B where the child acquired a new home State would provide the only forum. This Act bases jurisdiction on the parent and child or person acting as a parent and child relationship without regard to grandparents or other potential seekers of custody or visitation. There is no conflict with the broader provision of the PKPA. The PKPA in § (c)(1) authorizes States to narrow the scope of their jurisdiction.

2. Significant connection jurisdiction. This jurisdictional basis has been amended in four particulars from the UCCJA. First, the "best interest" language of the UCCJA has been eliminated. This phrase tended to create confusion between the jurisdictional issue and the substantive custody determination. Since the language was not necessary for the jurisdictional issue, it has been removed.

Second, the UCCJA based jurisdiction on the presence of a significant connection between the child and the child's parents or the child and at least one contestant. This Act requires that the significant connections be between the child, the child's parents or the child and a person acting as a parent.

Third, a significant connection State may assume jurisdiction only when there is no home State or when the home State decides that the significant connection State would be a more appropriate forum under Section 14-13-207 or 14-13-208. Fourth, the determination of significant connections has been changed to eliminate the language of "present or future care." The jurisdictional determination should be made by determining whether there is sufficient evidence in the State for the court to make an informed custody determination. That evidence might relate to the past as well as to the "present or future."

Emergency jurisdiction has been moved to a separate section. This is to make it clear that the power to protect a child in crisis does not include the power to enter a permanent order for that child except as provided by that section.

Paragraph (1)(c) provides for jurisdiction when all States with jurisdiction under paragraphs (1)(a) and (b) determine that this State is a more appropriate forum. The determination would have to be made by all States with jurisdiction under subsection (1)(a) and (b). Jurisdiction would not exist under this paragraph because the home State determined it is a more appropriate place to hear the case if there is another State that could exercise significant connection jurisdiction under subsection (1)(b).

Paragraph (1)(d) retains the concept of jurisdiction by necessity as found in the UCCJA and in the PKPA. This default jurisdiction only occurs if no other State would have jurisdiction under subsections (1)(a) through (1)(c).

Subsections (2) and (3) clearly State the relationship between jurisdiction under this Act and other forms of jurisdiction. Personal jurisdiction over, or the physical presence of, a parent or the child is neither necessary nor required under this Act. In other words neither minimum contacts nor service within the State is required for the court to have jurisdiction to make a custody determination. Further, the presence of minimum contacts or service within the State does not confer jurisdiction to make a custody determination. Subject to Section 14-13-204, satisfaction of the requirements of subsection (1) is mandatory.

The requirements of this section, plus the notice and hearing provisions of the Act, are all that is necessary to satisfy due process. This Act, like the UCCJA and the PKPA is based on Justice Frankfurter's concurrence in May v. Anderson, 345 U.S. 528 (1953). As pointed out by Professor Bodenheimer, the reporter for the UCCJA, no "workable interstate custody law could be built around [Justice] Burton's plurality opinion ... ." Bridgette Bodenheimer, The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act: A Legislative Remedy for Children Caught in the Conflict of Laws, 22 Vand.L.Rev. 1207, 1233 (1969). It should also be noted that since jurisdiction to make a child custody determination is subject matter jurisdiction, an agreement of the parties to confer jurisdiction on a court that would not otherwise have jurisdiction under this Act is ineffective.

Annotator's note. Cases relevant to § 14-13-104 decided prior to its earliest source, L. 73, p. 557, § 1, have been included in the annotations to this section. Since § 14-13-201 is similar to § 14-13-104 as it existed prior to the 2000 repeal and reenactment of this article, relevant cases construing that provision also have been included in the annotations to this section.

Section must be read in conjunction with other provisions of act. In order to effectuate the general purposes of this act and to deter jurisdictional fishing with children as bait, this section must be read in conjunction with other provisions of the act. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

Primary purposes of act are to avoid jurisdictional conflicts with other states over child custody issues, to discourage parents from "jurisdictional fishing," and to ensure that the state making the custody decision is the state with the closest connection to the child and the child's family. Nistico v. District Ct., 791 P.2d 1128 (Colo. 1990); L.G. v. People in Interest of K.G., 890 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1995); G.B. v. Arapahoe County Ct., 890 P.2d 1153 (Colo. 1995).

The uniform act was enacted to extend full faith and credit to child custody decrees, and therefore discourage the noncustodial parent from kidnapping and forum shopping. L.G. v. People, 890 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1995).

Court not required to exercise jurisdiction. A court which has jurisdiction over a custody issue is not required to exercise its jurisdiction. In re Nicholson, 648 P.2d 681 (Colo. App. 1982).

The question of whether jurisdiction exists is distinct from the question of whether it should be exercised. Even if a determination that jurisdiction exists is made, the court may decline to exercise jurisdiction, or it may stay the proceedings upon the condition that custody proceedings be initiated in another state. Johnson v. District Court, 654 P.2d 827 (Colo. 1982); Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

Section neither grants courts of state right, nor imposes upon them duty, to modify out-of-state custody decrees under any and all circumstances merely because of a claimed emergency and a threshold showing that some form of judicial intervention might be appropriate. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

State courts authorized to exercise jurisdiction over custody matters in emergency situations when the child is physically present in the state and is threatened with mistreatment, abuse, or is otherwise neglected or dependent even if its orders contravene those of a sister state that still retains jurisdiction over custody. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

Finding of either "significant connection" or "emergency" sufficient for jurisdiction. The "significant connection" and "substantial evidence" ground for jurisdiction of subsection (1)(b) is different from the "emergency" ground of subsection (1)(c), and a finding of either is sufficient to bestow jurisdiction. Johnson v. District Court, 654 P.2d 827 (Colo. 1982).

Jurisdiction conferred on court where matter first raised. Where two states could exercise jurisdiction, this article establishes the rule that exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on the court in which the matter is first raised. In re Edison, 637 P.2d 362 (Colo. 1981); People in Interest of K.G., 876 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1993).

Court entering dissolution decree always has jurisdiction. A court which enters a dissolution decree, where custody is one of the issues in that proceeding, will always have jurisdiction as to the custody issue, even where the parties and the child have left the state. In re Nicholson, 648 P.2d 681 (Colo. App. 1982), overruled in Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

Holding that court always has jurisdiction is overly broad and overlooks the intent and purposes of the uniform act that under certain circumstances the state of original jurisdiction can and should lose jurisdiction. In re Dunn, 701 P.2d 158 (Colo. App. 1985).

In deciding whether to entertain a child custody proceeding, the court shall conduct a two-pronged inquiry. It must first be determined whether jurisdiction exists in this state and if so, then whether jurisdiction should be exercised.

Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986); In re Nielsen, 782 P.2d 868 (Colo. 1989).

Instances giving rise to subject matter jurisdiction. The uniform act attempts to limit custody determination jurisdiction to only one state. Thus, this section confines subject matter jurisdiction to: (a) The home state of at least one parent, and of the child for the last six months; or (b) the state where there are other strong contacts with the child and his family and it is in the child's best interest; or (c) the state where the child is present if the child has been abandoned, or if there is an emergency case of child neglect; or (d) the state of the forum if it is in the child's best interest and no other state could or would assume jurisdiction. In re Glass, 36 Colo. App. 91, 537 P.2d 1092 (1975).

Court had jurisdiction to modify an existing Oklahoma custody decree based on the home state provision of subsection (1)(a) where the child resided in Colorado for thirteen months before the alleged incident of sexual molestation by the child's father. People in Interest of K.G., 876 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1993).

Two-step analysis. Where Colorado has jurisdiction as a matter of law, the court must then determine whether its jurisdiction is exclusive or nonexclusive, and, if nonexclusive, the court must determine whether or not it should defer to another state's jurisdiction. Lynch v. Lynch, 770 P.2d 1383 (Colo. App. 1989); People in Interest of K.G., 876 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1993); L.G. v. People, 890 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1995).

Serving best interests of children where parents are located in separate jurisdictions. The best interests of children who are subjects of contested custody where the parents are located in separate jurisdictions are served when the forum determining custody has a significant connection and optimum access to relevant evidence about them. Wheeler v. District Court, 186 Colo. 218, 526 P.2d 658 (1974).

Jurisdictional considerations under subsection (1)(b) are governed by the best interest of the child and by the child's connections to the prospective forum state rather than the best interests of the feuding parties or the parties' connections to a prospective forum state. Nistico v. District Court, 791 P.2d 1128 (Colo. 1990).

The trial court had jurisdiction even though the mother had abducted the child, because this article provides that unclean hands do not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction. Nelson v. District Court, 186 Colo. 381, 527 P.2d 811 (1974).

Improper retention of the child should affect only the court's decision to exercise its jurisdiction. Nelson v. District Court, 186 Colo. 381, 527 P.2d 811 (1974).

Exercise of parens patriae jurisdiction under subsection (1)(c) is reserved for extraordinary circumstances. In re Glass, 36 Colo.

App. 91, 537 P.2d 1092 (1975); Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

Jurisdiction when domicile changes. Under subsection (1)(a), where mother and child have moved to another state after a dissolution of marriage proceeding in a court of this state, jurisdiction over issues of child custody is with the state that is the home state of the child at the commencement of the custody proceeding then pending before the court. Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

Where the child lived in Michigan during the six-month period preceding the filing of the father's motion of schedule visitation, Colorado does not have home state jurisdiction under subsection (1)(a). Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

Loss of jurisdiction of original state. While the intent of the uniform act is that the original state shall have continuing jurisdiction under § 14-13-115, such jurisdiction can be lost by the erosion of a child's and parents' significant connections with the state. McCarron v. District Court ex rel. County of Jefferson, 671 P.2d 953 (Colo. 1983); Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

No authority to modify unless other court without jurisdiction. A Colorado court is not authorized to modify an existing custody decree from another state even in an emergency unless the court which rendered that decree no longer has, or has declined to assume, jurisdiction of the matter. In re Thomas, 36 Colo. App. 96, 537 P.2d 1095 (1975).

Modification authorized where Colorado is home state. When Colorado is the home state of the children, Colorado has the jurisdiction to modify a sister state's decree in the best interests of the children. Kudler v. Smith, 643 P.2d 783 (Colo. App. 1981).

State court had jurisdiction. Where all of the individuals who had an interest in the child's future care, well-being, and custody were either domiciled in Colorado or sought to enforce their legal rights by way of habeas corpus or permanent custody petitions in the courts of Colorado, and sufficient evidence was available in Colorado from which the trial court could have concluded that the Colorado court could best resolve the issues relating to the child's future care and training, the trial court had jurisdiction to decide the issues raised in a petition for permanent custody although the child's domicile was not in Colorado. Nelson v. District Court, 186 Colo. 381, 527 P.2d 811 (1974).

Trial court properly held that Colorado is child's home state since she maintained significant connections here. Child has lived with her mother and attended school in Colorado for years, and both her guardian ad litem and therapist are here. Furthermore, the California courts in two districts both declined to exercise jurisdiction, which satisfies one of the alternative requirements of former § 14-13-04 (1)(d). In re Dickson, 983 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1998) (decided prior to 2000 repeal and reenactment).

Colorado court had jurisdiction in proceeding brought by children's mother to enforce a custody decree rendered in a sister state, which had originally given custody of the children to the father and had allowed the father to move the children to Colorado, where the children and the father were domiciled in Colorado and the children attended Colorado schools. Wheeler v. District Court, 186 Colo. 218, 526 P.2d 658 (1974).

Allegations by parents against each other do not justify jurisdiction. Although the allegations of both the father and the mother may indicate that the best interests of the child mandate judicial review of the fitness of each parent to have custody of the child, that does not necessarily justify the exercise of jurisdiction by the courts of this state. Roberts v. District Court, 198 Colo. 79, 596 P.2d 65 (1979).

Jurisdiction to modify foreign visitation order. A modification of visitation rights is a "custody determination" under § 14-13-103(2), and so, pursuant to this section, where a child and his parents have been living in this state for over a year, a trial court of this state has the jurisdiction to modify a foreign child visitation order. In re Bechard, 40 Colo. App. 516, 577 P.2d 778 (1978).

Foreign state without jurisdiction. Foreign state court which originally granted temporary custody to the petitioner, a paternal aunt, has lost jurisdiction since the residence of the parties in the foreign state was premised solely on a military assignment, and both the father and the mother have returned to the site of their domicile — Denver, Colorado — and the child's natural father, mother, and grandparents are all residents of Colorado and have significant connections to Colorado. Nelson v. Schweitzer, 189 Colo. 511, 542 P.2d 382 (1975).

Court lacked basis to grant noncustodial parent temporary custody of wrongfully retained minor child. Where no compelling reason exists for the exercise of parens patriae jurisdiction, and the child has been retained in this state by the noncustodial parent after the term of visitation has expired, the court has no basis in fact or law to grant the noncustodial parent temporary custody of the minor child. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

Colorado without jurisdiction. Where, on the date father filed his complaint in Colorado, all significant connections of child and mother were with Kansas and child's contacts with Colorado were minimal, Kansas had jurisdiction to make a custody determination. Hence, pursuant to § 14-13-115 (1), the Colorado court could not modify the existing Kansas custody decree. In re Thomas, 36 Colo. App. 96, 537 P.2d 1095 (1975).

To interpret § 14-13-115 as a prohibition against a Colorado court's exercise of jurisdiction to enter temporary and protective custody orders in order to protect children endangered by their surroundings would, in effect, vitiate the very purpose of the parens patriae jurisdiction granted by this section. E.P. v. District Court, 696 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1985).

Where on the date the Colorado petition for permanent custody of a child was filed by the father, a Colorado resident, in Colorado, and the uniform act was operable in California, and on that date, the mother was still a domiciliary of California, the child's home state under the uniform act was and is California, and, for all but the last three months before the petition was filed, the child lived with his mother and grandparents in California and had only minimal contacts with Colorado, therefore, California had jurisdiction to make a custody determination under the uniform act. Hence, by virtue of § 14-13-115(1), the Colorado court could not modify the existing California custody decree. In re Glass, 36 Colo. App. 91, 537 P.2d 1092 (1975).

A parent's self-serving statements that his child appeared unwell are not enough to confer jurisdiction, under subdivision (1)(c), on a district court in this state while a foreign court has continuing jurisdiction over the child. Woodhouse v. District Court, 196 Colo. 558, 587 P.2d 1199 (1978).

In a continuing custody dispute where none of the parties still live in Colorado, the fact that any proceedings related to custody inherently arise from an initial custody order, which was made by Colorado courts, does not necessarily give Colorado continuing jurisdictional authority. In re Pritchett, 80 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2003).

Under the uniform act, the Colorado court was without jurisdiction to resolve a second contempt proceeding once it had relinquished jurisdiction over all matters except the first contempt proceeding, and the North Dakota court was properly exercising jurisdiction. In re Pritchett, 80 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2003).

"The time of commencement of the proceeding" means the pending motion affecting custody or visitation rather than the initial dissolution action which resulted in the rendition of the custody decree. Barden v. Blau, 712 P.2d 481 (Colo. 1986).

Declining jurisdiction over controversy held not error. Garcia v. Martinez, 642 P.2d 53 (Colo. App. 1982).

Where both states had jurisdiction over child and trial court found that South Carolina was "home state" of child, trial court did not err in declining to exercise continuing jurisdiction. People in Interest of S.B., 742 P.2d 935 (Colo. App. 1987), cert. denied, 754 P.2d 1177 (Colo. 1988).

Under the doctrine of parens patriae, where an emergency existed concerning the immediate needs and welfare of a child within this state, our courts could have in such circumstances, entered custodial orders for the protection of such child, notwithstanding the child's domicile elsewhere and the existence of otherwise valid orders to the contrary theretofore entered in a sister state having jurisdiction of the parties, and such power could have been exercised not only in ordinary custody proceedings, but also in habeas corpus proceedings. Wilson v. Wilson, 172 Colo. 566, 474 P.2d 789 (1970).

Where the father alleged the existence of an emergency situation which he claimed required the Colorado court to intervene and modify the Kansas divorce decree, under such circumstances, the Colorado court, under its general parens patriae jurisdiction over a child physically present in the state, could properly make a temporary order to protect the child. In re Thomas, 36 Colo. App. 96, 537 P.2d 1095 (1975).

The forum of the domicile where the parties were known, where the matrimonial difficulties occurred, and where the evidence was available, was most likely to make just decisions of such issues, and it promoted neither justice nor respect for the courts to permit a spouse in prospect of an unfavorable decision to find sanctuary in another jurisdiction where adverse evidence was not available and the other spouse may not be able to appear. Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957); Petition of Kraudel v. Benner, 148 Colo. 525, 366 P.2d 667 (1961).

The courts of this state had jurisdiction, in a proper case, to hear all relevant testimony offered by either party in regard to the custody of a minor child domiciled in this state, and enter such judgment as would have been for the best interests of the minor, even though the judgment be different from that entered by a sister state, where it was shown to the courts of this state that the condition of the parties had so changed since the entry of the judgment by the sister state that the welfare of the minor required that the courts of this state hear and determine the question presented. Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957); Petition of Kraudel v. Benner, 148 Colo. 525, 366 P.2d 667 (1961).

State exercising jurisdiction under the uniform act should be state with closest connection to the child and the child's family and with access to the maximum amount of evidence concerning the child's residence. L.G. v. People, 890 P.2d 647 (Colo. 1995).

After a final decree in divorce, either party could change domicile at will, and the child's domicile then changed with that of the parent in whose custody he had been placed and the court of new domicile had jurisdiction over proceedings as to custody. Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957).

After a change of domicile it was held that any modification of the provisions of the final decree as to custody by the court of the former domicile was without extraterritorial effect in Colorado. Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957).

Award of custody by a court having jurisdiction should be recognized by other states and the facts upon which the award is based held res judicata. Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957); Petition of Kraudel v. Benner, 148 Colo. 525, 366 P.2d 667 (1961); Wilson v. Wilson, 172 Colo. 566, 474 P.2d 789 (1970).

Where the primary and controlling issue was the welfare of the child, and that issue was considered and determined by the court of another state, it could not and should not have been readjudicated in Colorado. Evans v. Evans, 136 Colo. 6, 314 P.2d 291 (1957).

While the custody issue may be decided in another state, there is no legal basis for a trial court to defer to another state on issues of maintenance and child support. In re Doria, 855 P.2d 28 (Colo. App. 1993).

Colorado courts do not have jurisdiction in case in which child was born in California and continued to reside there. The record suggests that California, not Colorado, is the state containing substantial evidence concerning the child's present or future care, protection, training, and personal relationships. Nistico v. District Court, 791 P.2d 1128 (Colo. 1990).

The district court did not abuse its discretion in exercising jurisdiction, even though it did not make findings as to the basis for its exercise of jurisdiction, where Colorado had jurisdiction based on the home state provision of the act and Oklahoma met none of the criteria outlined in either the Colorado or the substantially similar Oklahoma jurisdictional prerequisite provisions. People in Interest of K.G., 876 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1993).

Even though Colorado both had jurisdiction and could have exercised that jurisdiction under the act to modify an Oklahoma custody decree, under the federal parental kidnapping prevention act of 1980, the Colorado court was required to decline jurisdiction in favor of Oklahoma because Oklahoma was the state of the original custody determination and, therefore, had continuing jurisdiction under Oklahoma law since the father remained a resident of Oklahoma and he had exercised his visitation rights in Oklahoma. Therefore, the portion of the Colorado court's judgment that modified mother's custody and father's visitation rights under the Oklahoma custody determination could not stand. People in Interest of K.G., 876 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1993).

Foreign custody decree could be modified by a Colorado court where the decree has been docketed in Colorado and Colorado is now the home state of the children. In re Whitley, 775 P.2d 95 (Colo. App. 1989).

Colorado not required to give full faith and credit to another state's custody order if order was not entered in compliance with the PKPA. Under the PKPA, a state's custody determination is in conformance with the PKPA if the court of the state has jurisdiction under its own law and the exercise of jurisdiction meets one of the conditions set forth in the PKPA. Because Nebraska, like Colorado, has adopted the UCCJEA, and the UCCJEA is substantively identical to the PKPA, the provisions of Nebraska's state law conform to the PKPA. Therefore, because Nebraska lacked jurisdiction to enter the custody order under its own law, it lacked jurisdiction to enter the order under the PKPA and Colorado is not required to recognize and enforce the order pursuant to the PKPA. In re L.S., 257 P.3d 201 (Colo. 2011).

Where New York family court referee determined that it lacked exclusive, continuing jurisdiction to modify New York custody order and declined jurisdiction, a New York Supreme Court (trial court) lacked jurisdiction to enter order in a subsequent motion to modify custody. New York has adopted the UCCJEA and, therefore, the jurisdictional provisions of New York law are substantially identical to the PKPA. Consequently, because the second New York court did not have jurisdiction over the matter under New York law, the PKPA does not require that Colorado accord full faith and credit to the second court's custody modification order and the Colorado court erred in enforcing the New York order modifying custody. In re Dedie & Springston, 255 P.3d 1142 (Colo. 2011).

When the parties to a divorce remarry each other, the court's jurisdiction over the parties is terminated and the provisions of the prior decree for matters of child support, custody, and maintenance are nullified. In re Doria, 855 P.2d 28 (Colo. App. 1993).

14-13-202. Exclusive, continuing jurisdiction. (1) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-204, a court of this state that has made a child-custody determination consistent with section 14-13-201 or 14-13-203 has exclusive, continuing jurisdiction over the determination until:

(a) A court of this state determines that the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent do not have a significant connection with this state and that substantial evidence is no longer available in this state concerning the child's care, protection, training, and personal relationships; or

(b) A court of this state or a court of another state determines that the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent do not presently reside in this state.

(2) A court of this state that has made a child-custody determination and does not have exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under this section may modify that determination only if it has jurisdiction to make an initial determination under section 14-13-201.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This is a new section addressing continuing jurisdiction. Continuing jurisdiction was not specifically addressed in the UCCJA. Its absence caused considerable confusion, particularly because the PKPA, § 1738(d), requires other States to give Full Faith and Credit to custody determinations made by the original decree State pursuant to the decree State's continuing jurisdiction so long as that State has jurisdiction under its own law and remains the residence of the child or any contestant.

This section provides the rules of continuing jurisdiction and borrows from UIFSA as well as recent UCCJA case law. The continuing jurisdiction of the original decree State is exclusive. It continues until one of two events occurs:

1. If a parent or a person acting as a parent remains in the original decree State, continuing jurisdiction is lost when neither the child, the child and a parent, nor the child and a person acting as a parent continue to have a significant connection with the original decree State and there is no longer substantial evidence concerning the child's care, protection, training and personal relations in that State. In other words, even if the child has acquired a new home State, the original decree State retains exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, so long as the general requisites of the "substantial connection" jurisdiction provisions of Section 14-13-201 are met. If the relationship between the child and the person remaining in the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction becomes so attenuated that the court could no longer find significant connections and substantial evidence, jurisdiction would no longer exist.

The use of the phrase "a court of this State" under subsection (1)(a) makes it clear that the original decree State is the sole determinant of whether jurisdiction continues. A party seeking to modify a custody determination must obtain an order from the original decree State stating that it no longer has jurisdiction.

2. Continuing jurisdiction is lost when the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent no longer reside in the original decree State. The exact language of subparagraph (1)(b) was the subject of considerable debate. Ultimately the Conference settled on the phrase that "a court of this State or a court of another State determines that the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent do not presently reside in this State" to determine when the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction of a State ended. The phrase is meant to be identical in meaning to the language of the PKPA which provides that full faith and credit is to be given to custody determinations made by a State in the exercise of its continuing jurisdiction when that "State remains the residence of ... ." The phrase is also the equivalent of the language "continues to reside" which occurs in UIFSA § 205(a)(1) to determine the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction of the State that made a support order. The phrase "remains the residence of" in the PKPA has been the subject of conflicting case law. It is the intention of this Act that paragraph (1)(b) of this section means that the named persons no longer continue to actually live within the State. Thus, unless a modification proceeding has been commenced, when the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents physically leave the State to live elsewhere, the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction ceases.

The phrase "do not presently reside" is not used in the sense of a technical domicile. The fact that the original determination State still considers one parent a domiciliary does not prevent it from losing exclusive, continuing jurisdiction after the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents have moved from the State.

If the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents have all left the State which made the custody determination prior to the commencement of the modification proceeding, considerations of waste of resources dictate that a court in State B, as well as a court in State A, can decide that State A has lost exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

The continuing jurisdiction provisions of this section are narrower than the comparable provisions of the PKPA. That statute authorizes continuing jurisdiction so long as any “contestant” remains in the original decree State and that State continues to have jurisdiction under its own law. This Act eliminates the contestant classification. The Conference decided that a remaining grandparent or other third party who claims a right to visitation, should not suffice to confer exclusive, continuing jurisdiction on the State that made the original custody determination after the departure of the child, the parents and any person acting as a parent. The significant connection to the original decree State must relate to the child, the child and a parent, or the child and a person acting as a parent. This revision does not present a conflict with the PKPA. The PKPA’s reference in § 1738(d) to § 1738 (c)(1) recognizes that States may narrow the class of cases that would be subject to exclusive, continuing jurisdiction. However, during the transition from the UCCJA to this Act, some States may continue to base continuing jurisdiction on the continued presence of a contestant, such as a grandparent. The PKPA will require that such decisions be enforced. The problem will disappear as States adopt this Act to replace the UCCJA.

Jurisdiction attaches at the commencement of a proceeding. If State A had jurisdiction under this section at the time a modification proceeding was commenced there, it would not be lost by all parties moving out of the State prior to the conclusion of proceeding. State B would not have jurisdiction to hear a modification unless State A decided that State B was more appropriate under Section 14-13-207.

Exclusive, continuing jurisdiction is not reestablished if, after the child, the parents, and all persons acting as parents leave the State, the non-custodial parent returns. As subsection (2) provides, once a State has lost exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, it can modify its own determination only if it has jurisdiction under the standards of Section 14-13-201. If another State acquires exclusive continuing jurisdiction under this section, then its orders cannot be modified even if this State has once again become the home State of the child.

In accordance with the majority of UCCJA case law, the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction may relinquish jurisdiction when it determines that another State would be a more convenient forum under the principles of Section 14-13-207.

ANNOTATION

In a continuing custody dispute where none of the parties still live in Colorado, the fact that any proceedings related to custody inherently arise from an initial custody order, which was made by Colorado courts, does not necessarily give Colorado continuing jurisdictional authority. In re Pritchett, 80 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2003).

“Presently reside” is not equivalent to “currently reside” or “physical presence”. “Presently reside” is not confined only to a party’s physical presence within the borders of a state, but necessitates an inquiry broader than technical domicile into the totality of the circumstances that make up domicile—that is, a person’s permanent home to which he or she intends to return to and remain. In re Brandt, 2012 CO 3, 268 P.3d 406.

Totality of the circumstance test to determine if a party “presently resides” is a mixed question of fact and law and includes, but is not limited to, the length and reasons for the parents’ and the child’s absence from the state of initial jurisdiction; their intent in departing from the state and returning to it; reserve and active military assignments affecting one or both parents; where they maintain a home, car, driver’s license, job, professional licensure, and voting registration; where they pay state taxes; the initial state’s determination of residency based on the facts and that state’s law; and any other circumstances demonstrated by evidence in the case. In re Brandt, 2012 CO 3, 268 P.3d 406.

14-13-203. Jurisdiction to modify determination. (1) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-204, a court of this state may not modify a child-custody determination made by a court of another state unless a court of this state has jurisdiction to make an initial determination under section 14-13-201 (1) (a) or 14-13-201 (1) (b) and:

(a) The court of the other state determines it no longer has exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-202 or that a court of this state would be a more convenient forum under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-207; or

(b) A court of this state or a court of the other state determines that the child, the child’s parents, and any person acting as a parent do not presently reside in the other state.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section complements Section 14-13-202 and is addressed to the court that is confronted with a proceeding to modify a custody determination of another State. It prohibits a court from modifying a custody determination made consistently with this Act by a court in another State unless a court of that State determines that it no longer has exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 14-13-202 or that this State would be a more convenient forum under Section 14-

13-207. The modification State is not authorized to determine that the original decree State has lost its jurisdiction. The only exception is when the child, the child's parents, and any person acting as a parent do not presently reside in the other State. In other words, a court of the modification State can determine that all parties have moved away from the original State. The court of the modification State must have jurisdiction under the standards of Section 14-13-201.

Intent of child custody jurisdiction act. The uniform child custody jurisdiction act attempts to guarantee reasonable security and continuity of environment to children by discouraging their unilateral removal from one state to another to avoid obeying custodial orders. The uniform act establishes additional conditions and restrictions before Colorado courts can modify existing foreign custody decrees. In re Glass, 36 Colo. App. 91, 537 P.2d 1092 (1975).

Fry v. Ball, 190 Colo. 128, 544 P.2d 402 (1975).

No authority to modify unless foreign state without jurisdiction. A Colorado court is not authorized to modify an existing custody decree from another state even in an emergency unless the court which rendered that decree no longer has or has declined to assume jurisdiction of the matter. In re Thomas, 36 Colo. App. 96, 537 P.2d 1095 (1975).

To interpret this section as a prohibition against a Colorado court's exercise of jurisdiction to enter temporary and protective custody orders in order to protect children endangered by their surroundings would, in effect, vitiate the very purpose of the parens patriae jurisdiction granted by § 14-13-104. E.P. v. District Court, 696 P.2d 254 (Colo. 1985).

Section 14-13-114 and this section require a court to recognize the valid custody decrees of other jurisdictions and not to modify such decrees unless the rendering state no longer has jurisdiction or has declined to exercise jurisdiction. Woodhouse v. District Court, 196 Colo. 558, 587 P.2d 1199 (1978).

Absent exceptional circumstances, a Colorado court must refrain from modifying another state's custody decree if that state has continuing jurisdiction over the custody matter at the time the action to modify is instituted in Colorado. Kraft v. District Court, 197 Colo. 10, 593 P.2d 321 (1979).

Loss of jurisdiction of original state. While the intent of the uniform act is that the original state shall have continuing jurisdiction under this section, such jurisdiction can be lost by the erosion of a child's and parents' significant connections with the state. Application of parens patriae jurisdiction. Where the father alleged the existence of an emergency situation which he claimed required the Colorado court to intervene and modify the Kansas divorce decree, under such circumstances, the Colorado court, under its general parens patriae jurisdiction over a child physically present in the state, could properly make a temporary order to protect the child. In re Thomas, 36 Colo. App. 96, 537 P.2d 1095 (1975).

Foreign court's jurisdiction over custody preclude Colorado court's exercise of jurisdiction. If the courts of another state have continuing jurisdiction over custody and have not declined to exercise that jurisdiction, then a Colorado court is precluded by § 14-13-114 and this section from exercising jurisdiction in the case, at least in the absence of a grave emergency. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

Judicial relief may extend beyond issuance of temporary orders for compelling reasons only. Generally, judicial relief should not extend beyond the issuance of temporary protective orders pending the application to the court of the rendering state for appropriate modification of the custody decree. Only when there are compelling reasons, articulated in the record, that render such out-of-state application impractical, should a Colorado court grant anything but temporary relief under its parens patriae jurisdiction. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

A Colorado trial court cannot modify a California custody order unless and until the court has determined whether the California court would continue to exercise jurisdiction. The burden was on the prospective adoptive parents to establish by competent evidence all facts essential to jurisdiction. (2) If there is no previous child-custody determination that is entitled to be enforced under this article and a child-custody proceeding has not been commenced in a court of a state having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, a child-custody determination made under this section remains in effect until an order is obtained from a court of a state having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203. If a child-custody proceeding has not been or is not commenced in a court of a state having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, a child-custody determination made under this section becomes a final determination, if it so provides and this state becomes the home state of the child.

under this article, or a child-custody proceeding has been commenced in a court of a state having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, any order issued by a court of this state under this section must specify in the order a period that the court considers adequate to allow the person seeking an order to obtain an order from the state having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203. A court of this state that is exercising jurisdiction pursuant to sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, upon being informed that a child-custody proceeding has been commenced in, or a child-custody determination has been made by, a court of another state under a statute similar to this section shall immediately communicate with the court of that state to resolve the emergency, protect the safety of the parties and the child, and determine a period for the duration of the temporary order.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The provisions of this section are an elaboration of what was formerly Section 3(a)(3) of the UCCJA. It remains, as Professor Bodenheimer's comments to that section noted, "an extraordinary jurisdiction reserved for extraordinary circumstances."

This section codifies and clarifies several aspects of what has become common practice in emergency jurisdiction cases under the UCCJA and PKPA. First, a court may take jurisdiction to protect the child even though it can claim neither home State nor significant connection jurisdiction. Second, the duties of States to recognize, enforce and not modify a custody determination of another State do not take precedence over the need to enter a temporary emergency order to protect the child.

Third, a custody determination made under the emergency jurisdiction provisions of this section is a temporary order. The purpose of the order is to protect the child until the State that has jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203 enters an order.

Under certain circumstances, however, subsection (2) provides that an emergency custody determination may become a final custody determination. If there is no existing custody determination, and no custody proceeding is filed in a State with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, an emergency custody determination made under this section becomes a final determination, if it so provides, when the State that issues the order becomes the home State of the child.

Subsection (3) is concerned with the temporary nature of the order when there exists a prior custody order that is entitled to be enforced under this Act or when a subsequent custody proceeding is filed in a State with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203. Subsection (3) allows the temporary order to remain in effect only so long as is necessary for the person who obtained the determination under this section to present a case and obtain an order from the State with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203. That time period must be specified in the order. If there is an existing order by a State with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, that order need not be reconfirmed. The temporary emergency determination would lapse by its own terms at the end of the specified period or when an order is obtained from the court with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-202 to 14-13-203. The court with appropriate jurisdiction also may decide, under the provisions of 207, that the court that entered the emergency order is in a better position to address the safety of the person who obtained the emergency order, or the child, and decline jurisdiction under Section 14-13-207.

Any hearing in the State with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203 on the temporary emergency determination is subject to the provisions of Sections 14-13-111 and 14-13-112. These sections facilitate the presentation of testimony and evidence taken out of State. If there is a concern that the person obtaining the temporary emergency determination under this section would be in danger upon returning to the State with jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203, these provisions should be used.

Subsection (4) requires communication between the court of the State that is exercising jurisdiction under this section and the court of another State that is exercising jurisdiction under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203. The pleading rules of Section 14-13-209 apply fully to determinations made under this section. Therefore, a person seeking a temporary emergency custody determination is required to inform the court pursuant to Section 14-13-209 (4) of any proceeding concerning the child that has been commenced elsewhere. The person commencing the custody proceeding under Sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203 is required under Section 14-13-209 (1) to inform the court about the temporary emergency proceeding. These pleading requirements are to be strictly followed so that the courts are able to resolve the emergency, protect the safety of the parties and the child, and determine a period for the duration of the temporary order.

Relationship to the PKPA. The definition of emergency has been modified to harmonize it with the PKPA. The PKPA's definition of emergency jurisdiction does not use the term "neglect." It defines an emergency as "mistreatment or abuse." Therefore "neglect" has been eliminated as a basis for the assumption of temporary emergency jurisdiction. Neglect is so elastic a concept that it could justify taking emergency jurisdiction in a wide variety of cases. Under the PKPA, if a State exercised temporary emergency jurisdiction based on a finding that the child was neglected without a finding of mistreatment or abuse, the order would not be entitled to federal enforcement in other States.

Relationship to Protective Order Proceedings. The UCCJA and the PKPA were enacted long before the advent of state procedures on the use of protective orders to alleviate problems of domestic violence. Issues of custody and visitation often arise within the context of protective order proceedings since the protective order is often invoked to keep one parent away from the other parent and the children when there is a threat of violence. This Act recognizes that a protective order proceeding will often be the procedural vehicle for invoking jurisdiction by authorizing a court to assume temporary emergency jurisdiction when the child's parent or sibling has been subjected to or threatened with mistreatment or abuse.

In order for a protective order that contains a custody determination to be enforceable in another State it must comply with the provisions of this Act and the PKPA. Although the Violence Against Women's Act (VAWA), 18 U.S.C. § 2265, does provide an independent basis for the granting of full faith and credit to protective orders, it expressly excludes "custody" orders from the definition of "protective order," 22 U.S.C. § 2266.

Many States authorize the issuance of protective orders in an emergency without notice and hearing. This Act does not address the propriety of that procedure. It is left to local law to determine the circumstances under which such an order could be issued, and the type of notice that is required, in a case without an interstate element. However, an order issued after the assumption of temporary emergency jurisdiction is entitled to interstate enforcement and nonmodification under this Act and the PKPA only if there has been notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard as set out in Section 14-13-205. Although VAWA does require that full faith and credit be accorded to ex parte protective orders if notice will be given and there will be a reasonable opportunity to be heard, it does not include a "custody" order within the definition of "protective order."

VAWA does play an important role in determining whether an emergency exists. That Act requires a court to give full faith and credit to a protective order issued in another State if the order is made in accordance with the VAWA. This would include those findings of fact contained in the order. When a court is deciding whether an emergency exists under this section, it may not relitigate the existence of those factual findings.

Annotator's note. Section 14-13-204 is similar to § 14-13-104 (1)(c) as it existed prior to the 2000 repeal and reenactment of this article. Relevant cases construing § 14-13-104 have been included in the annotations under § 14-13-201.

Despite the fact that Texas court had made child-custody determination, temporary emergency jurisdiction was proper when child's father was jailed during a child's visit with mother in Colorado; except that only temporary emergency jurisdiction for a specified period to allow father to seek an order from Texas court was proper, and magistrate's order terminating the parental rights of both parents exceeded Colorado's temporary emergency jurisdiction. *People ex rel. 14-13-205. Notice - opportunity to be heard - joinder. (1) Before a child-custody determination is made under this article, notice and an opportunity to be heard in accordance with the standards of section 14-13-108 must be given to all persons entitled to notice under the law of this state as in child-custody proceedings between residents of this state, any parent whose parental rights have not been previously terminated, and any person having physical custody of the child.

(2) This article does not govern the enforceability of a child-custody determination made without notice or an opportunity to be heard.

(3) The obligation to join a party and the right to intervene as a party in a child-custody proceeding under this article are governed by the law of this state as in child-custody proceedings between residents of this state.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section generally continues the notice provisions of the UCCJA. However, it does not attempt to dictate who is entitled to notice. Local rules vary with regard to persons entitled to seek custody of a child. Therefore, this section simply indicates that persons entitled to seek custody should receive notice but leaves the rest of the determination to local law. Parents whose parental rights have not been previously terminated and persons having physical custody of the child are specifically mentioned as persons who must be given notice. The PKPA, § 1738A(e), requires that they be given notice in order for the custody determination to be entitled to full faith and credit under that Act.

State laws also vary with regard to whether a court has the power to issue an enforceable temporary custody order without notice and hearing in a case without any interstate element. Such temporary orders may be enforceable, as against due process objections, for a short period of time if issued as a protective order or a temporary restraining order to protect a child from harm. Whether such orders are enforceable locally is beyond the scope of this Act. Subsection (2) clearly provides that the validity of such orders and the enforceability of such orders is governed by the law which authorizes them and not by this Act. An order is entitled to interstate enforcement and nonmodification under this Act only if there has been notice and an opportunity to be heard. The PKPA, § 1738A(e), also requires that a custody determination is entitled to full faith and credit only if there has been notice and an opportunity to be heard.

Rules requiring joinder of people with an interest in the custody of and visitation with a child also vary widely throughout the country. The UCCJA has a separate section on joinder of parties which has been eliminated. The issue of who is entitled to intervene and who must be joined in a custody proceeding is to be determined by local state law.

A sentence of the UCCJA § 4 which indicated that persons outside the State were to be given notice and an opportunity to be heard in accordance with the provision of that Act has been eliminated as redundant.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Section 14-13-205 is similar to § 14-13-105 as it existed prior to the 2000 repeal and reenactment of this article. Relevant cases construing § 14-13-105 have been included in the annotations under § 14-13-108.

14-13-206. Simultaneous proceedings. (1) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-204, a court of this state may not exercise its jurisdiction under this part 2 if, at the time of the commencement of the proceeding, a proceeding concerning the custody of the child has been commenced in a court of another state having jurisdiction substantially in conformity with this article, unless the proceeding has been terminated or is stayed by the court of the other state because a court of this state is a more convenient forum under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-207.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-204, a court of this state, before hearing a child-custody proceeding, shall examine the court documents and other information supplied by the parties pursuant to section 14-13-209. If the court determines that a child-custody proceeding has been commenced in a court in another state having jurisdiction substantially in accordance with a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with this article, the court of this state shall stay its proceeding and communicate with the court of the other state. If the court of the state having jurisdiction substantially in accordance with this article does not determine that the court of this state is a more appropriate forum, the court of this state shall dismiss the proceeding.

(3) In a proceeding to modify a child-custody determination, a court of this state shall determine whether a proceeding to enforce the determination has been commenced in another state. If a proceeding to enforce a child-custody determination has been commenced in another state, the court of this state may:

- (a) Stay the proceeding for modification pending the entry of an order of a court of the other state enforcing, staying, denying, or dismissing the proceeding for enforcement;
- (b) Enjoin the parties from continuing with the proceeding for enforcement; or
- (c) Proceed with the modification under conditions it considers appropriate.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section represents the remnants of the simultaneous proceedings provision of the UCCJA § 6. The problem of simultaneous proceedings is no longer a significant issue. Most of the problems have been resolved by the prioritization of home state jurisdiction under Section 14-13-201; the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction provisions of Section 14-13-202; and the prohibitions on modification of Section 14-13-203. If there is a home State, there can be no exercise of significant connection jurisdiction in an initial child custody determination and, therefore, no simultaneous proceedings. If there is a State of exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, there cannot be another State with concurrent jurisdiction and, therefore, no simultaneous proceedings. Of course, the home State, as well as the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, could defer to another State under Section 14-13-207. However, that decision is left entirely to the home State or the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

Under this Act, the simultaneous proceedings problem will arise only when there is no home State, no State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction and more than one significant connection State. For those cases, this section retains the "first in time" rule of the UCCJA. Subsection (2) retains the UCCJA's policy favoring judicial communication. Communication between courts is required when it is determined that a proceeding has been commenced in another State.

Subsection (3) concerns the problem of simultaneous proceedings in the State with modification jurisdiction and enforcement proceedings under part 3. This section authorizes the court with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction to stay the modification proceeding pending the outcome of the enforcement proceeding, to enjoin the parties from continuing with the enforcement proceeding, or to continue the modification proceeding under such conditions as it determines are appropriate. The court may wish to communicate with the enforcement court. However, communication is not mandatory. Although the enforcement State is required by the PKPA to enforce according to its terms a custody determination made consistently with the PKPA, that duty is subject to the decree being modified by a State with the power to do so under the PKPA. An order to enjoin the parties from enforcing the decree is the equivalent of a temporary modification by a State with the authority to do so. The concomitant provision addressed to the enforcement court is Section 14-13-306 of this Act. That section requires the enforcement court to communicate with the modification court in order to determine what action the modification court wishes the enforcement court to take.

The term "pending" that was utilized in the UCCJA section on simultaneous proceeding has been replaced. It has caused considerable confusion in the case law. It has been replaced with the term "commencement of the proceeding" as more accurately reflecting the policy behind this section. The latter term is defined in Section 14-13-102 (5).

Annotator's note. Since § 14-13-206 is similar to § 14-13-107 as it existed prior to the 2000 repeal and reenactment of this article, relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this section.

When communication with other court required. The requirement for communication with the other court is appropriate if the trial court is unsure of whether to accept jurisdiction and is seeking information as to the most appropriate forum, but where the trial court is not uncertain as to the more appropriate forum for resolution of the issues, communication is not required. In re Edilson, 637 P.2d 362 (Colo. 1981).

The existence or non-existence of orders in the other state is not a factor critical to invocation of this section; rather, communication between courts of different states is required if "proceedings are pending". In re Olmo, 701 P.2d 866 (Colo. App. 1984).

The appeal of a child custody order in the Kansas courts was a "pending" proceeding within the meaning of subsection (1). In re Rector, 39 Colo. App. 111, 565 P.2d 950 (1977).

District Court*, 199 Colo. 207, 606 P.2d 853 (1980).

Procedure when case pending in court of another state. Where the rendering court in another state initially had jurisdiction of a child custody case and the case is still pending in that judicial system, the proper course of action in seeking change of custody in this state is to request a stay from the court in which the case is pending. In re Rector, 39 Colo. App. 111, 565 P.2d 950 (1977).

Because child-custody proceeding, in the form of a restraining order issued against mother, was pending in Texas when Colorado court filed dependency and neglect action and because child-custody proceeding had not been terminated or stayed by the court in Texas, Colorado court only properly had temporary emergency jurisdiction. People ex rel. M.C., 94 P.3d 1220 (Colo. App. 2004).

Court to determine conformity with the Colorado custody act. Although this section prohibits a court from proceeding with a petition concerning child custody where the court of another state is "exercising jurisdiction substantially in conformity with this article" and the other court refuses to stay its proceedings, Colorado trial courts are free to determine whether the other court's proceedings are substantially in conformity with the Colorado custody act. Bakke v. District Court, 719 P.2d 313 (Colo. 1986).

Where there was no custody proceeding pending in sister state which had granted the original custody decree, this section was not a bar to a Colorado court hearing challenge to sister state's subsequent decree ordering that father, who had custody of the children and who was domiciled in Colorado for over a year, return the children to their mother. Wheeler v. District Court, 186 Colo. 218, 526 P.2d 658 (1974).

This section, which generally favors exercise of jurisdiction in the state where custody is pending, does not apply where jurisdiction had never existed in this state. Colorado did not have priority jurisdiction merely because simultaneous proceedings were commenced first in this state where the children were born in another state and had always lived in another state. In re Tonnesen, 937 P.2d 863 (Colo. App. 1996).

necessarily give Colorado continuing jurisdictional authority. In re Pritchett, 80 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2003).

Applied in In re Baisley, 749 P.2d 446 (Colo. App. 1987); G.B. v. Arapahoe County Ct., 890 P.2d 1153 (Colo. 1995).

14-13-207. Inconvenient forum. (1) A court of this state that has jurisdiction under this article to make a child-custody determination may decline to exercise its jurisdiction at any time if it determines that it is an inconvenient forum under the circumstances and that a court of another state is a more appropriate forum. The issue of inconvenient forum may be raised upon motion of a party, the court's own motion, or request of another court.

(2) Before determining whether it is an inconvenient forum, a court of this state shall consider whether it is appropriate for a court of another state to exercise jurisdiction. For this purpose, the court shall allow the parties to submit information and shall consider all relevant factors, including:

(a) Whether domestic violence or domestic abuse has occurred and is likely to continue in the future and which state could best protect the parties and the child;

(b) The length of time the child has resided outside this state;

(c) The distance between the court in this state and the court in the state that would assume jurisdiction;

(d) The relative financial circumstances of the parties;

(e) Any agreement of the parties as to which state should assume jurisdiction;

(f) The nature and location of the evidence required to resolve the pending litigation, including testimony of the child;

(g) The ability of the court of each state to decide the issue expeditiously and the procedures necessary to present the evidence; and

(h) The familiarity of the court of each state with the facts and issues in the pending litigation.

(3) If a court of this state determines that it is an inconvenient forum and that a court of another state is a more appropriate forum, it shall stay the proceedings upon condition that a child-custody proceeding be promptly commenced in another designated state and may impose any other condition the court considers just and proper.

(4) A court of this state may decline to exercise its jurisdiction under this article if a child-custody determination is incidental to an action for divorce, dissolution of marriage, or another proceeding while still retaining jurisdiction over the divorce, dissolution of marriage, or other proceeding.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section retains the focus of Section 7 of the UCCJA. It authorizes courts to decide that another State is in a better position to make the custody determination, taking into consideration the relative circumstances of the parties. If so, the court may defer to the other State.

The list of factors that the court may consider has been updated from the UCCJA. The list is not meant to be exclusive. Several provisions require comment. Subparagraph (2)(a) is concerned specifically with domestic violence and other matters affecting the health and safety of the parties. For this purpose, the court should determine whether the parties are located in different States because one party is a victim of domestic violence or child abuse. If domestic violence or child abuse has occurred, this factor authorizes the court to consider which State can best protect the victim from further violence or abuse.

In applying subparagraph (2)(c), courts should realize that distance concerns can be alleviated by applying the communication and cooperation provisions of Sections 14-13-111 and 14-13-112.

In applying subsection (2)(g) on expeditious resolution of the controversy, the court could consider the different procedural and evidentiary laws of the two States, as well as the flexibility of the court dockets. It also should consider the ability of a court to arrive at a solution to all the legal issues surrounding the family. If one State has jurisdiction to decide both the custody and support issues, it would be desirable to determine that State to be the most convenient forum. The same is true when children of the same family live in different States. It would be inappropriate to require parents to have custody proceedings in several States when one State could resolve the custody of all the children.

Before determining whether to decline or retain jurisdiction, the court of this State may communicate, in accordance with Section 14-13-110, with a court of another State and exchange information pertinent to the assumption of jurisdiction by either court.

There are two departures from Section 7 of the UCCJA. First, the court may not simply dismiss the action. To do so would leave the case in limbo. Rather the court shall stay the case and direct the parties to file in the State that has been found to be the more convenient forum. The court is also authorized to impose any other conditions it considers appropriate. This might include the issuance of temporary custody orders during the time necessary to commence a proceeding in the designated State, dismissing the case if the custody proceeding is not commenced in the other State or resuming jurisdiction if a court of the other State refuses to take the case.

Second, UCCJA, § 7(g) which allowed the court to assess fees and costs if it was a clearly inappropriate court, has been eliminated. If a court has jurisdiction under this Act, it could not be a clearly inappropriate court.

Jurisdiction declined by reason of conduct. (1) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-204, or by other law of this state, if a person seeking to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of this state under this article has engaged in unjustifiable conduct, the court shall decline to exercise its jurisdiction unless:

(a) The parents and all persons acting as parents have acquiesced in the exercise of jurisdiction;

(b) A court of the state otherwise having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203 determines that this state is a more appropriate forum under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-207; or

(c) No court of any other state would have jurisdiction under the criteria specified in a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203.

(2) If a court of this state declines to exercise its jurisdiction pursuant to subsection (1) of this section, it may fashion an appropriate remedy to ensure the safety of the child and prevent a repetition of the unjustifiable conduct, including staying the proceeding until a child-custody proceeding is commenced in a court having jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with sections 14-13-201 to 14-13-203.

(3) If a court dismisses a petition or stays a proceeding because it declines to exercise its jurisdiction pursuant to subsection (1) of this section, it shall assess against the party seeking to invoke its jurisdiction necessary and reasonable expenses including costs, communication expenses, attorney fees, investigative fees, expenses for witnesses, travel expenses, and child care during the course of the proceedings, unless the party from whom fees are sought establishes that the assessment would be clearly inappropriate. The court may not assess fees, costs, or expenses against this state unless authorized by law other than this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The "Clean Hands" section of the UCCJA has been truncated in this Act. Since there is no longer a multiplicity of jurisdictions which could take cognizance of a child-custody proceeding, there is less of a concern that one parent will take the child to another jurisdiction in an attempt to find a more favorable forum. Most of the jurisdictional problems generated by abducting parents should be solved by the prioritization of home State in Section 14-13-201; the exclusive, continuing jurisdiction provisions of Section 14-13-202; and the ban on modification in Section 14-13-203. For example, if a parent takes the child from the home State and seeks an original custody determination elsewhere, the stay-at-home parent has six months to file a custody petition under the extended home state jurisdictional provision of Section 14-13-201, which will ensure that the case is retained in the home State. If a petitioner for a modification determination takes the child from the State that issued the original custody determination, another State cannot assume jurisdiction as long as the first State exercises exclusive, continuing jurisdiction.

Nonetheless, there are still a number of cases where parents, or their surrogates, act in a reprehensible manner, such as removing, secreting, retaining, or restraining the child. This section ensures that abducting parents will not receive an advantage for their unjustifiable conduct. If the conduct that creates the jurisdiction is unjustified, courts must decline to exercise jurisdiction that is inappropriately invoked by one of the parties. For example, if one parent abducts the child pre-decree and establishes a new home State, that jurisdiction will decline to hear the case. There are exceptions. If the other party has acquiesced in the court's jurisdiction, the court may hear the case. Such acquiescence may occur by filing a pleading submitting to the jurisdiction, or by not filing in the court that would otherwise have jurisdiction under this Act. Similarly, if the court that would have jurisdiction finds that the court of this State is a more appropriate forum, the court may hear the case.

This section applies to those situations where jurisdiction exists because of the unjustified conduct of the person seeking to invoke it. If, for example, a parent in the State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 14-13-202 has either restrained the child from visiting with the other parent, or has retained the child after visitation, and seeks to modify the decree, this section is inapplicable. The conduct of restraining or retaining the child did not create jurisdiction. Jurisdiction existed under this Act without regard to the parent's conduct. Whether a court should decline to hear the parent's request to modify is a matter of local law.

The focus in this section is on the unjustified conduct of the person who invokes the jurisdiction of the court. A technical illegality or wrong is insufficient to trigger the applicability of this section. This is particularly important in cases involving domestic violence and child abuse. Domestic violence victims should not be charged with unjustifiable conduct for conduct that occurred in the process of fleeing domestic violence, even if their conduct is technically illegal. Thus, if a parent flees with a child to escape domestic violence and in the process violates a joint custody decree, the case should not be automatically dismissed under this section. An inquiry must be made into whether the flight was justified under the circumstances of the case. However, an abusive parent who seizes the child and flees to another State to establish jurisdiction has engaged in unjustifiable conduct and the new State must decline to exercise jurisdiction under this section.

Subsection (2) authorizes the court to fashion an appropriate remedy for the safety of the child and to prevent a repetition of the unjustified conduct. Thus, it would be appropriate for the court to notify the other parent and to provide for foster care for the child until the child is returned to the other parent. The court could also stay the proceeding and require that a custody proceeding be instituted in another State that would have jurisdiction under this Act. It should be noted that the court is not making a forum non conveniens analysis in this section. If the conduct is unjustifiable, it must decline jurisdiction. It may, however, retain jurisdiction until a custody proceeding is commenced in the appropriate tribunal if such retention is necessary to prevent a repetition of the wrongful conduct or to ensure the safety of the child.

The attorney's fee standard for this section is patterned after the International Child Abduction Remedies Act, 42 U.S.C. § 11607(b)(3). The assessed costs and fees are to be paid to the respondent who established that jurisdiction was based on unjustifiable conduct.

Discretion to decline jurisdiction limited. A Colorado court's discretion to decline jurisdiction is limited by whether another state has jurisdiction to decide custody, whether it is in the best interests of the children that the Colorado court assume jurisdiction, and whether declining jurisdiction would be just and proper under the circumstances. Bakke v. district Court, 719 P.2d 313 (Colo. 1986).

Court lacks basis to grant noncustodial parent temporary custody of wrongfully retained minor. Where no compelling reason exists for the exercise of parens patriae jurisdiction, and the child has been retained in this state by the noncustodial parent after the term of visitation has expired, the court has no basis in fact or law to grant the noncustodial parent temporary custody of the minor child. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

The trial court had jurisdiction even though the mother had abducted the child, because this article provides that unclean hands do not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction. Nelson v. District Court, 186 Colo. 381, 527 P.2d 811 (1974).

Applied in Woodhouse v. District Court, 196 Colo. 558, 587 P.2d 1199 (1978); In re Johnson, 634 P.2d 1034 (Colo. App. 1981).

14-13-209. Information to be submitted to court. (1) Subject to a court order allowing a party to maintain the confidentiality of addresses and other identifying information and to subsection (5) of this section, in a child-custody proceeding, each party, in its first pleading or in an attached affidavit, shall give information, if reasonably ascertainable, under oath, as to the child's present address or whereabouts, the places where the child has lived during the last five years, and the names and present addresses of the persons with whom the child has lived during that period. The pleading or affidavit must state whether the party:

(a) Has participated, as a party or witness or in any other capacity, in any other proceeding concerning the custody of or visitation or parenting time with the child and, if so, identify the court, the case number, and the date of the child-custody determination, if any;

(b) Knows of any proceeding that could affect the current proceeding, including proceedings for enforcement and proceedings relating to domestic violence or domestic abuse, protective orders or restraining orders, termination of parental rights, and adoptions and, if so, identify the court, the case number, and the nature of the proceeding; and

(c) Knows the names and addresses of any person not a party to the proceeding who has physical custody of the child or claims rights of parental responsibilities or legal custody or physical custody of, or visitation or parenting time with, the child and, if so, the names and addresses of those persons.

(2) If the information required by subsection (1) of this section is not furnished, the court, upon motion of a party or its own motion, may stay the proceeding until the information is furnished.

(3) If the declaration as to any of the items described in paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (1) of this section is in the affirmative, the declarant shall give additional information under oath as required by the court. The court may examine the parties under oath as to details of the information furnished and other matters pertinent to the court's jurisdiction and the disposition of the case.

(4) Each party has a continuing duty to inform the court of any proceeding in this or any other state that could affect the current proceeding.

(5) If a party alleges in an affidavit or a pleading under oath that the health, safety, or liberty of a party or child would be jeopardized by disclosure of identifying information, the information must be sealed and may not be disclosed to the other party or the public unless the court orders the disclosure to be made after a hearing in which the court takes into consideration the health, safety, or liberty of the party or child and determines that the disclosure is in the interest of justice.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The pleading requirements from Section 9 of the UCCJA are generally carried over into this Act. However, the information is made subject to local law on the protection of names and other identifying information in certain cases. A number of States have enacted laws relating to the protection of victims in domestic violence and child abuse cases which provide for the confidentiality of victims names, addresses, and other information. These procedures must be followed if the child-custody proceeding of the State requires their applicability. See, e.g., California Family Law Code § 3409(a). If a State does not have local law that provides for protecting names and addresses, then subsection (5) or a similar provision should be adopted. Subsection (5) is based on the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judge's, Model Code on Domestic and Family Violence § 304(c). There are other models to choose from, in particular UIFSA § 312.

In subsection (1)(b), the term "proceedings" should be read broadly to include more than custody proceedings. Thus, if one parent was being criminally prosecuted for child abuse or custodial interference, those proceedings should be disclosed. If the child is subject to the Interstate Compact on the Placement of Children, facts relating to compliance with the Compact should be disclosed in the pleading or affidavit.

Subsection (1)(b) has been added. It authorizes the court to stay the proceeding until the information required in subsection (1)(a) has been disclosed, although failure to provide the information does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to hear the case. This follows the majority of jurisdictions which held that failure to comply with the pleading requirements of the UCCJA did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to make a custody determination.

14-13-210. Appearance of parties and child. (1) In a child-custody proceeding in this state, the court may order a party to the proceeding who is in this state to appear before the court in person with or without the child. The court may order any person who is in this state and who has physical custody or control of the child to appear in person with the child.

(2) If a party to a child-custody proceeding whose presence is desired by the court is outside this state, the court may order that a notice given pursuant to section 14-13-108 include a statement directing the party to appear in person with or without the child and informing the party that failure to appear may result in a decision adverse to the party.

(3) The court may enter any orders necessary to ensure the safety of the child and of any person ordered to appear under this section.

(4) If a party to a child-custody proceeding who is outside this state is directed to appear under subsection (2) of this section or desires to appear personally before the court with or without the child, the court may require another party to pay reasonable and necessary travel and other expenses of the party so appearing and of the child.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

No major changes have been made to this section which was Section 11 of the UCCJA. Language was added to subsection (1) to authorize the court to require a non-party who has physical custody of the child to produce the child.

Subsection (3) authorizes the court to enter orders providing for the safety of the child and the person ordered to appear with the child. If safety is a major concern, the court, as an alternative to ordering a party to appear with the child, could order and arrange for the party's testimony to be taken in another State under Section 14-13-111. This alternative might be important when there are safety concerns regarding requiring victims of domestic violence or child abuse to travel to the jurisdiction where the abuser resides.

ENFORCEMENT

14-13-301. Definitions. As used in this part 3, unless the context otherwise requires:

(1) "Petitioner" means a person who seeks enforcement of an order for the return of a child under the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction" or enforcement of a child-custody determination.

(2) "Respondent" means a person against whom a proceeding has been commenced for enforcement of an order for the return of a child under the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction" or enforcement of a child-custody determination.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

For purposes of this part, "petitioner" and "respondent" are defined. The definitions clarify certain aspects of the notice and hearing sections.

14-13-302. Enforcement under Hague Convention. Under this part 3 a court of this state may enforce an order for the return of the child made under the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction" as if it were a child-custody determination.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section applies the enforcement remedies provided by this part to orders requiring the return of a child issued under the authority of the International Child Abduction Remedies Act (ICARA), 42 U.S.C. § 11601 et seq., implementing the Hague Convention on the Civil

Aspects of International Child Abduction. Specific mention of ICARA proceedings is necessary because they often occur prior to any formal custody determination. However, the need for a speedy enforcement remedy for an order to return the child is just as necessary.

14-13-303. Duty to enforce. (1) A court of this state shall recognize and enforce a child-custody determination of a court of another state if the latter court exercised jurisdiction in substantial conformity with this article or the determination was made under factual circumstances meeting the jurisdictional standards of this article and the determination has not been modified in accordance with this article.

(2) A court of this state may utilize any remedy available under other law of this state to enforce a child-custody determination made by a court of another state. The remedies provided in this part 3 are cumulative and do not affect the availability of other remedies to enforce a child-custody determination.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 14-13-114 as it existed prior to 2000.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is based on Section 13 of the UCCJA which contained the basic duty to enforce. The language of the original section has been retained and the duty to enforce is generally the same.

Enforcement of custody determinations of issuing States is also required by federal law in the PKPA, 28 U.S.C. § 1738A(a). The changes made in Part 2 of this Act now make a State's duty to enforce and not modify a child custody determination of another State consistent with the enforcement and nonmodification provisions of the PKPA. Therefore custody determinations made by a State pursuant to the UCCJA that would be enforceable under the PKPA will generally be enforced under this Act. However, if a State custody determination made pursuant to the UCCJA would not be enforceable under the PKPA, it will also not be enforceable under this Act. Thus a custody determination made by a "significant connection" jurisdiction when there is a home State is not enforceable under the PKPA regardless of whether a proceeding was ever commenced in the home State. Even though such a determination would be enforceable under the UCCJA with its four concurrent bases of jurisdiction, it would not be enforceable under this Act. This carries out the policy of the PKPA of strongly discouraging a State from exercising its concurrent "significant connection" jurisdiction under the UCCJA when another State could exercise "home state" jurisdiction.

This section also incorporates the concept of Section 15 of the UCCJA to the effect that a custody determination of another State will be enforced in the same manner as a custody determination made by a court of this State. Whatever remedies are available to enforce a local determination can be utilized to enforce a custody determination of another State. However, it remains a custody determination of the State that issued it. A child-custody determination of another State is not subject to modification unless the State would have jurisdiction to modify the determination under Part 2.

The remedies provided by this part for the enforcement of a custody determination will normally be used. This part does not detract from other remedies available under other local law. There is often a need for a number of remedies to ensure that a child-custody determination is obeyed. If other remedies would easily facilitate enforcement, they are still available. The petitioner, for example, can still cite the respondent for contempt of court or file a tort claim for intentional interference with custodial relations if those remedies are available under local law.

Intent of child custody jurisdiction act. The uniform act attempts to guarantee reasonable security and continuity of environment to children by discouraging their unilateral removal from one state to another to avoid obeying custodial orders. *Kraft v. If the courts of another state have continuing jurisdiction over custody and have not declined to exercise that jurisdiction, then a Colorado court is precluded by this section and § 14-13-115 from exercising jurisdiction in the case, at least in the absence of a grave emergency. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

If the state which rendered the custody decree still has jurisdiction, other states cannot modify the decree. Fry v. Ball, 190 Colo. 128, 544 P.2d 402 (1975).

A Colorado court must recognize and refrain from modifying a custody decree of another state where the sister state had jurisdiction at the time its decree was entered and has continuing jurisdiction at the time the action to modify is instituted in this state. Fry v. Ball, 190 Colo. 128, 544 P.2d 402 (1975).

If, at the time of filing, another state is exercising continuing jurisdiction substantially in conformity with the act, a Colorado court is prohibited from exercising jurisdiction. People in Interest of K.G., 876 P.2d 1 (Colo. App. 1993).

Recognition of modification decree of another state. Jurisdiction to determine child custody may change to another state, and when that occurs the courts of this state must recognize the modification decree if the modifying state assumed jurisdiction under statutory provisions substantially in accordance with the uniform child custody jurisdiction act or under factual circumstances meeting the jurisdictional standards of this article. County of Clearwater v. Petrash, 41 Colo. App. 143, 589 P.2d 1370 (1978), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 198 Colo. 231, 598 P.2d 138 (1979).

Mere conclusory ruling of jurisdiction by foreign court need not bind Colorado court, and the Colorado court should seek information to determine the most appropriate forum by communicating with the foreign court. Lynch v. Lynch, 770 P.2d 1383 (Colo. App. 1989).

Colorado not required to give full faith and credit to another state's custody order if order was not entered in compliance with the

PKPA. Under the PKPA, a state's custody determination is in conformance with the PKPA if the court of the state has jurisdiction under its own law and the exercise of jurisdiction meets one of the conditions set forth in the PKPA. Because Nebraska, like Colorado, has adopted the UCCJEA, and the UCCJEA is substantively identical to the PKPA, the provisions of Nebraska's state law conform to the PKPA. Therefore, because Nebraska lacked jurisdiction to enter the custody order under its own law, it lacked jurisdiction to enter the order under the PKPA and Colorado is not required to recognize and enforce the order pursuant to the PKPA. In re L.S., 257 P.3d 201 (Colo. 2011).

Where New York family court referee determined that it lacked exclusive, continuing jurisdiction to modify New York custody order and declined jurisdiction, a New York Supreme Court (trial court) lacked jurisdiction to enter order in a subsequent motion to modify custody. New York has adopted the UCCJEA and, therefore, the jurisdictional provisions of New York law are substantively identical to the PKPA. Consequently, because the second New York court did not have jurisdiction over the matter under New York law, the PKPA does not require that Colorado accord full faith and credit to the second court's custody modification order and the Colorado court erred in enforcing the New York order modifying custody. In re Dedie & Springston, 255 P.3d 1142 (Colo. 2011).

Recognition of decrees of states not adopting act. Although a state has not adopted the uniform child and custody jurisdiction act, Colorado will recognize the custody decree issued by a court of that state if it has assumed jurisdiction under the standards of the act. Kraft v. District Court, 197 Colo. 10, 593 P.2d 321 (1979).

Court may grant other than temporary relief where out-of-state application impractical. Generally, judicial relief should not extend beyond the issuance of temporary protective orders pending the application to the court of the rendering state for appropriate modification of the custody decree. Only when there are compelling reasons, articulated in the record, that render such out-of-state application impractical, should a Colorado court grant anything but temporary relief under its parens patriae jurisdiction. Brock v. District Court, 620 P.2d 11 (Colo. 1980).

14-13-304. Temporary visitation or parenting time. (1) A court of this state that does not have jurisdiction to modify a child-custody determination may issue a temporary order enforcing:

- (a) A visitation or parenting time schedule made by a court of another state; or
- (b) The visitation or parenting time provisions of a child-custody determination of another state that does not provide for a specific visitation or parenting time schedule.

(2) If a court of this state makes an order under paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section, it shall specify in the order a period that it considers adequate to allow the petitioner to obtain an order from a court having jurisdiction under criteria substantially in conformity with those criteria specified in part 2 of this article. The order remains in effect until an order is obtained from the other court or the period expires.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section authorizes a court to issue a temporary order if it is necessary to enforce visitation rights without violating the rules on nonmodification contained in Section 14-13-303. Therefore, if there is a visitation schedule provided in the custody determination that was made in accordance with Part 2, a court can issue an order under this section implementing the schedule. An implementing order may include make-up or substitute visitation.

A court may also issue a temporary order providing for visitation if visitation was authorized in the custody determination, but no specific schedule was included in the custody determination. Such an order could include a substitution of a specific visitation schedule for "reasonable and seasonable."

However, a court may not, under subsection (1)(b) provide for a permanent change in visitation. Therefore, requests for a permanent change in the visitation schedule must be addressed to the court with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 14-13-202 or modification jurisdiction under Section 14-13-203. As under Section 14-13-204, subsection (2) of this section requires that the temporary visitation order stay in effect only long enough to allow the person who obtained the order to obtain a permanent modification in the State with appropriate jurisdiction under Part 2.

14-13-305. Registration of child-custody determination. (1) A child-custody determination issued by a court of another state may be registered in this state, with or without a simultaneous request for enforcement, by sending to the appropriate district court in this state:

- (a) A letter or other document requesting registration;
- (b) Two copies, including one certified copy, of the determination sought to be registered, and a statement under penalty of perjury that to the best of the knowledge and belief of the person seeking registration the order has not been modified; and
- (c) Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-209, the name and address of the person seeking registration and any parent or person acting as a parent who has been awarded custody, allocated parental responsibilities, or granted visitation or parenting time in the child-custody determination sought to be registered.

(2) On receipt of the documents required by subsection (1) of this section, the registering court shall:

- (a) Cause the determination to be filed as a foreign judgment, together with one copy of any accompanying documents and information, regardless of their form; and
- (b) Serve notice upon the persons named pursuant to paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of this section and provide them with an opportunity to contest the registration in accordance with this section.
- (3) The notice required by paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section must state that:
  - (a) A registered determination is enforceable as of the date of the registration in the same manner as a determination issued by a court of this state;
  - (b) A hearing to contest the validity of the registered determination must be requested within twenty-one days after service of notice; and
  - (c) Failure to contest the registration will result in confirmation of the child-custody determination and preclude further contest of that determination with respect to any matter that could have been asserted.

(4) A person seeking to contest the validity of a registered order must request a hearing within twenty days after service of the notice. At that hearing, the court shall confirm the registered order unless the person contesting registration establishes that:

(a) The issuing court did not have jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with part 2 of this article;

(b) The child-custody determination sought to be registered has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court having jurisdiction to do so under part 2 of this article; or

(c) The person contesting registration was entitled to notice, but notice was not given in accordance with standards substantially in conformity with the standards set forth in section 14-13-108, in the proceedings before the court that issued the order for which registration is sought.

(5) If a timely request for a hearing to contest the validity of the registration is not made, the registration is confirmed as a matter of law and the person requesting registration and all persons served must be notified of the confirmation.

(6) Confirmation of a registered order, whether by operation of law or after notice and hearing, precludes further contest of the order with respect to any matter that could have been asserted at the time of registration.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This remainder of this part provides enforcement mechanisms for interstate child custody determinations.

This section authorizes a simple registration procedure that can be used to predetermine the enforceability of a custody determination. It parallels the process in UIFSA for the registration of child support orders. It should be as much of an aid to pro se litigants as the registration procedure of UIFSA.

A custody determination can be registered without any accompanying request for enforcement. This may be of significant assistance in international cases. For example, the custodial parent under a foreign custody order can receive an advance determination of whether that order would be recognized and enforced before sending the child to the United States for visitation. Article 26 of the 1996 Hague Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition and Cooperation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of Children, 35 I.L.M. 1391 (1996), requires those States which accede to the Convention to provide such a procedure.

14-13-306. Enforcement of registered determination. (1) A court of this state may grant any relief normally available under the law of this state to enforce a registered child-custody determination made by a court of another state.

(2) A court of this state shall recognize and enforce, but may not modify, except in accordance with part 2 of this article, a registered child-custody determination of a court of another state.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former §§ 14-13-115 and 14-13-116, as they existed prior to 2000.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

A registered child-custody determination can be enforced as if it was a child-custody determination of this State. However, it remains a custody determination of the State that issued it.

A registered custody order is not subject to modification unless the State would have jurisdiction to modify the order under Part 2.

The proceeding for enforcement continues unless the enforcing court, after consultation with the modifying court, stays or dismisses the proceeding.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The pleading rules of Section 14-13-308, require the parties to disclose any pending proceedings. Normally, an enforcement proceeding will take precedence over a modification action since the PKPA requires enforcement of child custody determinations made in accordance with its terms. However, the enforcement court must communicate with the modification court in order to avoid duplicative litigation. The courts might decide that the court with jurisdiction under Part 2 shall continue with the modification action and stay the enforcement proceeding. Or they might decide that the enforcement proceeding shall go forward. The ultimate decision rests with the court having exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 14-13-202, or if there is no State with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction, then the decision rests with the State that would have jurisdiction to modify under Section 14-13-203. Therefore, if that court determines that the enforcement proceeding should be stayed or dismissed, the enforcement court should stay or dismiss the proceeding. If the enforcement court does not do so, the court with exclusive, continuing jurisdiction under Section 14-13-202, or with modification jurisdiction under Section 14-13-203, could enjoin the parties from continuing with the enforcement proceeding.

ANNOTATION

evant cases construing § 14-13-107 have been included in the annotations under § 14-13-206.

14-13-308. Expedited enforcement of child-custody determination. (1) A petition under this part 3 in which the petitioner is seeking expedited enforcement pursuant to this section must be verified. Certified copies of all orders sought to be enforced and of any order confirming registration must be attached to the petition. A copy of a certified copy of an order may be attached instead of the original.

(2) A petition for expedited enforcement of a child-custody determination pursuant to this section must state:

(a) Whether the court that issued the determination identified the jurisdictional basis it relied upon in exercising jurisdiction and, if so, what the basis was;

(b) Whether the determination for which enforcement is sought has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court whose decision must be enforced under this article and, if so, the identity of the court, the case number, and the nature of the proceeding;

(c) Whether any proceeding has been commenced that could affect the current proceeding, including proceedings relating to domestic violence or domestic abuse, protective orders or restraining orders, termination of parental rights, and adoptions and, if so, the identity of the court, the case number, and the nature of the proceeding;

(d) The present physical address of the child and the respondent, if known;

(e) Whether relief in addition to the immediate physical custody of the child and attorney's fees is sought, including a request for assistance from law enforcement officials and, if so, the relief sought; and

(f) If the child-custody determination has been registered and confirmed under section 14-13-305, the date and place of registration.

(3) Upon the filing of a petition for expedited enforcement pursuant to this section, the court shall issue an order directing the respondent to appear in person at a hearing, with or without the child, and may enter any order necessary to ensure the safety of the parties and the child. The hearing must be held on the next judicial day after service of the order unless that date is impossible. In that event, the court shall hold the hearing on the first judicial day possible. The court may extend the date of hearing at the request of the petitioner.

(4) An order issued under subsection (3) of this section must state the time and place of the hearing and advise the respondent that at the hearing the court will order that the petitioner may take immediate physical custody of the child and the payment of fees, costs, and expenses under section 14-13-312, and may schedule a hearing to determine whether further relief is appropriate, unless the respondent appears and establishes that:

(a) The child-custody determination has not been registered and confirmed under section 14-13-305 and that:

(I) The issuing court did not have jurisdiction under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with part 2 of this article;

(II) The child-custody determination for which enforcement is sought has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court having jurisdiction to do so under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with part 2 of this article;

(III) The respondent was entitled to notice, but notice was not given in accordance with the standards substantially in conformity with the standards of section 14-13-108, in the proceedings before the court that issued the order for which enforcement is sought; or

(b) The child-custody determination for which enforcement is sought was registered and confirmed under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with section 14-13-304, but has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court of a state having jurisdiction to do so under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with part 2 of this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section provides the normal remedy that will be used in interstate cases: the production of the child in a summary, remedial process based on habeas corpus.

The petition is intended to provide the court with as much information as possible. Attaching certified copies of all orders sought to be enforced allows the court to have the necessary information. Most of the information relates to the permissible scope of the court's inquiry. The petitioner has the responsibility to inform the court of all proceedings that would affect the current enforcement action. Specific mention is made of certain proceedings to ensure that they are disclosed. A "procedure relating to domestic violence" includes not only protective order proceedings but also criminal prosecutions for child abuse or domestic violence.

The order requires the respondent to appear at a hearing on the next judicial day. The term "next judicial day" in this section means the next day when a judge is at the courthouse. At the hearing, the court will order the child to be delivered to the petitioner unless the respondent is prepared to assert that the issuing State lacked jurisdiction, that notice was not given in accordance with Section 14-13-108, or that the order sought to be enforced has been vacated, modified, or stayed by a court with jurisdiction to do so under Part 2. The court is also to order payment of the fees and expenses set out in Section 14-13-312. The court may set another hearing to determine whether additional relief available under this state's law should be granted.

If the order has been registered and confirmed in accordance with Section 14-13-304, the only defense to enforcement is that the order has been vacated, stayed or modified since the registration proceeding by a court with jurisdiction to do so under Part 2.

14-13-309. Service of petition and order. Except as otherwise provided in section 14-13-311, the petition and order must be served, by any method authorized by the law of this state, upon respondent and any person who has physical custody of the child.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

In keeping with other sections of this Act, the question of how the petition and order should be served is left to local law.

14-13-310. Hearing and order. (1) Unless the court issues a temporary emergency order pursuant to section 14-13-204, upon a finding that a petitioner is entitled to immediate physical custody of the child, the court shall order that the petitioner may take immediate physical custody of the child unless the respondent establishes that:

(a) The child-custody determination has not been registered and confirmed under section 14-13-305 and that:

(I) The issuing court did not have jurisdiction under part 2 of this article;

(II) The child-custody determination for which enforcement is sought has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court of a state having jurisdiction to do so under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with part 2 of this article; or

(III) The respondent was entitled to notice, but notice was not given in accordance with standards in substantial conformity with the standards set forth in section 14-13-108, in the proceedings before the court that issued the order for which enforcement is sought; or

(b) The child-custody determination for which enforcement is sought was registered and confirmed under section 14-13-305 but has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court of a state having jurisdiction to do so under part 3 of this article.

(2) The court shall award the fees, costs, and expenses authorized under section 14-13-312 and may grant additional relief, including a request for the assistance of law enforcement officials, and set a further hearing to determine whether additional relief is appropriate.

(3) If a party called to testify refuses to answer on the ground that the testimony may be self-incriminating, the court may draw an adverse inference from the refusal.

(4) A privilege against disclosure of communications between spouses and a defense of immunity based on the relationship of husband and wife or parent and child may not be invoked in a proceeding under this part 3.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The scope of inquiry for the enforcing court is quite limited. Federal law requires the court to enforce the custody determination if the issuing state's decree was rendered in compliance with the PKPA, 28 U.S.C. § 1738A(a). This Act requires enforcement of custody determinations that are made in conformity with Part 2's jurisdictional rules.

The certified copy, or a copy of the certified copy, of the custody determination entitling the petitioner to the child is prima facie evidence of the issuing court's jurisdiction to enter the order. If the order is one that is entitled to be enforced under Part 2 and if it has been violated, the burden shifts to the respondent to show that the custody determination is not entitled to enforcement.

It is a defense to enforcement that another jurisdiction has issued a custody determination that is required to be enforced under Part 2. An example is when one court has based its original custody determination on the UCCJA § 3(a)(2) (significant connections) and another jurisdiction has rendered an original custody determination based on the UCCJA § 3(a)(1) (home State). When this occurs, Part 2 of this Act, as well as the PKPA, mandate that the home state determination be enforced in all other States, including the State that rendered the significant connections determination.

Lack of notice in accordance with Section 14-13-108 by a person entitled to notice and opportunity to be heard at the original custody determination is a defense to enforcement of the custody determination. The scope of the defense under this Act is the same as the defense would be under the law of the State that issued the notice. Thus, if the defense of lack of notice would not be available under local law if the respondent purposely hid from the petitioner, took deliberate steps to avoid service of process or elected not to participate in the initial proceedings, the defense would also not be available under this Act.

There are no other defenses to an enforcement action. If the child would be endangered by the enforcement of a custody or visitation order, there may be a basis for the assumption of emergency jurisdiction under Section 14-13-204 of this Act. Upon the finding of an emergency, the court issues a temporary order and directs the parties to proceed either in the court that is exercising continuing jurisdiction over the custody proceeding under Section 14-13-202, or the court that would have jurisdiction to modify the custody determination under Section 14-13-203.

The court shall determine at the hearing whether fees should be awarded under Section 14-13-312. If so, it should order them paid. The court may determine if additional relief is appropriate, including requesting law enforcement officers to assist the petitioner in the enforcement of the order. The court may set a hearing to determine whether further relief should be granted.

The remainder of this section is derived from UIFSA § 316 with regard to the privilege of self-incrimination, spousal privileges, and immunities. It is included to keep parallel the procedures for child support and child custody proceedings to the extent possible.

14-13-311. Warrant to take physical custody of child. (1) Upon the filing of a petition seeking enforcement of a child-custody determination, the petitioner may file a verified application for the issuance of a warrant to take physical custody of the child if the child is immediately likely to suffer serious physical harm or be removed from this state.

(2) If the court, upon the testimony of the petitioner or other witness, finds that the child is imminently likely to suffer serious physical harm or be removed from this state, it may issue a warrant to take physical custody of the child. The petition must be heard on the next judicial day after the warrant is executed unless that date is impossible. In that event, the court shall hold the hearing on the first judicial day possible. The application for the warrant must include the statements required by section 14-13-308 (2).

(3) A warrant to take physical custody of a child must:

(a) Recite the facts upon which a conclusion of imminent serious physical harm or removal from the jurisdiction is based;

(b) Direct law enforcement officers to take physical custody of the child immediately; and

(c) Provide for the placement of the child pending final relief.

(4) The respondent must be served with the petition, warrant, and order immediately after the child is taken into physical custody.

(5) A warrant to take physical custody of a child is enforceable throughout this state. If the court finds on the basis of the testimony of the petitioner or other witness that a less intrusive remedy is not effective, it may authorize law enforcement officers to enter private property to take physical custody of the child. If required by exigent circumstances of the case, the court may authorize law enforcement officers to make a forcible entry at any hour.

(6) The court may impose conditions upon placement of a child to ensure the appearance of the child and the child's custodian.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The section provides a remedy for emergency situations where there is a reason to believe that the child will suffer imminent, serious physical harm or be removed from the jurisdiction once the respondent learns that the petitioner has filed an enforcement proceeding. If the court finds such harm exists, it should temporarily waive the notice requirements and issue a warrant to take physical custody of the child. Immediately after the warrant is executed, the respondent is to receive notice of the proceedings.

The term "harm" cannot be totally defined and, as in the issuance of temporary restraining orders, the appropriate issuance of a warrant is left to the circumstances of the case. Those circumstances include cases where the respondent is the subject of a criminal proceeding as well as situations where the respondent is secreting the child in violation of a court order, abusing the child, a flight risk and other circumstances that the court concludes make the issuance of notice a danger to the child. The court must hear the testimony of the petitioner or another witness prior to issuing the warrant. The testimony may be heard in person, via telephone, or by any other means acceptable under local law. The court must State the reasons for the issuance of the warrant. The warrant can be enforced by law enforcement officers wherever the child is found in the State. The warrant may authorize entry upon private property to pick up the child if no less intrusive means are possible. In extraordinary cases, the warrant may authorize law enforcement to make a forcible entry at any hour.

The warrant must provide for the placement of the child pending the determination of the enforcement proceeding. Since the issuance of the warrant would not occur absent a risk of serious harm to the child, placement cannot be with the respondent. Normally, the child would be placed with the petitioner. However, if placement with the petitioner is not indicated, the court can order any other appropriate placement authorized under the laws of the court's State. Placement with the petitioner may not be indicated if there is a likelihood that the petitioner also will flee the jurisdiction. Placement with the petitioner may not be practical if the petitioner is proceeding through an attorney and is not present before the court.

This section authorizes the court to utilize whatever means are available under local law to ensure the appearance of the petitioner and child at the enforcement hearing. Such means might include cash bonds, a surrender of a passport, or whatever the court determines is necessary.

14-13-312. Costs, fees, and expenses. (1) The court shall award the prevailing party, including a state, necessary and reasonable expenses incurred by or on behalf of the prevailing party, including costs, communication expenses, attorney fees, investigative fees, expenses for witnesses, travel expenses, and child care during the course of the proceedings, unless the party from whom fees or expenses are sought establishes that the award would be clearly inappropriate.

(2) The court may not assess fees, costs, or expenses against a state unless authorized by law other than this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is derived from the International Child Abduction Remedies Act, 42 U.S.C. § 11607(b)(3). Normally the court will award fees and costs against the non-prevailing party. Included as expenses are the amount of investigation fees incurred by private persons or by public officials as well as the cost of child placement during the proceedings.

The non-prevailing party has the burden of showing that such an award would be clearly inappropriate. Fees and costs may be inappropriate if their payment would cause the parent and child to seek public assistance.

This section implements the policies of Section 8(c) of Pub.L. 96-611 (part of the PKPA) which provides that:

In furtherance of the purposes of section 1738A of title 28, United States Code [this section], as added by subsection (1) of this section, State courts are encouraged to —

(2) award to the person entitled to custody or visitation pursuant to a custody determination which is consistent with the provisions of such section 1738A [this section], necessary travel expenses, attorneys' fees, costs of private investigations, witness fees or expenses, and other expenses incurred in connection with such custody determination ...

The term "prevailing party" is not given a special definition for this Act. Each State will apply its own standard.

Subsection (2) was added to ensure that this section would not apply to the State unless otherwise authorized. The language is taken from UIFSA § 313 (court may assess costs against obligee or support enforcement agency only if allowed by local law).

14-13-313. Recognition and enforcement. A court of this state shall accord full faith and credit to an order issued by another state and consistent with this article that enforces a child-custody determination by a court of another state unless the order has been vacated, stayed, or modified by a court having jurisdiction to do so under a provision of law adopted by that state that is in substantial conformity with part 2 of this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The enforcement order, to be effective, must also be enforced by other States. This section requires courts of this State to enforce and not modify enforcement orders issued by other States when made consistently with the provisions of this Act.

14-13-314. Appeals. An appeal may be taken from a final order in a proceeding under this part 3 in accordance with expedited appellate procedures in other civil cases. Unless the court enters a temporary emergency order under section 14-13-204, the enforcing court may not stay an order enforcing a child-custody determination pending appeal.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The order may be appealed as an expedited civil matter. An enforcement order should not be stayed by the court. Provisions for a stay would defeat the purpose of having a quick enforcement procedure. If there is a risk of serious mistreatment or abuse to the child, a petition to assume emergency jurisdiction must be filed under Section 14-13-204. This section leaves intact the possibility of obtaining an extraordinary remedy such as mandamus or prohibition from an appellate court to stay the court's enforcement action. In many States, it is not possible to limit the constitutional authority of appellate courts to issue a stay. However, unless the information before the appellate panel indicates that emergency jurisdiction would be assumed under Section 14-13-204, there is no reason to stay the enforcement of the order pending appeal.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

A child custody proceeding will last throughout the minority of the child. The commencement of a child custody proceeding prior to this Act does not mean that jurisdiction will continue to be governed by prior law. The provisions of this act apply if a motion to modify an existing determination is filed after the enactment of this Act. A motion that is filed prior to enactment may be completed under the rules in effect at the time the motion is filed.

Prefatory Note

Child abduction is a serious problem both in scope and effect. A study commissioned by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention estimated that 262,100 children were abducted in 1999; 203,900 (78 per cent) of them were abducted by a parent or family member; approximately 1000 of the abductions were international.<sup>1</sup>

The purpose of the Uniform Child Abduction Prevention Act is to deter both predecree and postdecree domestic and international child abductions by parents, persons acting on behalf of a parent or others. Family abductions may be preventable through the identification of risk factors and the imposition of appropriate preventive measures.

The Uniform Child Abduction Prevention Act<sup>2</sup> is premised on the general principle that preventing an abduction is in a child's best interests. Abducted children may suffer long-lasting harm. Federal law recognizes that parental abduction is harmful to children.<sup>3</sup> Child abductions can occur before or after entry of a child-custody determination. This Act allows the court to impose abduction prevention measures at any time.

Many abductions occur before a court has had the opportunity to enter a child-custody determination. Children at the center of custody disputes are at the highest risk for potential abductions.<sup>3</sup> Jurisdictional laws help deter abductions by specifying the proper state to handle custody litigation. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act<sup>4</sup> sets out four concurrent bases for jurisdiction. Congress passed the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act of 1980 to deter abduction.

tions, discourage interstate conflicts, and promote cooperation between states about custody matters by resolving jurisdictional conflicts.<sup>5</sup> The Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act prioritizes the state in which the child has lived for six months preceding the filing of the petition (the home state) as the place for custody litigation<sup>6</sup> and prohibits a second state from assuming jurisdiction if there is an action pending in the state that has proper jurisdiction.<sup>7</sup> The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act,<sup>8</sup> now in 45 jurisdictions, also prioritizes home state jurisdiction notwithstanding the child's absence. Jurisdictional laws do not provide prevention measures for abduction.

Post-decree abductions often occur because the existing child-custody determinations lack sufficient protective provisions to prevent an abduction. An award of joint physical custody without a designation of specific times; a vague order granting "reasonable visitation"; or the lack any restrictions on custody and visitation make orders hard to enforce. The awareness of abduction risk factors and preventive measures available can reduce the threat of abduction by giving the court the tools to make the initial child-custody determination clearer, more specific, and more easily enforceable.

If an abduction occurs after a child-custody determination, all states have enforcement remedies. Forty-six jurisdictions use the procedures in Article 3 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act. In addition, courts can punish abductors for contempt and allow tort actions for custodial interference. Several federal laws help locate missing children<sup>9</sup> and criminalize international parental kidnapping.<sup>10</sup> While there is no federal law criminalizing interstate parental kidnapping, there is a mechanism for apprehending persons who violate state parental kidnapping laws and travel across state lines.<sup>11</sup> While every state criminally forbids custodial interference by parents or relatives of the child, the laws differ as to the elements of the offenses, the punishments given, and whether a child-custody determination must exist for a violation to occur.<sup>12</sup>

If the abduction is international, the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, currently in effect between the United States and fifty-five countries, facilitates the return of an abducted child to the child's habitual residence.<sup>13</sup> Many countries, however, have not ratified the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, the United States has not accepted all nations' accessions, and some countries that have ratified do not comply with the treaty obligations.

This Act is civil law and complements existing state law. This Act does not limit, contradict, or supercede the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act or the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act. This Act is not meant to prevent a legitimate relocation action filed in accordance with the law of the state having jurisdiction to make a child-custody determination nor to prevent a victim of domestic violence from escaping abuse.

The Uniform Child Abduction Prevention Act applies to predecree and intrastate cases, to emergency situations, and to cases in which risk factors exist and the current child-custody determination lacks abduction prevention measures. Only three states have enacted comprehensive child abduction prevention statutes;<sup>14</sup> two other states include provisions to reduce the risk of abduction.<sup>15</sup> This Act will fill a void in the majority of states by identifying circumstances indicating a risk of abduction and providing measures to prevent the abduction of children, predecree or postdecree.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

To the extent possible, the definitions track the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-101, et. seq., C.R.S.]. The definition of a child as a person under age 18 is the same as in Section 102(2) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-102 (2), C.R.S.]. State law determines when a child becomes emancipated before age 18. This Act is limited to the abduction of minors even though the risk of abduction may apply to a disabled adult who has an appointed adult guardian.

The definition of “child-custody determination” is the same as the definition in Section 102(3) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-102 (3), C.R.S.]. This Act uses the traditional terminology of “custody” and “visitation” because that is the language used in the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act although local terminology may differ. The definition of a child-custody proceeding differs insignificantly from Section 102(4) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-102 (4), C.R.S.].

The definition of abduction covers wrongful removal or wrongful retention. The definition is broad enough to encompass not only an abduction committed by either parent or a person acting on behalf of the parent but also other abductions. Generally both parents have the right to companionship and access to their child unless a court states otherwise. Abductions can occur against an individual or other entity with custody rights, as well as against an individual with visitation or access rights. A parent with joint legal or physical custody rights, by operation of law, court order, or legally binding agreement, commits an abduction by wrongfully interfering with the other parent's rights. A removal or retention of a child can be "wrongful" predecree or postdecree. An abduction is wrongful where it is in breach of an existing "child-custody determination" or, if predecree, in violation of rights attributed to a person by operation of law. The term "breaches rights of custody" tracks Article 3 of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction.

14-13.5-103. Cooperation and communication among courts. Sections 14-13-110, 14-13-111, and 14-13-112 shall apply to cooperation and communications among courts in proceedings under this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

It is possible, even likely, that abduction situations will involve more than one state. Thus, there is a need for mechanisms for communication among courts, for testimony to be obtained quickly by means other than physical presence, and for cooperation between courts in different states. Sections 110, 111, and 112 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [sections 14-13-110, 14-13-111, and 14-13-112, C.R.S.] provide mechanisms to deal with these issues. States that do not have the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act may want to include these provisions or use some similar provision of existing state law.

14-13.5-104. Actions for abduction prevention measures. (1) A court on its own motion may order abduction prevention measures in a child-custody proceeding if the court finds that the evidence establishes a credible risk of abduction of the child.

(2) A party to a child-custody determination or another individual or entity having a right under the law of this state or any other state to seek a child-custody determination for the child may file a petition seeking abduction prevention measures to protect the child under this article.

Source: L. 2007: Entire article added, p. 768, § 1, effective May 14.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

An abduction may occur before a child-custody proceeding has commenced, after the filing but before entry of a child-custody determination, or in violation of an existing child-custody determination. To obtain abduction prevention measures, either the court on its own may impose the measures or a party to a child custody proceeding or an individual or entity having the right to seek custody may file a petition seeking abduction prevention measures.

A court hearing a child custody case may determine that the evidence shows a credible risk of abduction. Therefore, even without a party filing a petition under this Act, the court on its own motion can impose appropriate abduction prevention measures. Usually, however, a parent who fears that the other parent or family members are preparing to abduct the child will file a petition in an existing custody dispute. An individual or other entity, such as the state child welfare agency, which has a right to lawful custody may file a petition alleging a risk of abduction and seeking prevention measures with respect to a child who is not yet the subject of a child-custody determination.

14-13.5-105. Jurisdiction. (1) A petition under this article may be filed only in a court that has jurisdiction to make a child-custody determination with respect to the child at issue under the "Uniform Child-custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act", article 13 of this title.

(2) A court of this state has temporary emergency jurisdiction under section 14-13-204, if the court finds a credible risk of abduction.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This Act complements, but does not limit, contradict, or supercede the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act, 9 U.L.A. Part I 657 (1999), or the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, 9 U.L.A. Part I 115 (1988). A court must have jurisdiction sufficient to make an initial child-custody determination, a modification, or temporary emergency jurisdiction to issue prevention measures under this Act.

The Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act prioritizes the child's home state as the primary jurisdictional basis; prohibits a court in one state from exercising jurisdiction if a valid custody proceeding is already pending in another state; and requires that states give full faith and credit to sister state decrees made in accordance with its principles. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act follows the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act.

A court has temporary emergency jurisdiction under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act only if the child has been abandoned or it is necessary in an emergency to protect the child because the child, or a sibling or parent of the child, is subjected to or threatened with mistreatment or abuse. This Act equates a credible risk of abduction with threatened mistreatment or abuse for emergency jurisdiction purposes.

If a state would be able to exercise emergency jurisdiction under Section 204 the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-204, C.R.S.], it can do so even if another court has issued a child-custody determination and has continuing exclusive jurisdiction. The reference to Section 204 brings in all of its provisions that include communication, length of time of temporary orders, and the like.

Under Section 208 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-208, C.R.S.], if a court has jurisdiction because a person seeking to invoke its jurisdiction has engaged in unjustifiable conduct, the court shall decline to exercise its jurisdiction. However, as the comment to Section 208 explains, domestic violence victims should not be charged with unjustifiable conduct for conduct that occurred in the process of fleeing domestic violence. Domestic violence also shall be considered in a court's inconvenient forum analysis under Section 207(b)(1) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-207 (2) (a), C.R.S.].

14-13.5-106. Contents of petition. (1) A petition under this article must be verified and include a copy of any existing child-custody determination, if available. The petition must specify the risk factors for abduction, including the relevant factors described in section 14-13.5-107. Subject to section 14-13-209, if reasonably ascertainable, the petition must contain:

- (a) The name, date of birth, and gender of the child;
- (b) The customary address and current physical location of the child;
- (c) The identity, customary address, and current physical location of the respondent;
- (d) A statement of whether a prior action to prevent abduction, domestic violence, or domestic abuse has been filed by a party or other individual or entity having custody of the child, and the date, location, and disposition of the action;
- (e) A statement of whether a party to the proceeding has been arrested for a crime related to domestic violence, stalking, or child abuse or neglect and the date, location, and disposition of the case; and
- (f) Any other information required to be submitted to the court for a child-custody determination under section 14-13-209.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The contents of the petition follow those for pleadings under Section 209 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act

[section 14-13-209, C.R.S.]. The information is made subject to state law [section 14-13-209 (5), C.R.S.] on the protection of names or identifying information in certain cases. A number of states have enacted laws relating to the protection of victims in domestic violence and child abuse cases by keeping confidential the victims' names, addresses, and other information. These procedures must be followed if the state law requires their applicability.

The requirement for information on domestic violence or child abuse is to alert the court to the possibility that a batterer or abuser is attempting to use the Act. Domestic violence underlies large numbers of parental kidnapping. One study found that approximately one half of abductors had been violent toward the other parent during the marriage or relationship. Some batterers abduct their children during or after custody litigation; others abduct before initiating legal proceedings. The court should not allow a batterer to use this Act to gain temporary custody or additional visitation in an uncontested hearing. A person who has committed domestic violence or child abuse poses a risk of harm to the child. Such a person, however, may still seek relief in a contested hearing where the issues can be fully examined by the court. In order to screen for domestic violence or child abuse, the petition requires disclosure of all relevant information and the court can inquire about domestic violence at any hearing.

Notice and opportunity to be heard should be given according to the law of the state and may be by publication if other means are not effective. See Section 108(a) of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-108, C.R.S.].

14-13.5-107. Factors to determine risk of abduction. (1) In determining whether there is a credible risk of abduction of a child, the court shall consider any evidence that the petitioner or respondent:

- (a) Has previously abducted or attempted to abduct the child;
- (b) Has threatened to abduct the child;
- (c) Has recently engaged in activities that may indicate a planned abduction, including:
  - (I) Abandoning employment;
  - (II) Selling a primary residence;
  - (III) Terminating a lease;
  - (IV) Closing bank or other financial management accounts, liquidating assets, hiding or destroying financial documents, or conducting any unusual financial activities;
  - (V) Applying for a passport or visa or obtaining travel documents for the respondent, a family member, or the child; or
  - (VI) Seeking to obtain the child's birth certificate or school or medical records;
- (d) Has engaged in domestic violence, domestic abuse, stalking, or child abuse or neglect;
- (e) Has refused to follow a child-custody determination;
- (f) Lacks strong familial, financial, emotional, or cultural ties to the state or the United States;
- (g) Has strong familial, financial, emotional, or cultural ties to another state or country;
- (h) Is likely to take the child to a country that:
  - (I) Is not a party to the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction" and does not provide for the extradition of an abducting parent or for the return of an abducted child;
  - (II) Is a party to the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction" but:
    - (A) The "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction" is not in force between the United States and that country;
    - (B) Is noncompliant according to the most recent compliance report issued by the United States department of state; or
    - (C) Lacks legal mechanisms for immediately and effectively enforcing a return order under the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction";
  - (III) Poses a risk that the child's physical or emotional health or safety would be endangered in the country because of specific circumstances relating to the child or because of human rights violations committed against children;
- (IV) Has laws or practices that would:
  - (A) Enable the respondent, without due cause, to prevent the petitioner from contacting the child;
  - (B) Restrict the petitioner from freely traveling to or exiting from the country because of the petitioner's gender, nationality, marital status, or religion; or

(C) Restrict the child's ability legally to leave the country after the child reaches the age of majority because of a child's gender, nationality, or religion;

(V) Is included by the United States department of state on a current list of state sponsors of terrorism;

(VI) Does not have an official United States diplomatic presence in the country; or

(VII) Is engaged in active military action or war, including a civil war, to which the child may be exposed;

(i) Is undergoing a change in immigration or citizenship status that would adversely affect the respondent's ability to remain in the United States legally;

(j) Has had an application for United States citizenship denied;

(k) Has forged or presented misleading or false evidence on government forms or supporting documents to obtain or attempt to obtain a passport, a visa, travel documents, a social security card, a driver's license, or other government-issued identification card or has made a misrepresentation to the United States government;

(l) Has used multiple names to attempt to mislead or defraud; or

(m) Has engaged in any other conduct the court considers relevant to the risk of abduction.

(2) In the hearing on a petition under this article, the court shall consider any evidence that the respondent believed in good faith that the respondent's conduct was necessary to avoid imminent harm to the child or respondent and any other evidence that may be relevant to whether the respondent may be permitted to remove or retain the child.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The list of risk factors constitutes a summary of the wide variety of types of behaviors and characteristics that researchers have found to be present. The risk factors are based on research that has been done during the last twelve years. Research also shows that abducting parents dismiss the value of the other parent in the child's life; have young children or children vulnerable to influence; and often have the support of their family and others. Parents who have made credible threats to abduct a child or have a history are particularly high risk especially when accompanied by other factors, such as quitting a job, selling a home, and moving assets. See Janet Johnston & Linda Girdner, Family Abductions: Descriptive Profiles and Preventative Interventions (U.S. Dep't of Justice, OJJDP 2001 NCJ 182788); ABA, Early Identification of Risk Factors for Parental Abduction (NCJ185026). The more of these factors that are present, the more likely the chance of an abduction. However, the mere presence of one or more of these factors does not mean that an abduction will occur just as the absence of these factors does not guarantee that no abduction will occur. Some conduct described in the factors can be done in conjunction with a relocation petition, which would negate an inference that the parent is planning to abduct the child.

International abductions pose more obstacles to return of a child than do abductions within the United States. Courts should consider evidence that the respondent was raised in another country and has family support there, has a legal right to work in a foreign country and has the ability to speak that foreign language. There are difficulties associated with securing return of children from countries that are not treaty partners under the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of Child Abduction or are not compliant with the Convention. Compliance Reports are available at the United States Department of State website or may be obtained by contacting the Office of Children's Issues in Department of State.

Courts should be particularly sensitive to the importance of preventive measures where there is an identified risk of a child being removed to countries that are guilty of human rights violations, including arranged marriages of children, child labor, lack of child abuse laws, female genital mutilation, sexual exploitation, any form of child slavery, torture, and the deprivation of liberty. These countries pose potentially serious obstacles to return of a child and pose the possibility of harm.

Courts need to be sensitive to domestic violence issues. Batterers often abduct their children before as well as during and after custody litigation. However, courts also need to be aware of the dynamics of domestic violence. Rather than a vindictive reason for taking the child, a victim fleeing domestic violence may be attempting to protect the victim and the child. Almost half of the parents in one parental kidnapping study were victims of domestic violence and half of the parents who were contemplating abducting their children were motivated by the perceived need to protect their child from physical, sexual, and emotional abuse. Geoffrey L. Greif & Rebecca L. Hegar, When Parents Kidnap: The Families Behind the Headlines 8 (1993). Some of the risk factors involve the same activities that might be undertaken by a victim of domestic violence who is trying to relocate or flee to escape violence. If the evidence shows that the parent preparing to leave is fleeing domestic violence, the court must consider that any order restricting departure or transferring custody may pose safety issues for the respondent and the child, and therefore, should be imposed only when the risk of abduction, the likely harm from the abduction, and the chances of recovery outweigh the risk of harm to the respondent and the child.

The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act recognizes that domestic violence victims should be considered. The Comment to Section 208 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [Jurisdiction Declined by Reason of Conduct] [section 14-13-208, C.R.S.] states that "Domestic violence victims should not be charged with unjustifiable conduct for conduct that occurred in the process of fleeing domestic violence, even if their conduct is technically illegal. An inquiry must be made whether the flight was justified under the circumstances of the case."

14-13.5-108. Provisions and measures to prevent abduction. (1) If a petition is filed under this article, the court may enter an order that must include:

- (a) The basis for the court's exercise of jurisdiction;
- (b) The manner in which notice and opportunity to be heard were given to the persons entitled to notice of the proceeding;
- (c) A detailed description of each party's custody and visitation rights, residential arrangements for the child, and any child-custody determinations in effect;
- (d) A provision stating that a violation of the order may subject the party in violation to civil and criminal penalties; and
- (e) Identification of the child's country of habitual residence at the time of the issuance of the order.

(2) If, at a hearing on a petition under this article or on the court's own motion, the court after reviewing the evidence finds a credible risk of abduction of the child, the court shall enter an abduction prevention order. The order must include the provisions required by subsection (1) of this section and measures and conditions, including those in subsections (3), (4), and (5) of this section, that are reasonably calculated to prevent abduction of the child, giving due consideration to the custody and visitation rights of the parties and the child-custody determinations in effect at the time of the filing of the petition under this article. The court shall consider the age of the child, the potential harm to the child from an abduction, the legal and practical difficulties of returning the child to the jurisdiction if abducted, and the reasons for the potential abduction, including evidence of domestic violence, domestic abuse, stalking, or child abuse or neglect.

(3) An abduction prevention order may include one or more of the following:

- (a) An imposition of travel restrictions that require that a party traveling with the child outside a designated geographical area provide the other party with the following:
  - (I) The travel itinerary of the child;
  - (II) A list of physical addresses and telephone numbers at which the child can be reached at specified times; and
  - (III) Copies of all travel documents;
- (b) A prohibition of the respondent directly or indirectly from:
  - (I) Removing the child from this state, the United States, or another geographic area without permission of the court or the petitioner's written consent;
  - (II) Removing or retaining the child in violation of a child-custody determination;
  - (III) Removing the child from school or a child-care or similar facility; or
  - (IV) Approaching the child at any location other than a site designated for supervised visitation or supervised parenting time;
- (c) A requirement that a party register the order in another state as a prerequisite to allowing the child to travel to that state;
- (d) With regard to the child's passport:
  - (I) A direction that the petitioner place the child's name in the United States department of state's child passport issuance alert program;

(II) A requirement that the respondent surrender to the court or the petitioner's attorney any United States or foreign passport issued in the child's name, including a passport issued in the name of both the parent and the child; and

(III) A prohibition upon the respondent from applying on behalf of the child for a new or replacement passport or visa;

(e) As a prerequisite to exercising custody, parental responsibilities, or visitation or parenting time, a requirement that the respondent provide:

(I) To the United States department of state office of children's issues and the relevant foreign consulate or embassy, an authenticated copy of the order detailing passport and travel restrictions for the child;

(II) To the court:

(A) Proof that the respondent has provided the information in subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (e); and

(B) An acknowledgment in a record from the relevant foreign consulate or embassy that no passport application has been made, or passport issued, on behalf of the child;

(III) To the petitioner, proof of registration with the United States embassy or other United States diplomatic presence in the destination country and with the central authority for the "Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction", if that convention is in effect between the United States and the destination country, unless one of the parties objects; and

(IV) A written waiver under the federal "Privacy Act of 1974", 5 U.S.C. Section 552a, with respect to any document, application, or other information pertaining to the child authorizing its disclosure to the court and the petitioner; and

(f) Upon the petitioner's request, a requirement that the respondent obtain an order from the relevant foreign country containing terms identical to the child-custody determination issued in the United States.

(4) In an abduction prevention order, the court may impose conditions on the exercise of custody, parental responsibilities, or visitation or parenting time that:

(a) Limit visitation or parenting time or require that visitation or parenting time with the child by the respondent be supervised until the court finds that supervision is no longer necessary and order the respondent to pay the costs of supervision;

(b) Require the respondent to post a bond or provide other security in an amount sufficient to serve as a financial deterrent to abduction, the proceeds of which may be used to pay for the reasonable expenses of recovery of the child, including reasonable attorneys fees and costs if there is an abduction; and

(c) Require the respondent to obtain education on the potentially harmful effects to the child from abduction.

(5) To prevent imminent abduction of a child, a court may:

(a) Issue a warrant to take physical custody of the child under section 14-13.5-109 or the law of this state other than this article;

(b) Direct the use of law enforcement to take any action reasonably necessary to locate the child, obtain return of the child, or enforce a custody determination under this article or the law of this state other than this article; or

(c) Grant any other relief allowed under the law of this state other than this article.

(6) The remedies provided in this article are cumulative and do not affect the availability of other remedies to prevent abduction.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This act provides courts with a choice of remedies. Ideally the court will choose the least restrictive measures and conditions to maximize opportunities for continued parental contact while minimizing the opportunities for abduction. The most restrictive measures should be used when there have been prior custody violations and overt threats to take the child; when the child faces substantial potential harm from an abducting parent who may have serious mental or personality disorder, history of abuse or violence or no prior relationship with the child; or when the obstacles to recovering the child are formidable due to countries not cooperating and enforcing orders from the United States, not being signatories to the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction or non-compliant. This section of the Act lists the possible prevention measures categorized as travel restrictions, conditions on the exercise of custody and visitation, and urgent measures when abduction is imminent or in progress.

If a person files a petition under this Act, even if the court decides not to order restrictive measures or impose conditions, the court may clarify and make more specific the existing child-custody determination. To enter an abduction prevention order, the court must have jurisdiction to make a child-custody determination even if it is emergency jurisdiction. The court should set out the basis for the court's exercise of jurisdiction. The more apparent on the face of the document that the court issuing the order had proper jurisdiction, the more likely courts in other states and countries are to recognize it as valid. The court should also include a statement showing that the parties were properly served and given adequate notice. This makes it apparent on the face of the order that due process was met. See Sections 108 and 205 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [sections 14-13-108 and 14-13-205, C.R.S.]. States do not require personal jurisdiction to make a child-custody determination.

The court may make an existing child-custody order clearer and more specific. Vague orders are difficult to enforce without additional litigation. The term "reasonable visitation" can lead to conflicts between the parents and make it difficult for law enforcement officers to know if the order is being violated. The court may specify the dates and times for each party's custody and visitation, including holidays, birthdays, and telephone or Internet contact. Because joint custody arrangements create special enforcement problems, the court should ensure that the order specifies the child's residential placement at all times. Whenever possible, the residential arrangements should represent the parents' agreement. However, to prevent abductions, it is important for the court order to be specific as to the residential arrangements for the child. If there is a threat of abduction, awarding sole custody to one parent makes enforcement easier.

The court may also include language in the prevention order to highlight the importance of both parties complying with the court order by including in bold language: "VIOLATION OF THIS ORDER MAY SUBJECT THE PARTY IN VIOLATION TO CIVIL AND CRIMINAL PENALTIES."

Because every abduction case may be a potential international abduction case, the prevention order should identify the place of habitual residence of a child. Although the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction does not define "habitual residence" and the determination is made by the court in the country hearing a petition for return of a child, a statement in the child-custody determination or prevention order may help. A typical statement reads:

The State of _____,
United States of America, is the habitual residence of the minor children within the meaning of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction.

If the court finds a credible risk of abduction, this Act provides numerous measures to prevent an abduction. Courts can require a party traveling outside a specified geographical area to provide the other party with all relevant information about where the child will be and how to contact the child. The court can impose travel restrictions prohibiting the respondent from leaving the United States or a specific geographical area; from removing the child from school, day care or other facilities, and can restrict contact other than as specified in the order. The court may also impose passport restrictions and require the respondent to provide assurances and safeguards as a condition of traveling with the child.

The court may also choose to impose restrictions on custody or visitation. The most common, and one of the most effective, restrictions is supervised visitation. Visitation should remain supervised until the court decides the threat of abduction has passed. In addition, the court may require the posting of a bond sufficient to serve both as a deterrent and as a source of funds for the cost of the return of the child. If domestic violence is present, the court may want to order the abusive person to obtain education, counseling or attend a batterers' intervention and prevention program.

Because of international abduction cases are the most complex and difficult, reasonable restrictions to prevent such abductions are necessary. If a credible risk of international abduction of the child exists, passport controls and travel restrictions may be indispensable. It may be advantageous in some cases to obtain a "mirror" or reciprocal order. Before exercising rights, the respondent would need to get a custody order from the country to which the respondent will travel that recognizes both the United States order and the court's continuing jurisdiction. The foreign court would need to agree to order return of the child if the child was taken in violation of the court order. This potentially expensive and time consuming remedy should only be ordered when likely to be of assistance. Because the foreign court may subsequently modify its order, problems can arise.

The court may do whatever is necessary to prevent an abduction, including using the warrant procedure under this act or under the law of the state. Many law enforcement officers are unclear about their role in responding to parental kidnapping cases. One study showed that 70 percent of law enforcement agencies reported that they did not have written policies and procedures governing child abduction cases. A provision in the custody order directing law enforcement officer to "accompany and assist" a parent to recover an abducted child may be useful but is not included in this Act.

The remedies provided in this Act are intended to supplement and complement existing law.

14-13.5-109. Warrant to take physical custody of child. (1) If a petition under this article contains allegations, and the court finds that there is a credible risk that the child is imminently likely to be wrongfully removed, the court may issue an ex parte warrant to take physical custody of the child.

(2) The respondent on a petition under subsection (1) of this section must be afforded an opportunity to be heard at the earliest possible time after the ex parte warrant is executed, but not later than the next judicial day unless a hearing on that date is impossible. In that event, the court shall hold the hearing on the first judicial day possible.

(3) An ex parte warrant under subsection (1) of this section to take physical custody of a child must:

(a) Recite the facts upon which a determination of a credible risk of imminent wrongful removal of the child is based;

(b) Direct law enforcement officers to take physical custody of the child immediately;

(c) State the date and time for the hearing on the petition; and

(d) Provide for the safe interim placement of the child pending further order of the court.

(4) If feasible, before issuing a warrant and before determining the placement of the child after the warrant is executed, the court may order a search of the relevant databases of the national crime information center system and similar state databases to determine if either the petitioner or respondent has a history of domestic violence, stalking, or child abuse or neglect.

(5) The petition and warrant must be served on the respondent when or immediately after the child is taken into physical custody.

(6) A warrant to take physical custody of a child, issued by this state or another state, is enforceable throughout this state. If the court finds that a less intrusive remedy will not be effective, it may authorize law enforcement officers to enter private property to take physical custody of the child. If required by exigent circumstances, the court may authorize law enforcement officers to make a forcible entry at any hour.

(7) If the court finds, after a hearing, that a petitioner sought an ex parte warrant under subsection (1) of this section for the purpose of harassment or in bad faith, the court may award the respondent reasonable attorneys fees, costs, and expenses.

(8) This article does not affect the availability of relief allowed under the law of this state other than this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section of the Act authorizes issuance of a warrant in an emergency situation, such as an allegation that the respondent is preparing to abduct the child to a foreign country and is on the way to the airport. The harm is the credible risk of imminent removal. If the court finds such a risk, the court should temporarily waive the notice requirements and issue a warrant to take physical custody of the child. Immediately after the warrant is executed, the respondent is to receive notice of the proceedings. This section mirrors Section 311 of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act [section 14-13-311, C.R.S.] on warrants to pick up a child which are available when there is an existing child-custody determination. In many states, the term used in civil cases is "writ of attachment."

The court should hear the testimony of the petitioner or another witness before issuing the warrant. The testimony may be heard in person, by telephone, or by any other means acceptable under local law, which may include video conferencing or use of other technology.

Domestic violence includes “family” violence. Because some batterers may try to use the warrant procedure to prevent victims and the children from escaping domestic violence or child abuse, the court should check relevant state and national databases to see if either the petitioner or respondent’s name is listed or if relevant information exists that has not been disclosed before issuing the warrant and ordering placement. Lundy Bancroft & Jay G. Silverman, The Batterer as Parent: Addressing the Impact of Domestic Violence on Family Dynamics 73, 75 (2002)(indicating that most parental abductions take place in the context of a history of domestic violence because threatening to take the child from the mother is a form of control).

Some courts have computer terminals on the bench and a database search takes seconds. Courts without computer access can seek the assistance of law enforcement. Unless impracticable, the court should conduct a search of all person databases of the National Crime Information Center system, including the protection order file, the historical protection order file, the warrants file, the sex offender registry, and the persons on supervised release file. In addition, it is recommended that courts run searches in the National Law Enforcement Telecommunication System in the petitioner’s state of birth, current state of residence, and other recent states of residence. Civil courts are authorized by statute and National Crime Information Center policy to have access to information in several files for domestic violence and stalking cases. Because child abduction involves family members and can harm children, and violence between the parents is often a factor leading to child abduction, cases in which a parent alleges a risk of wrongful removal should permit access to the relevant databases.

The court should also view comparable state databases, such as the state department of social service registry of persons found to have abused or neglected children. If the petitioner or respondent are listed for a reason related to a crime of domestic or family violence, the court may refuse to issue a warrant or order any appropriate placement authorized under the laws of the state. The warrant must provide for the placement of a child pending the hearing. Temporary placement will most often be with the petitioner unless the database check reveals the petitioner is a likely or known abuser.

The court must state the reasons for issuance of the warrant. The warrant can be enforced by law enforcement officers wherever the child is found in the state. The warrant may authorize entry upon private property to pick up the child if no less intrusive means are possible. In extraordinary cases, the warrant may authorize law enforcement to make a forcible entry at any hour. This section also authorizes law enforcement officers to enforce out of state warrants.

This section of the Act applies only to wrongful removals, not wrongful retentions. It does not hinder a court from issuing any other immediate ex parte relief to prevent a wrongful removal or retention as may be allowed under law other than this act.

14-14-104. Recovery for child support debt. (1) Any payment of public assistance by a county department of social services made to or for the benefit of any dependent child or children creates a debt, which is due and owing to the county department of social services, recoverable by the county as a debt due to the state by the parent or parents who are responsible for support of the dependent child or children in an amount to be determined as follows:

(a) Where there has been a court order directed to a parent, the child support debt of that parent shall be an amount equal to the amount of public assistance paid to the extent of the full amount of arrearages under the order. However, the county department of social services through its delegate child support enforcement unit may petition for modification of the order on the same grounds as a party to the action.

(b) Where there has been no court or administrative order for child support, the county department of social services through its delegate child support enforcement unit may initiate a court or administrative action to establish the amount of child support debt accrued, and the court or delegate child support enforcement unit, after hearing or upon stipulation or upon a default order, shall enter an order for child support debt. The debt shall be based on the amount of current child support due, or which would have been due if there were an existing order for child support, under the current child support enforcement guidelines in effect on the date of the stipulation, default order, or hearing to establish the child support debt times the number of months the family received public assistance. The total amount of child support debt shall not exceed the total amount paid for public assistance. A child support debt established pursuant to this paragraph (b) shall be in addition to any subsequent child support debt accrued pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (1).

(2) The county department of social services through its delegate child support enforcement unit shall be subrogated to the right of the dependent child or children or person having legal and physical custody of said child or children or having been allocated decision-making authority with respect to the child or children to pursue any child support action existing under the laws of this state to obtain reimbursement of public assistance expended. If a court enters a judgment for or orders the payment of any amount of child support to be paid by an obligor, the county department of social services shall be subrogated to the debt created by such judgment or order.

(3) No agreement between any one parent or custodial person or person allocated parental responsibilities and the obligor, either relieving the obligor of any duty of support or responsibility therefor or purporting to settle past, present, or future child support obligations either as settlement or as prepayment, shall act to reduce or terminate any rights of the county department of social services to recover from that obligor for any public assistance provided unless the county department of social services through its delegate child support enforcement unit has consented to the agreement, in writing, and such written consent has been incorporated into and made a part of the agreement.

(4) Any parental rights with respect to custody or decision-making responsibility with respect to a child or parenting time that are granted by a court of competent jurisdiction or are subject to court review shall remain unaffected by the establishment or enforcement of a child support debt or obligation by the county department of social services or other person pursuant to the provisions of this article; and the establishment or enforcement of any such child support debt or obligation shall also remain unaffected by such parental rights with respect to custody or decision-making responsibility with respect to a child or parenting time.

(5) No child support debt under this section shall be created in the case of, or at any time collected from, a parent who receives assistance under the Colorado works program as described in part 7 of article 2 of title 26, C.R.S., for the period such parent is receiving such assistance, unless by order of a court of competent jurisdiction.

(6) Creation of a child support debt under this section shall not modify or extinguish any rights which the county department of social services has obtained or may obtain under an assignment of child support rights, including the right to recover and retain unreimbursed public assistance.

(7) When a portion of a public assistance grant, paid to or for the benefit of a dependent child, includes moneys paid to provide the custodial parent or the parent with whom the child resides the majority of the time or caretaker relative with necessities including but not limited to shelter, medical care, clothing, or transportation, then those moneys are deemed to be paid to or for the benefit of the dependent child.

(8) Notwithstanding rule 98 of the Colorado rules of civil procedure, venue for an action to establish child support debt is proper in any county where public assistance was or is being paid, in any county where the obligor parent resides, or in any county where the child resides.

(9) A copy of the computer printout obtained from the state department of human services of the record of payments of assistance under the Colorado works program as described in part 7 of article 2 of title 26, C.R.S., made on behalf of a child whose custodian has been receiving child support enforcement services pursuant to section 26-13-106, C.R.S., shall be admissible into evidence as proof of such payments in any proceeding to establish child support debt and shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of child support debt owing on behalf of said child.

ANNOTATION

A determination of accrued child support debt of an absent parent when there has been no prior order of support does not violate due process or equal protection provisions of the constitution nor subject the obligor to an ex post facto law or a retrospective statute. People ex rel. J.A.E.S., 7 P.3d 1021 (Colo. App. 2000).

Guidelines must be applied to the parent's current income, rather than to the income at the time the debt arose. This does not implicate due process or equal protection, since the current income standards requires consideration of parent's current ability to repay the debt. Montezuma Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Laner, 937 P.2d 903 (Colo. App. 1997).

Trial court's ruling on the amount of debt could not stand where court applied a previous version of the statute in effect when the debt arose. The current version of the statute should be applied to determine the amount of the debt as the bill enacting the new statute applied to orders establishing debt on or after the date the statute took effect. Montezuma Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Laner, 937 P.2d 903 (Colo. App. 1997).

A mother's assignment to department of social services of support rights against father for period in which mother received public assistance was total and unconditional and mother had no entitlement to either support payments or any interest thereon, barring any reassignment back to her. Edis v. Edis, 742 P.2d 954 (Colo. App. 1987).

In determining child support debt based on prior payments of public assistance, the trial court must enter an order equal to or more than the amount of public assistance paid. People in Interest of A.A.V. v. J.R., 815 P.2d 997 (Colo. App. 1991).

Section requires court to enter order in favor of county department of social services against responsible parent in the exact amount of public assistance paid, regardless of parent's ability to pay. In re Ward, 856 P.2d 67 (Colo. App. 1993).

An obligor is liable to the county department of social services for an amount not exceeding the full amount of public assistance paid during the period when no order for child support existed. People ex rel. J.A.E.S., 7 P.3d 1021 (Colo. App. 2000).

Subsection (2) provides that the county department of social services shall be subrogated to the debt created by a judgment or order for payment of child support by an obligor and to the right of the dependent child or children or person having legal or physical custody of such child or children to pursue any child support action to obtain reimbursement of public assistance expended. In re Cespedes, 895 P.2d 1172 (Colo. App. 1995).

Mother was a real party in interest and entitled to seek an increase in child support since only part of the mother's right to receive child support had been assigned to the department of human services for purposes of receiving AFDC payments. In re Cespedes, 895 P.2d 1172 (Colo. App. 1995).

Subsection (2) allows a custodial parent to seek an increase in child support that includes the amount of public assistance received, provided that any such increase is subject to the state's right to subrogation. In re Cespedes, 895 P.2d 1172 (Colo. App. 1995).

Even if it is assumed that the doctrine of laches applies against the department of social services, the trial court had ample support for rejection of the defense. Social services acted as promptly as it could and pursued efforts to obtain reimbursement shortly after confirming father's address and income. Montezuma Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Laner, 937 P.2d 903 (Colo. App. 1997).

14-14-105. Continuing garnishment. (1) A writ of garnishment for the collection from earnings of judgments for arrearages for child support, for maintenance when combined with child support, for child support debts, or for maintenance shall be continuing; shall have priority over any garnishment, lien, or income assignment other than a writ previously served on the same garnishee pursuant to this subsection (1) or a wage assignment activated pursuant to section 14-14-107 or section 14-14-111, as those sections existed prior to July 1, 1996, or an income assignment activated pursuant to section 14-14-111.5; and shall require the garnishee to withhold, pursuant to section 13-54-104 (3), C.R.S., the portion of earnings subject to garnishment at each succeeding earnings disbursement interval until such judgment is satisfied or the garnishment is released by the court or in writing by the judgment creditor.

(2) No employer may discharge an employee solely for the reason that his earnings have been subjected to garnishment pursuant to this section. Any such discharge in violation of this subsection (2) shall subject the employer to liability for damages.

14-14-106. Interest. Interest per annum at four percent greater than the statutory rate set forth in section 5-12-101, C.R.S., on any arrearages and child support debt due and owing may be compounded monthly and may be collected by the judgment creditor; however, such interest may be waived by the judgment creditor, and such creditor shall not be required to maintain interest balance due accounts.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "An Update of Appendices from Collecting Pre-and Post-judgment Interest in Colorado", see 15 Colo. Law. 990 (1986).

Interest on child support judgment. Trial court is without discretion to deny interest. Therefore, interest on child support arrearages accruing from the date each installment became due shall be included in the judgment. In re Schutte, 721 P.2d 160 (Colo. App. 1986).

This section is applicable only for support past due and unpaid by an obligor and not available against the Denver department of social services for amounts collected from obligor which the court ordered paid to ex-wife. People in Interest of D.C., 797 P.2d 840 (Colo. App. 1990).

This section does not apply to retroactive modification of support, since debt is not mature until after entry of order. In re Schutte, 721 P.2d 16 (Colo. App. 1986); In re Armit, 878 P.2d 101 (Colo. App. 1994).

Court does not have discretion as to amount of interest or whether interest is compounded monthly. Statute vests in the judgment creditor the option to collect the increased rate, to compound the interest monthly, and to waive the interest. In re Tognoni, __ P.3d __ (Colo. App. 2011).

14-14-109. Security, bond, or guarantee. (1) In any action in which child support is ordered, an interested party may apply to the court for an order requiring that the obligor post security, a bond, or other form of guarantee to secure payment of the child support ordered. In considering such request, the court shall consider, among other factors, the nature of the obligor's employment and whether the obligor's income is unreachable by a wage assignment entered pursuant to section 14-14-107 prior to July 1, 1996, or by immediate deduction for a family support obligation pursuant to section 14-14-111 as it existed prior to July 1, 1996, or by an income assignment entered pursuant to section 14-14-111.5 on or after July 1, 1996.

(2) If the request to post security, a bond, or other guarantee is made subsequent to the issuance of a child support order, a copy of the request shall be sent to the obligor at his last-known address by certified mail no later than twenty days prior to the date set for a hearing on the issue. Such notice shall contain a statement of the obligor's rights to appear and contest the request.

(3) When a request to post security, a bond, or other guarantee is before the court, the court shall make findings on the appropriateness of the request based on the evidence presented, and shall then either grant or deny the request.

14-14-110. Contempt of court. (1) Evidence of noncompliance with an order for child support, or maintenance when combined with child support, in the form of an affidavit from the clerk of the court or in the form of a copy of the record of payments certified by the clerk of the court or in the form of a copy of the record of payment maintained by the family support registry is prima facie evidence of contempt of court.

(2) In determining whether or not the obligor is in contempt of court, the court may consider that the required payment has been made prior to the hearing to determine contempt or that owing to physical incapacity or other good cause the obligor was unable to furnish the support, care, and maintenance required by the order for the period of noncompliance alleged in the motion.

(3) If, after personal service of the citation and a copy of the motion and affidavit, the obligor fails to appear at the time so designated, the court may issue a warrant for the obligor's arrest. Upon issuance of the warrant, the court shall direct by endorsement thereon the amount of the bond required.

(4) Pursuant to subsection (3) of this section, where the obligor has been released upon deposit of cash, stocks, or bonds, or upon surety bond secured by property, if the obligor fails to appear in accordance with the primary condition of the bond, the court shall declare a forfeiture. Notice of the order of forfeiture shall be mailed immediately by the court to the obligor and sureties, if any, at the last-known address. If the obligor does not appear and surrender to the court having jurisdiction within thirty days after the date of the forfeiture, or within that period satisfy the court that appearance and surrender by the obligor is impossible and without the obligor's fault, the court shall enter judgment against the obligor and the sureties, if any, for the amount of the bail and costs of the court proceedings.

(5) Any moneys collected or paid upon any such execution or in any case upon said bond shall be turned over to the clerk of the court in which the bond is given to be applied to the child support obligation, including where the obligation is assigned to the department of human services pursuant to section 26-2-111 (3), C.R.S.

14-14-111.5. Income assignments for child support or maintenance. (1) Legislative declaration. The general assembly hereby finds and declares that, for the good of the children of Colorado and to promote family self-sufficiency, there is a need to strengthen Colorado's child support enforcement laws and to simplify, streamline, and clarify the existing laws relating to wage assignments previously provided for in section 14-14-107 and immediate deductions for family support obligations previously provided for in section 14-14-111. In support of this effort, the general assembly hereby adopts the term "income assignment" to be used to provide consistency and standardization of the process for collecting child support and maintenance.

(2) Notice requirements for income assignments. Notice of income assignments shall be given in accordance with the following provisions based upon the date on which the order sought to be enforced was entered:

(a) Orders entered before July 10, 1987. (I) For orders entered before July 10, 1987, that do not include an order for income assignment as described in paragraph (a) of subsection (3) of this section or an order for immediate deductions for family support obligations as described in former section 14-14-111, as it existed prior to July 1, 1996, a notice of pending income assignment shall be sent by certified mail to the last-known address of the obligor, or such notice shall be personally served upon the obligor prior to the activation of an income assignment; except that such notice shall not be required if the obligor was given such notice prior to July 10, 1987, and such notice was in substantial compliance with the requirements of this section. The notice shall be given by the obligee, the obligee's representative, or the delegate child support enforcement unit.

(II) The notice of pending income assignment shall include the following information:

(A) That an income assignment may be activated immediately or at any other time at the request of the obligor, by agreement of the parties, or at the request of an obligee who is receiving support enforcement services from a delegate child support enforcement unit pursuant to section 26-13-106, C.R.S., in accordance with state procedures. Such state procedures require that the obligee request an income assignment in writing and that, after the delegate child support enforcement unit receives the request, it shall review the case to determine if it meets the criteria for requiring income assignment, which criteria are that the obligor is not meeting the terms of a written agreement for an alternative arrangement, or that the reason for the original good cause determination no longer exists, or that the obligor is currently paying child support but has threatened to stop and the obligee documents and substantiates that there has been a change in the obligor's circumstances that will lead the obligor to stop paying child support. If none of the circumstances set forth in this sub-subparagraph (A) exists, then the income assignment shall remain pending unless the obligor fails to comply with the support order by not making a full payment on its due date.

(B) That the activation of an income assignment is the notification to the obligor's employer or employers, trustee, or other payor of funds to withhold income for payment of the support obligation and arrears, if any;

(C) That, if any arrears accrue or already have accrued, an additional payment on the arrears shall be added to the income assignment pursuant to subparagraph (V) of paragraph (b) of subsection (3) of this section;

(D) That the obligor has a right to object to the activation of the income assignment raising the defenses that are available pursuant to sub-subparagraph (B) of subparagraph (VII) of paragraph (b) of subsection (3) of this section;

(E) That the obligor shall notify the family support registry, if payments are required to be made through the registry, in writing, of any change of address or employment within ten days after the change.

(b) Orders entered on or after July 10, 1987, and before January 1, 1990. For orders entered on or after July 10, 1987, and before January 1, 1990, no notice of pending income assignment as described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall be required.

(c) Orders entered in Title IV-D cases on or after January 1, 1990, and before January 1, 1994. For orders entered on or after January 1, 1990, and before January 1, 1994, in cases in which the custodian of the child is receiving support enforcement services from a delegate child support enforcement unit pursuant to section 26-13-106, C.R.S., no notice of pending income assignment as described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall be required.

(d) Orders entered in non-Title IV-D cases on or after July 10, 1987, and before January 1, 1994. For orders entered on or after July 10, 1987, and before January 1, 1994, in cases in which the custodian of the child is not receiving support enforcement services from a delegate child support enforcement unit pursuant to section 26-13-106, C.R.S., no notice of pending income assignment as described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall be required.

(e) Orders entered on or after January 1, 1994, and before July 1, 1996. For orders entered on or after January 1, 1994, and before July 1, 1996, no notice of pending income assignment as described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall be required.

(f) Orders entered on or after July 1, 1996. (I) Whenever an obligation for child support, maintenance, child support when combined with maintenance, retroactive support, medical support, child support arrears, or child support debt is initially determined, whether temporary or permanent or whether modified, the amount of child support, maintenance, child support when combined with maintenance, retroactive support, medical support, child support arrears, or child support debt shall be ordered by the court or delegate child support enforcement unit to be activated immediately as an income assignment subject to section 13-54-104 (3), C.R.S., from the income, as defined in section 14-10-115 (3), that is due or is to become due in the future from the obligor's employer, employers, or successor employers or other payor of funds, regardless of the source, of the person obligated to pay the child support, maintenance, child support when combined with maintenance, retroactive support, medical support, child support arrears, or child support debt.

(II) Any order for support shall include the following, if available:

(A) The name, date of birth, and sex of each child for whom the support is ordered;

(B) The obligee's name, social security number, residential and mailing addresses, and date of birth;

(C) The total amount of current support to be paid monthly in each category of support;

(D) The date of commencement of the order and the date or dates of the month that the payments are due;

(E) The total amount of arrears that is due, if any, in each category of support as of the date of the order; and

(F) The obligor's name, social security number, residential and mailing addresses, and date of birth.

(G) (Deleted by amendment, L. 99, p. 1085, § 3, effective July 1, 1999.)

(3) Activation of income assignment. Income assignments shall be activated in accordance with the following provisions:

(a) Immediate activation of income assignments. (I) Upon entry of an order for child support, maintenance, child support when combined with maintenance, retroactive support, medical support, child support arrears, or child support debt during the time periods described in paragraph (c), (e), or (f) of subsection (2) of this section, the obligee, the obligee's representative, or the delegate child support enforcement unit shall cause a notice of income assignment to be served immediately as described in subsection (4) of this section.

(II) Exceptions to immediate activation of income assignments. Income shall not be subject to immediate activation of an income assignment under this paragraph (a) in any case in which:

(A) One of the parties demonstrates, and the court or the delegate child support enforcement unit finds in writing, that there is good cause not to require immediate activation of an income assignment. For the purposes of this sub-subparagraph (A), "good cause" means the following: There is a written determination and explanation by the court or delegate child support enforcement unit stating why implementing immediate activation of an income assignment would not be in the best interests of the child; and the obligor has signed a written agreement to keep the delegate child support enforcement unit, the obligee, or the obligee's representative informed of the obligor's current employer and information on any health insurance coverage to which the obligor has access; and proof is provided that the obligor made timely payments without the necessity of income assignment in previously ordered child support obligations.

(B) A written agreement is reached between both parties that provides for an alternative arrangement. For purposes of this sub-subparagraph (B), the delegate child support enforcement unit shall be considered a party in all cases in which the custodian of a child is receiving support enforcement services from a delegate child support enforcement unit pursuant to section 26-13-106 (1), C.R.S., and as such is required to consent to the alternative written agreement. In all cases in which the custodian of a child is receiving support enforcement services from a delegate child support enforcement unit pursuant to section 26-13-106 (2), C.R.S., the obligee or the obligee's representative shall provide the delegate child support enforcement unit with notice of any agreement reached between the parties pursuant to this sub-subparagraph (B).

(b) (I) Activation of an income assignment following notice. An income assignment based on an order entered during the time periods described in paragraph (a), (b), or (d) of subsection (2) of this section shall not be activated unless:

(A) The obligor requests that the income assignment be activated; or

(B) The parties agree at the time of the entry or modification of a support order, or at any other time, that the income assignment is to be activated; or

(C) The obligee files an advance notice of activation with any court having jurisdiction to enforce the support order because a payment was due under a support order and the obligor has failed to make a payment in full as ordered.

(II) Notice of activation. When an income assignment is activated pursuant to sub-subparagraph (C) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b), a copy of the advance notice of activation and a form for the obligor to object to the activation listing the available defenses shall be mailed by the obligee or the obligee's representative to the obligor's last-known address. The notice of activation shall contain the following information:

(A) The court that issued the support order;

(B) The case number;

(C) The date of the support order;

(D) The facts establishing that a full support payment was not made on or before it became due;

(E) The amount of overdue support owed;

(F) The amount of income to be withheld for current support and the amount to be withheld for arrears per month;

(G) A statement that, if section 13-54-104 (3), C.R.S., applies, the employer may not withhold more than the limitations set by said section;

(H) The name and address of the obligor's most recently known employer and a statement that the obligor is required to inform the court or the family support registry, if payments are to be made through the registry, of any new employment;

(I) A statement of the obligor's right to object to the activation of the income assignment within fourteen days after the date the advance notice of activation is sent to the obligor and the procedures available for such objection;

(J) The available defenses to the activation;

(K) A statement that failure to object to the activation of an income assignment within fourteen days after the date the advance notice of activation was sent to the obligor will result in the activation of the income assignment pursuant to subsection (4) of this section;

(L) A statement of the procedures the court will follow when an objection is filed by the obligor;

(M) A statement that, if the court denies the objection of the obligor, the income assignment shall be activated pursuant to subsection (4) of this section;

(N) A statement that the income assignment is a continuing assignment; and

(O) A statement that, if arrears have accrued, an additional monthly payment shall be set pursuant to subparagraph (V) of this paragraph (b) and that this payment may be modified if additional arrears accrue.

(III) Affidavit requirements. The party activating an income assignment based on an order entered during the time periods described in paragraph (a), (b), or (d) of subsection (2) of this section shall prepare an affidavit of arrears, which shall state the type and amount of support ordered per month and the date upon which the payment was due and, if the payments were to be made into the court registry or the family support registry, state that the full payment was not received by the registry on or before the due date or, if the payments were to be made to the obligee directly, state that the obligee did not receive the full payment on or before the due date, the date and amount of any modifications of the order, the period or periods of time the arrears accrued, the total amount of support that should have been paid, the total amount actually paid, and the total arrears, plus interest, due. If the income assignment is being activated pursuant to sub-subparagraph (A) or (B) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b), the affidavit shall be filed with the court at the time of activation. If payments were ordered to be made through the family support registry, a copy of the payment record maintained by the family support registry shall be sufficient proof of payments made, and no affidavit shall be required. If the income assignment is being activated pursuant to sub-subparagraph (C) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b), the affidavit shall be filed with the advance notice of activation.

(IV) Agreement to activate. When an income assignment is activated pursuant to sub-subparagraph (A) or (B) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b) and arrears are owed, as verified by the affidavit of arrears, the parties may agree to an amount of payment on the arrears, or the court may determine an appropriate amount for payment.

(V) Arrears. When an income assignment is activated pursuant to sub-subparagraph (C) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b) and arrears are owed, as verified by the affidavit of arrears, the income assignment shall include a payment on the arrears in the amount of one-twenty-fourth of the total amount due up to the date of the activation of the income assignment. The payment on the arrears shall remain the same until the arrears, plus interest, are paid unless the parties subsequently agree to a larger or smaller arrears payment amount or further arrears accrue. The total arrears due, plus interest, may be updated periodically, and the amount of payment may be revised periodically, as appropriate.

(VI) A payment on arrears, plus interest, for support, if any, shall be included in an activated income assignment; however, the combined payment on current support and arrears is subject to section 13-54-104 (3), C.R.S.

(VII) Objections to income assignment. (A) The obligor may file with the court a written objection to the activation of an income assignment pursuant to sub-subparagraph (C) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b) within fourteen days after the advance notice of activation is sent to the obligor pursuant to subparagraph (II) of this paragraph (b) unless the obligor alleges that the notice was not received, in which case an objection may be filed no later than fourteen days after actual notice. The obligor shall mail a copy of the written objection to the obligee or the obligee's representative.

(B) The objection shall be limited to the defense that there is a mistake of fact such as an error in the identity of the obligor or in the amount of the support.

(C) If an objection is filed by the obligor, a hearing shall be set and held by the court within forty-two days after the date the advance notice of activation was sent to the obligor pursuant to subparagraph (II) of this paragraph (b). The court shall deny the objection without hearing if a defense in sub-subparagraph (B) of this subparagraph (VII) is not alleged.

(D) At a hearing on an objection, the sole issue before the court is whether there was a mistake of fact as specified in sub-subparagraph (B) of this subparagraph (VII).

(E) At a hearing on an objection, reasonable attorney fees and costs may be awarded to the prevailing party.

(F) If an objection is based on the amount of arrears, the income assignment may be activated and enforced as to current support obligations, and the activation of the income assignment as to arrears shall be stayed pending the outcome of a hearing on such objection.

(4) Notice to withhold income for support. Fourteen days after the date the advance notice of activation is mailed to the obligor for income assignments on orders entered during the time periods described in paragraphs (a), (b), and (d) of subsection (2) of this section or immediately for income assignments on orders entered during the time periods described in paragraphs (c), (e), and (f) of subsection (2) of this section, an income assignment may be activated by the obligee, the obligee's representative, or the delegate child support enforcement unit by causing a notice to withhold income for support to be served upon the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds, by first-class mail or by electronic service, if such employer, trustee, or other payor of funds mutually agrees with the state child support enforcement agency to receive such income assignments electronically. Receipt of notice by the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds confers jurisdiction of the court over the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds. Income assignments activated for orders entered during the time periods described in paragraphs (c), (e), and (f) of subsection (2) of this section shall be paid through the family support registry pursuant to section 26-13-114, C.R.S. In circumstances in which the source of income to the obligor is unemployment compensation benefits and the custodian of the child is receiving support enforcement services pursuant to section 26-13-106, C.R.S., no notice to withhold income for support shall be required. In such cases, the state child support enforcement agency shall electronically intercept the unemployment compensation benefits through an automated interface with the department of labor and employment. In all other cases, the notice to withhold income for support shall contain the following information and, except in cases in which the obligee is receiving child support enforcement services pursuant to section 26-13-106, C.R.S., shall have a certified copy of the support order attached thereto:

(a) The name and social security number of the obligor;

(b) A statement that withholding must begin no later than the first pay period that begins at least fourteen working days after the date on the notice to withhold income for support;

(c) Instructions concerning withholding the deductions, including:

(I) The amount to be withheld for current support and current maintenance when included in the child support order, the amount to be withheld for past due support, the amount to be withheld for past due maintenance when included in the child support order, the amount to be withheld for child support debt, the amount to be withheld for medical support, the amount to be withheld for current maintenance, the amount to be withheld for past due maintenance per month, and the amount to be withheld for processing fees, if any. In the event that the pay periods of the employer are more frequent, the employer shall withhold per pay period an appropriate percentage of the monthly amount due so that the total withheld during the month will total the monthly amount due.

(II) A statement that the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds may deduct a fee to defray the cost of withholding and that such employer, trustee, or other payor of funds shall refer to the laws governing the work state of the employee for the allowable amount of such fee;

(III) That, if section 13-54-104 (3), C.R.S., applies, the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds may not withhold more than the limitations set by said section;

(d) Instructions about disbursing the withheld amounts, including the requirements that each disbursement:

(I) Shall be forwarded within seven working days after the date of each deduction and withholding would have been paid or credited to the employee;

(II) Shall be forwarded to the address indicated on the notice;

(III) Shall be identified by the case number, the name and social security number of each obligor, the date the deduction was made, the amount of the payment, and the family support registry account number for cases ordered to be paid through the family support registry; and

(IV) May be combined with other disbursements in a single payment to the family support registry, if required to be sent to the registry, if the individual amount of each disbursement is identified as required by subparagraph (III) of this paragraph (d);

(e) A statement specifying whether or not the obligor is required to provide health insurance for the children who are the subject of the order;

(f) and (g) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2000, p. 1704, § 2, effective July 1, 2000.)

(h) A statement that, if the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds fails to withhold income as the notice to withhold income for support directs, the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds shall be liable for both the accumulated amount that should have been withheld from the obligor's income and any other penalties set by state law;

(i) A statement that the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds shall be subject to a fine determined under state law for discharging an obligor from employment, refusing to employ, or taking disciplinary action against an obligor because of a notice to withhold income for support;

(j) A statement that the employer shall notify the family support registry, in writing, if payments are required to be made through the registry promptly after the obligor terminates employment and shall provide the family support registry, in writing, with the obligor's name, date of separation, case identifier which shall be the family support registry account number, last-known home address, and the name and address of the obligor's new employer, if known;

(j.5) A statement that withholding under the notice to withhold income for support has priority over any other legal process under state law against the same income, that federal tax levies in effect before receipt of this notice to withhold income for support have priority, and that the requesting agency should be contacted if there are federal tax levies in effect;

(k) A statement that as long as the obligor is employed by the employer, the income assignment shall not be terminated or modified, except upon written notice by the obligee, the obligee's representative, the delegate child support enforcement unit, or the court;

(k.5) A statement that the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds may be required to report and withhold amounts from lump sum payments such as bonuses, commissions, or severance pay;

(l.5) A statement that Colorado employers, trustees, or other payors of funds must comply with this section;

(m) A statement that, if the designated field on the notice to withhold income for support is checked, the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds is required to provide a copy of the notice to withhold income for support to the obligor;

(n) A statement that a fraudulent submission of a notice to withhold income for support shall subject the person submitting the notice to an employer, trustee, or other payor of funds to a fine of not less than one thousand dollars and court costs and attorney fees.

(4.5) When a Colorado employer receives an income assignment, or its equivalent, issued by another state, the employer shall apply the income assignment law of the obligor's principal state of employment. The obligor's principal state of employment shall be presumed to be Colorado unless there is a specific employment contract to the contrary.

(5) When activated, an income assignment shall be a continuing income assignment and shall remain in effect and shall be binding upon any employer, trustee, or other payor of funds upon whom it is served until further notice from the obligee, the obligee's representative, the delegate child support enforcement unit, or the court.

(6) Priority. (a) A notice of income assignment for support shall have priority over any garnishment, attachment, or lien.

(b) If there is more than one income assignment for support for the same obligor, the total amount withheld, which is subject to the limits specified in section 13-54-104 (3), C.R.S., shall be distributed in accordance with the priorities set forth in this paragraph (b):

(I) (A) First priority shall be given to income assignments for orders for current monthly child support obligations and maintenance when included in the child support order.

(B) If the amount withheld is sufficient to pay the current monthly support and maintenance for all orders, the employer or other payor of funds shall distribute the amount to all orders and proceed to the second priority to distribute any remaining withholding. If the amount withheld is not sufficient to pay the current monthly support and maintenance in all orders, the employer shall add the current monthly support and maintenance in all orders for a total and then divide the amount of current monthly support and maintenance in each order by the total to determine the percent of the total for each order. The percent for each order derived from such calculation shall be multiplied by the total amount withheld to determine what proportionate share of the amount withheld shall be paid for each order.

(II) (A) Second priority shall be given to income assignments for all orders for medical support when there is a specific amount ordered for medical support.

(B) If the amount withheld is sufficient to pay the medical support for all orders, the employer shall distribute the amount to all orders and proceed to the third priority to distribute any remaining withholding. If the amount withheld is not sufficient to pay the medical support in all orders, the employer shall add the medical support in all orders for a total and then divide the amount of medical support in each order by the total to determine the percent of the total for each order. The percent for each order derived from such calculation shall be multiplied by the total amount withheld to determine what proportionate share of the amount withheld shall be paid for each order.

(III) (A) Third priority shall be given to income assignments for child support debt and support arrears, including medical support arrears.

(B) If the amount withheld is sufficient to pay the child support debt and support arrears for all orders, the employer shall distribute the amount to all orders and proceed to the fourth priority to distribute any remaining withholding. If the amount withheld is not sufficient to pay the child support debt and support arrears in all orders, the employer shall add the child support debt and support arrears in all orders for a total and then divide the amount of child support debt and support arrears in each order by the total to determine the percent of the total for each order. The percent for each order derived from such calculation shall be multiplied by the total amount withheld to determine what proportionate share of the amount withheld shall be paid for each order.

(IV) (A) Fourth priority shall be given to income assignments for orders for maintenance only.

(B) If the amount withheld is sufficient to pay the maintenance only for all orders, the employer shall distribute the amount to all orders. If the amount withheld is not sufficient to pay the maintenance only in all orders, the employer shall add the maintenance only in all orders for a total and then divide the amount of maintenance only in each order by the total to determine the percent of the total for each order. The percent for each order derived from such calculation shall be multiplied by the total amount withheld to determine what proportionate share of the amount withheld shall be paid for each order.

(7) No employer, trustee, or other payor of funds who complies with a notice of income assignment issued pursuant to this section and as provided in subsection (8) of this section shall be liable to the obligor for wrongful withholding.

(8) An employer, trustee, or other payor of funds subject to this section who:

(a) Fails to abide by the terms enumerated in the notice of income assignment may be held in contempt of court;

(b) Wrongfully fails to withhold income in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be liable for both the accumulated amount the employer, trustee, or other payor of funds should have withheld from the obligor's income and any other penalties set by state law;

(c) Discharges, refuses to hire, or takes disciplinary action against an employee because of the entry or service of an income assignment pursuant to this section may be held in contempt of court or be subject to a fine.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Legislative Update", see 12 Colo. Law. 1257 (1983). For article, "Domestic Case Update", see 14 Colo. Law. 209 (1985).

Annotator's note. Since § 14-14-111.5 is similar to § 14-14-107 as it existed prior to the 1996 repeal of said section, relevant cases construing that provision have been included in the annotations to this section.

Statutory language is clear that an order for wage assignment is mandatory if the obligor cannot establish one of the two specified defenses. Purpose of new subsection (2) was to effect a mandatory and expedited procedure for wage assignment when default in a child support payment occurred; provision for a limited hearing was included to afford the obligor due process. In re Barnes, 692 P.2d 329 (Colo. App. 1984).

Section clearly applies to maintenance, whether or not combined with child support. In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992).

Defense against wage assignment that the full amount claimed is not due is contemplated by section and therefore success on such defense authorizes an award of attorney fees under section. In re Watters, 782 P.2d 1220 (Colo. App. 1989); In re Sabala, 802 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1990).

Attorney fee award to obligor must be reconsidered by trial court where obligee also prevails in part. In re Sabala, 802 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1990).

There was a hearing on an objection where the amount due was stipulated prior to the hearing because the issues at the hearing are limited to the identity of the obligor and the amount of the obligation, and an award of fees to the prevailing party is intended to discourage exaggerated claims or attempts to delay payment of valid claims. In re Vivens, 885 P.2d 301 (Colo. App. 1994).

Wage assignment is mandatory if the obligor cannot establish one of the specified defenses. In re Barnes, 692 P.2d 329 (Colo. App. 1984); In re Sabala, 802 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1990); In re Connell, 831 P.2d 913 (Colo. App. 1992).

Obligor may be subjected to more than one wage assignment. In re Sabala, 802 P.2d 1163 (Colo. App. 1990).

Denver department of social services entitled to keep proceeds from wage assignment even though assignment by ex-wife would take precedence since ex-wife did not file wage assignment. Department's actions did not deprive ex-wife of right or ability to receive current support since she could file her own assignment. People in Interest of D.C., 797 P.2d 840 (Colo. App. 1990).

Accumulated deductions in a PERA member's contribution account are not subject to assignment for payment of future child support obligations. In re Riggs, 786 P.2d 504 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 797 P.2d 744 (Colo. 1990).

14-14-112. Deductions for health insurance. (1) In all orders which direct the obligor to provide health insurance for any child, the court or delegate child support enforcement unit shall include a provision directing the obligor's employer to enroll such child and the obligor, if enrollment of the obligor is a requirement of the plan, in the health insurance plan and to deduct from the wages due the obligor an amount sufficient to provide for premiums for health insurance when such insurance is offered by the employer, including any employer subject to the provisions of section 607 (1) of the federal "Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974", as amended. For all orders entered prior to August 1, 1992, which direct the obligor to provide health insurance for any child, the obligee or the obligee's representative shall send a copy of the notice of the deduction for health insurance, by first-class mail, to the obligor concurrent with mailing of the notice to the obligor's employer pursuant to subsection (2) of this section. The court or the delegate child support enforcement unit shall direct the obligor to notify the court, or unit if the delegate child support enforcement unit is a party to the court action, in writing, of any change of address or employment within ten days after the change.

(1.5) Effective July 1, 2002, the delegate child support enforcement unit shall follow the procedure set forth in section 26-13-121.5, C.R.S., for the enforcement of orders for health insurance.

(2) Notice of the deduction for health insurance shall be mailed by first-class mail by the obligee or the obligee's representative to the obligor's employer. The notice of the deduction for health insurance shall contain:

(a) The name, address, and social security number of the obligor;
(b) The name, birthdate, and social security number of any of the children to be covered by the health insurance;

(c) A statement that the employer shall enroll an obligor's child in the health insurance plan in which the obligor is enrolled if the child can be covered under that plan or, if the obligor is not enrolled, in the least costly plan otherwise available to the child, regardless of whether the child was born out of wedlock, is claimed as a dependent on the obligor's federal or state income tax return, lives with the obligor, or lives within the insurer's service area, notwithstanding any other provision of law restricting enrollment to persons who reside in an insurer's service area;

(d) A statement that the deduction for health insurance is to take effect no later than the first pay period after fourteen days from the date on which the notice is mailed to the employer or from the date on which the obligor submits an oral or written request to the employer, whichever occurs sooner, and that the deduction for health insurance is treated as a significant life change under open enrollment requirements;

(e) A statement that compliance with the notice to deduct for health insurance shall not subject the employer to liability to the obligor for wrongful withholding;

(f) A statement that noncompliance with the notice to deduct for health insurance may subject the employer to the liability and sanctions specified in subsection (5) of this section;

(g) A statement that the employer shall promptly notify the court, obligee, or delegate child support enforcement unit in writing within fourteen days after the obligor terminates employment and shall provide, if known, the name of the obligor's new employer;

(h) A statement that, as long as the obligor is employed by the employer, the notice to deduct for health insurance shall not be terminated or modified, except as follows:

(I) Upon written notice by the court, obligee, or delegate child support enforcement unit;

(II) Upon written verification, provided by the obligor to the employer, the employer determines that the child has been enrolled in a comparable health insurance plan that takes effect no later than the effective date on which the child is no longer enrolled under the plan offered by the obligor's employer; or

(III) Upon the employer's elimination of family health coverage for all employees;

(i) A statement that the employer may not discharge or refuse to hire or take disciplinary action against an employee because of the entry or service of a notice to deduct for health insurance issued and executed pursuant to this section and that such a violation may result in a finding of contempt of court;

(j) A statement that if the obligor or employer enrolls the dependents who are the subject of the order in health insurance coverage available through the employer, the employer shall send a copy of such enrollment to the location identified on the notice;

(k) A statement that when a child is no longer enrolled under a family health plan for the reasons described in subparagraphs (I) to (III) of paragraph (h) of this subsection (2), the employer within fourteen days after the termination of coverage shall send to the location described on the health insurance premium notice a written notice of cancellation of enrollment or a copy of the verification provided by the obligor to the employer that the child is enrolled in a comparable health plan;

(1) A statement that the obligor may file an objection to the notice of the deduction for health insurance with the court if the premium amount does not meet the definition of reasonable cost as provided in section 14-10-115 (10) (g). A premium amount that results in a child support order of fifty dollars or less or that is twenty percent or more of the obligor's gross income shall not be considered reasonable.

(2.5) If an obligor enrolls a child in a health insurance plan other than one provided through the obligor's employment, the obligee, the obligee's representative, or the delegate child support enforcement unit shall send, by first-class mail, a written notice to such health insurance provider with whom the obligor enrolls the child stating that:

(a) The obligor is under a court order to provide health insurance coverage for a child;

(b) The insurance provider shall notify the obligee, the obligee's representative, or the delegate child support enforcement unit of any cancellation of the coverage.

(3) No employer who complies with a notice to deduct for health insurance benefits pursuant to this section shall be liable to the obligor for wrongful withholding.

(4) No employer shall discharge or refuse to hire or take disciplinary action against an employee because of the entry or service of a notice to deduct for health insurance issued and executed pursuant to this section. Any person who violates this subsection (4) may be deemed by the court to be subject to contempt of court.

(5) An employer who wrongfully fails to deduct for health insurance in accordance with the provisions of this section may be held liable for an amount up to the accumulated amount of such premiums the employer or payor should have withheld from the obligor's wages.

(6) When an employer is served with a notice to deduct for health insurance pursuant to this section, and the obligor is no longer employed by the employer, the employer shall promptly notify the court in writing of the obligor's last-known address, social security number, and the name of the obligor's new employer, if known.

(7) If an employer discharges an employee in violation of the provisions of this section, the employee may, within ninety days, bring a civil action for the recovery of wages lost as a result of the violation and for an order requiring the reinstatement of the employee. Damages recoverable shall be lost wages not to exceed six weeks, costs, and reasonable attorney fees.

(8) A notice to deduct for health insurance issued and served pursuant to this section shall be continuing and shall remain in effect and be binding on any current or successor employer upon whom it is served until further notice by the court, obligee, obligee's representative, or delegate child support enforcement unit.

(9) The court, obligee, obligee's representative, or delegate child support enforcement unit shall promptly notify the employer, in writing, when a notice to deduct for health insurance is modified or terminated. A notice to deduct for health insurance shall be terminated when the court order requiring health insurance is terminated.

(10) Deductions for health insurance shall also be ordered by a delegate child support enforcement unit under the provisions of the "Colorado Administrative Procedure Act for the Establishment and Enforcement of Child Support", created in article 13.5 of title 26, C.R.S.

The purpose of the Uniform Fiduciaries Act is that uniform and definite rules were found necessary to take the place of diverse and conflicting rules that had grown up concerning constructive notice of breach of fiduciary obligations in order that commerce might proceed with as little hindrance as possible. Wysowatcky v. Denver-Willys, Inc., 131 Colo. 266, 281 P.2d 165 (1955); Commercial Sav. Bank v. Baum, 137 Colo. 538, 327 P.2d 743 (1958).

15-1-103. Definitions. As used in this part 1, unless the context otherwise requires:

The existence of a fiduciary relationship between a customer and a stockbroker is a question of fact and is created if the relationship is accompanied by the customer's trust and confidence in the broker. Adams v. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc., 686 P.2d 797 (Colo. App. 1983).

15-1-105. Application of payments to fiduciary. A person who in good faith pays or transfers to a fiduciary any money or other property which the fiduciary as such is authorized to receive is not responsible for the proper application thereof by the fiduciary; and any right or title acquired from the fiduciary in consideration of such payment or transfer is not invalid in consequence of a misapplication by the fiduciary.

15-1-106. Transfer of negotiable instruments by fiduciary. If any negotiable instrument payable or indorsed to a fiduciary as such is indorsed by the fiduciary, or if any negotiable instrument payable or indorsed to his principal is indorsed by a fiduciary empowered to indorse such instrument on behalf of his principal, the indorsee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in indorsing or delivering the instrument and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. If, however, such instrument is transferred by the fiduciary in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to the actual knowledge of the creditor or is transferred in any transaction known by the transferee to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, the creditor or other transferee is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in transferring the instrument.

15-1-107. Check drawn by fiduciary payable to third person, effect. If a check or other bill of exchange is drawn by a fiduciary as such or in the name of his principal by a fiduciary empowered to draw such instrument in the name of his principal, the payee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligations as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the instrument and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. If, however, such instrument is payable to a personal creditor of the fiduciary and delivered to the creditor in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to the actual knowledge of the creditor or is drawn and delivered in any transaction known by the payee to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, the creditor or other payee is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the instrument.

ANNOTATION

The Uniform Fiduciaries Act relaxes some of the harsher rules which require of a bank and of individuals the highest degree of vigilance in the detection of a fiduciary's wrongdoing. Wysowatcky v. Denver-Willys, Inc., 131 Colo. 266, 281 P.2d 165 (1955).

Where an instrument is good on its face, there is no apparent reason for inquiry; it remains good until shown to have been taken in "bad faith" and the burden of proving that is on the plaintiff. Wysowatcky v. Denver-Willys, Inc., 131 Colo. 266, 281 P.2d 165 (1955).

The loss for breach of a fiduciary obligation should fall on the party directly responsible for the faithless agent and not on one who was a mere conduit to transmit the fund. Wysowatcky v. Denver-Willys, Inc., 131 Colo. 266, 281 P.2d 165 (1955); Commercial Sav. Bank v. Baum, 137 Colo. 538, 327 P.2d 743 (1958).

15-1-108. Check drawn by and payable to fiduciary, effect. If a check or other bill of exchange is drawn by a fiduciary as such or in the name of his principal by a fiduciary empowered to draw such instrument in the name of his principal, payable to the fiduciary personally or payable to a third person and by him transferred to the fiduciary, and is thereafter transferred by the fiduciary, whether in payment of a personal debt of the fiduciary or otherwise, the transferee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in transferring the instrument and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith.

Source: L. 23: p. 175, § 6. CSA: C. 67, § 6. CRS 53: § 57-1-6. C.R.S. 1963: § 57-1-5.

15-1-109. Deposit in name of fiduciary. If a deposit is made in a bank to the credit of a fiduciary as such, the bank is authorized to pay the amount of the deposit or any part thereof upon the check of the fiduciary, signed with the name in which such deposit is entered, without being liable to the principal, unless the bank pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing the check or with knowledge of such facts that its action in paying the check amounts to bad faith. If, however, such a check is payable to the drawee bank and is delivered to it in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to it, the bank is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the check.

ANNOTATION

The mere failure of a bank to make inquiry, even though there are suspicious circumstances, does not constitute bad faith unless the facts and circumstances are so cogent and obvious that to remain passive would amount to deliberate desire to evade knowledge because of a belief or fear that inquiry would disclose a defect in the transaction. Richards v. Platte Valley Bank, 866 F.2d 1576 (10th Cir. 1989); In re M & L Business Machine Co., 84 F.3d 1330 (10th Cir. 1996).

In order for bank to be liable to real estate purchaser for bank's paying money to escrow agent who then converted money to his own use, bank was required to either have had actual knowledge that escrow agent was committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary when he took the money or have acted in bad faith in paying escrow agent. Richards v. Platte Valley Bank, 866 F.2d 1576 (10th Cir. 1989).

Applied in Kaneco Oil & Gas v. Univ. Nat. Bank, 732 P.2d 247 (Colo. App. 1986).

15-1-110. Check drawn upon account of principal by fiduciary. If a check is drawn upon the account of his principal in a bank by a fiduciary who is empowered to draw checks upon his principal's account, the bank is authorized to pay such check without being liable to the principal, unless the bank pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing such check or with knowledge of such facts that its action in paying the check amounts to bad faith. If, however, such a check is payable to the drawee bank and is delivered to it in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to it, the bank is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the check.

Source: L. 23: p. 176, § 8. CSA: C. 67, § 8. CRS 53: § 57-1-8. C.R.S. 1963: § 57-1-7.

15-1-111. Deposits in personal account of fiduciary. If a fiduciary makes a deposit in a bank to his personal credit of checks drawn by him upon an account in his own name as fiduciary, or of checks payable to him as fiduciary, or of checks drawn by him upon an account in the name of his principal if he is empowered to draw checks on that account, or of checks payable to his principal and indorsed by him, if he is empowered to indorse such checks or if he otherwise makes a deposit of funds held by him as fiduciary, the bank receiving such deposit is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary by that action; and the bank is authorized to pay the amount of the deposit or any part thereof upon the personal check of the fiduciary without being liable to the principal, unless the bank receives the deposit or pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making such deposit or in drawing such check or with knowledge of such facts that its action in receiving the deposit or paying the check amounts to bad faith.

ANNOTATION

Section inapplicable where funds not held as fiduciary. This section does not apply where a person depositing the funds to his personal account did not hold such funds as a fiduciary and was not empowered to endorse the checks. Arvada Hardwood Floor Co. v. James, 638 P.2d 828 (Colo. App. 1981).

In order for bank to be liable to real estate purchaser for bank's paying money to escrow agent who then converted money to his own use, bank was required to either have had actual knowledge that escrow agent was committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary when he took the money or have acted in bad faith in paying escrow agent. Richards v. Platte Valley Bank, 866 F.2d 1576 (10th Cir. 1989).

15-1-112. Deposits in name of two or more trustees. When a deposit is made in a bank in the name of two or more persons as trustees and a check is drawn upon the trust account by any trustee authorized by the other trustee to draw checks upon the trust account, neither the payee nor other holder nor the bank is bound to inquire whether it is a breach of trust to authorize such trustee to draw checks upon the trust account and is not liable unless the circumstances be such that the action of the payee or other holder or the bank amounts to bad faith.

15-1-112.5. Liability of a fiduciary for acts of predecessor fiduciary. In the absence of actual knowledge or information which would cause a reasonable fiduciary to inquire further, a fiduciary shall be under no duty to examine the accounts and records of or inquire into the acts or omissions of a predecessor fiduciary and shall not be liable for failure to seek redress for any act or omission of any predecessor fiduciary.

It is only under special circumstances that the court scrutinizes these decisions. Herald Co. v. Bonfils, 315 F. Supp. 497 (D. Colo. 1970).

The standard of care imposed by this section applies to all fiduciaries except custodians. Buder v. Sartore, 774 P.2d 1383 (Colo. 1989).

Ex-husband had fiduciary duty to ex-wife since he retained complete control over her share of stock. Despite having the power to sell the stock within his sole discretion, the husband still was required to operate within the bounds of prudent judgment, reasonableness, and equity. Marshall v. Grauberger, 796 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1990).

As a matter of law, the husband owed the wife a fiduciary duty to deal with her interest with the utmost good faith. Marshall v. Grauberger, 796 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1990).

The "reasonable prudence" standard applies to protecting and caring for the property and does not permit one to prudently speculate. The trustee may not subject his trust property to hazards which a man dealing with his own property might consider warranted if to do so would create danger to the trust estate. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967).

A trustee owes a duty to his beneficiaries to exercise such care and skill as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in safeguarding and preserving his own property. This rule obtained at common law and has been codified in Colorado. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967).

The trustee should do his best to secure competitive bidding and to surround the sale with such other factors as will tend to cause the property to sell to the greatest advantage. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967); Murphy v. Cent. Bank & Trust Co., 699 P.2d 13 (Colo. App. 1985).

The trustee's duty of loyalty and of reasonable care dictate that he must seek to obtain the best price obtainable for the property which he is selling. The rule is that a trustee has a duty to determine the fair value of trust property before selling it, and any sale of it for an inadequate consideration measured against its fair value may be subject to being set aside as a constructive fraud upon proper complaint being made. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967); Murphy v. Cent. Bank & Trust Co., 699 P.2d 13 (Colo. App. 1985).

A trustee's duty of loyalty and of reasonable care dictates that he must seek to obtain the best price for trust property he is selling. If a trust has been damaged but there is uncertainty as to the extent of the damage, damages are to be closely approximated by drawing reasonable and probable inferences from the facts proven. Marshall v. Grauberger, 796 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1990).

Trustee owes a fiduciary duty to the beneficiaries of the trust and he may not allow personal motives to interfere with the discharge of those duties. Wright v. Wright, 182 Colo. 425, 514 P.2d 73 (1973); Vento v. Colo. Nat'l Bank-Pueblo, 907 P.2d 642 (Colo. App. 1995).

Court may not review with advantages of hindsight. When reviewing investments made by a trustee, a court may not use the advantages of hindsight. Heller v. First Nat'l Bank, 657 P.2d 992 (Colo. App. 1982).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The Meaning of the Prudent Man Rule", see 24 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 44 (1951). For comment on Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, appearing below, see 45 Den. L.J. 483 (1968).

Despite will's provisions, trustee does not have absolute discretion. In the will the trustee is authorized to sell the trust property (1) in its sole judgment; (2) at private sale; (3) without advertisement or notice to anyone; (4) without the aid or necessity of any court order; (5) without consulting the beneficiaries and without regard to their opinions, desires, or judgment; (6) and at such price and upon such terms as to credit or otherwise as the trustee shall determine. The trustee is not therefore authorized to exercise unlimited or absolute discretion in making a sale of trust property. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967).

In any event trustee cannot act recklessly. Even if the instrument had contained language granting absolute and uncontrolled discretion, it would not follow that the trustee could act recklessly or in willful abuse of discretion. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967).

When the bank acts despite a high probability that the beneficiaries would suffer loss, such conduct is in law reckless and is not protected by an exculpatory clause. Rippey v. Den- ver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967).

Exculpatory clause does not apply to transaction conducted in unorthodox manner. An exculpatory clause in the will which provides that the trustee shall be free from liability for "depreciation or loss" of trust property "through error of judgment" does not apply to a loss which resulted from a sale which was not conducted in accordance with orthodox trust principles. Such a provision is usually held to add nothing. It does not limit the trustee liability for even negligence. If the exculpatory provision in express terms relieves the trustee from liability merely for errors of judgment, its effect does not go beyond what a court of equity would do in the absence of an exculpatory provision for a trustee is never held to the liability of an insurer. Rippey v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 273 F. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1967).

15-1-306. Court not restricted. Nothing in this part 3 shall be construed as restricting the power of a court of proper jurisdiction to permit a fiduciary to deviate from the terms of any will, agreement, or other instrument relating to the acquisition, investment, reinvestment, exchange, retention, sale, or management of estate or trust property.

ANNOTATION

A court may not order trustee to deviate from terms of trust unless, because of a change of circumstances, compliance with its terms would defeat or substantially impair the accomplishment of its underlying purposes. Matter of Will of Killin, 703 P.2d 1323 (Colo. App. 1985).

Deviation from the expressed intent of a testator that trust property be retained during trust administration is not warranted solely because of potential increased income to the income beneficiaries. Matter of Will of Killin, 703 P.2d 1323 (Colo. App. 1985).

15-1-307. Powers of investment in persons other than fiduciary. Whenever an instrument under which a fiduciary is acting reserves to the settlor or vests in an advisory or investment committee, or in any other person or persons including one or more other fiduciaries, to the exclusion of the fiduciary or to the exclusion of one or more of several fiduciaries, authority to direct the making or retention of any investment, the excluded fiduciary or fiduciaries shall not be liable, either individually or as a fiduciary, for any loss resulting from the making or retention of any investment pursuant to such direction.

15-1-308. Investments in United States government obligations. In the absence of an express provision to the contrary, any fiduciary is authorized, whenever a governing instrument or order requires or permits investment in United States government obligations which are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States government, to invest in such obligations, either directly or in the form of the securities of or other interests in any open-end or closed-end management type investment company or investment trust registered under the federal "Investment Company Act of 1940", 15 U.S.C. section 80(a)-1 et seq., if the portfolio of such investment company or investment trust is limited to United States government obligations which are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States government and to repurchase agreements fully collateralized by such obligations and if any such investment company or investment trust actually takes delivery of such collateral, either directly or through an authorized custodian.

DEFINITIONS AND FIDUCIARY DUTIES

In C.R.S., all six articles are combined into this part 4. References in the OFFICIAL COMMENTS to specific sections have been changed to reflect the appropriate C.R.S. citation. References in the OFFICIAL COMMENTS to the 1931 Uniform Act and the 1962 Uniform Act refer to the 1931 Uniform Principal and Income Act and to the 1962 Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act, respectively. References in the OFFICIAL COMMENTS to this act refer to the Uniform Principal and Income Act (1997) contained in this part 4.

(2) This part 4 was numbered as article 4 of chapter 57, C.R.S. 1963. The substantive provisions of this part 4 were repealed and reenacted in 2000, resulting in the addition, relocation, and elimination of sections as well as subject matter. ## PART 4

UNIFORM PRINCIPAL AND INCOME ACT (1997)

PREFATORY NOTE

This revision of the 1931 Uniform Principal and Income Act and the 1962 Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act has two purposes.

One purpose is to revise the 1931 and the 1962 Uniform Acts. Revision is needed to support the now widespread use of the revocable living trust as a will substitute, to change the rules in those Acts that experience has shown need to be changed, and to establish new rules to cover situations not provided for in the old Acts, including rules that apply to financial instruments invented since 1962.

The other purpose is to provide a means for implementing the transition to an investment regime based on principles embodied in the Uniform Prudent Investor Act, especially the principle of investing for total return rather than a certain level of "income" as traditionally perceived in terms of interest, dividends, and rents.

Revision of the 1931 and 1962 Uniform Acts

The prior Acts and this revision of those Acts deal with four questions affecting the rights of beneficiaries:

(1) How is income earned during the probate of an estate to be distributed to trusts and to persons who receive outright bequests of specific property, pecuniary gifts, and the residue?

(2) When an income interest in a trust begins (i.e., when a person who creates the trust dies or when she transfers property to a trust during life), what property is principal that will eventually go to the remainder beneficiaries and what is income?

(3) When an income interest ends, who gets the income that has been received but not distributed, or that is due but not yet collected, or that has accrued but is not yet due?

(4) After an income interest begins and before it ends, how should its receipts and disbursements be allocated to or between principal and income?

Changes in the traditional sections are of three types: new rules that deal with situations not covered by the prior Acts, clarification of provisions in the 1962 Uniform Act, and changes to rules in the prior Acts.

New rules. Issues addressed by some of the more significant new rules include:

(1) The application of the probate administration rules to revocable living trusts after the settlor's death and to other terminating trusts. Sections 15-1-406 through 15-1-410.

(2) The payment of interest or some other amount on the delayed payment of an outright pecuniary gift that is made pursuant to a trust agreement instead of a will when the agreement or state law does not provide for such a payment. Section 15-1-406 (1)(c).

(3) The allocation of net income from partnership interests acquired by the trustee other than from a decedent (the old Acts deal only with partnership interests acquired from a decedent). Section 15-1-411.

(4) An "unincorporated entity" concept has been introduced to deal with businesses operated by a trustee, including farming and livestock operations, and investment activities in rental real estate, natural resources, timber, and derivatives. Section 15-1-413.

(5) The allocation of receipts from discount obligations such as zero-coupon bonds. Section 15-1-416 (2).

(6) The allocation of net income from harvesting and selling timber between principal and income. Section 15-1-422.

(7) The allocation between principal and income of receipts from derivatives, options, and asset-backed securities. Sections 15-1-424 and 15-1-425.

(8) Disbursements made because of environmental laws. Section 15-1-427 (1)(g).

(9) Income tax obligations resulting from the ownership of S corporation stock and interests in partnerships. Section 15-1-430.

(10) The power to make adjustments between principal and income to correct inequities caused by tax elections or peculiarities in the way the fiduciary income tax rules apply. Section 15-1-431.

Clarifications and changes in existing rules. A number of matters provided for in the prior Acts have been changed or clarified in this revision, including the following:

(1) An income beneficiary's estate will be entitled to receive only net income actually received by a trust before the beneficiary's death and not items of accrued income. Section 15-1-410.

(2) Income from a partnership is based on actual distributions from the partnership, in the same manner as corporate distributions. Section 15-1-411.

(3) Distributions from corporations and partnerships that exceed 20% of the entity's gross assets will be principal whether or not intended by the entity to be a partial liquidation. Section 15-1-411 (4)(b).

(4) Deferred compensation is dealt with in greater detail in a separate section. Section 15-1-419.

(5) The 1962 Uniform Act rule for "property subject to depletion," (patents, copyrights, royalties, and the like), which provides that a trustee may allocate up to 5% of the asset's inventory value to income and the balance to principal, has been replaced by a rule that allocates 90% of the amounts received to principal and the balance to income. Section 15-1-420.

(6) The percentage used to allocate amounts received from oil and gas has been changed 90% of those receipts are allocated to principal and the balance to income. Section 15-1-421.

(7) The unproductive property rule has been eliminated for trusts other than marital deduction trusts. Section 15-1-423.

(8) Charging depreciation against income is no longer mandatory, and is left to the discretion of the trustee. Section 15-1-428.

Coordination with the Uniform Prudent Investor Act

The law of trust investment has been modernized. See Uniform Prudent Investor Act (1994); Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule (1992) (hereinafter Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule). Now it is time to update the principal and income allocation rules so the two bodies of doctrine can work well together. This revision deals conservatively with the tension between modern investment theory and traditional income allocation. The starting point is to use the traditional system. If prudent investing of all the assets in a trust viewed as a portfolio and traditional allocation effectuate the intent of the settlor, then nothing need be done. The Act, however, helps the trustee who has made a prudent, modern portfolio-based investment decision that has the initial effect of skewing return from all the assets under management, viewed as a portfolio, as between income and principal beneficiaries. The Act gives that trustee a power to reallocate the portfolio return suitably. To leave a trustee constrained by the traditional system would inhibit the trustee's ability to fully implement modern portfolio theory.

As to modern investing see, e.g., the Preface to, terms of, and Comments to the Uniform Prudent Investor Act (1994); the discussion and reporter's note by Edward C. Halbach, Jr. in Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule; John H. Langbein, The Uniform Prudent Investor Act and the Future of Trust Investing, 81 Iowa L. 15-1-402. Definitions. As used in this part 4, unless the context otherwise requires:

(1) “Accounting period” means a calendar year unless another twelve-month period is selected by a fiduciary. The term includes a portion of a calendar year or other twelve-month period that begins when an income interest begins or ends when an income interest ends.

(2) “Beneficiary” includes, in the case of a decedent's estate, an heir and devisee and, in the case of a trust, an income beneficiary and a remainder beneficiary.

(3) “Fiduciary” means a personal representative or a trustee. The term includes an executor, administrator, successor personal representative, special administrator, and a person performing substantially the same function.

(4) “Income” means money or property that a fiduciary receives as current return from a principal asset. The term includes a portion of receipts from a sale, exchange, or liquidation of a principal asset, to the extent provided in subpart 4 of this part 4.

(5) “Income beneficiary” means a person to whom net income of a trust is or may be payable.

(6) “Income interest” means the right of an income beneficiary to receive all or part of net income, whether the terms of the trust require it to be distributed or authorize it to be distributed in the trustee's discretion.

(7) “Mandatory income interest” means the right of an income beneficiary to receive net income that the terms of the trust require the fiduciary to distribute.

(8) “Net income” means the total receipts allocated to income during an accounting period minus the disbursements made from income during the period, plus or minus transfers under this part 4 to or from income during the period.

(9) “Person” means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, government; governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality; public corporation, or any other legal or commercial entity.

(10) “Principal” means property held in trust for distribution to a remainder beneficiary when the trust terminates.

(b) Would be a distributee or permissible distributee of trust income or principal if the interest of the distributees described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (10.5) terminated on that date; or

(c) Would be a distributee or permissible distributee of trust income or principal if the trust terminated on said date.

(11) “Remainder beneficiary” means a person entitled to receive principal when an income interest ends.

(12) “Terms of a trust” means the manifestation of the intent of a settlor or decedent with respect to the trust, expressed in a manner that admits of its proof in a judicial proceeding, whether by written or spoken words or by conduct.

(12.5) “Total return trust” means a trust that is converted to a total return trust pursuant to section 15-1-404.5 or a trust the terms of which manifest the settlor’s intent that the trustee will administer the trust in accordance with section 15-1-404.5 (4) and (4.5).

(13) “Trustee” includes an original, additional, or successor trustee, whether or not appointed or confirmed by a court.

Editor’s note: This section is similar to former § 15-1-403 as it existed prior to 2001.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

“Income beneficiary.” The definitions of income beneficiary (Section 15-1-402 (5)) and income interest (Section 15-1-402 (6)) cover both mandatory and discretionary beneficiaries and interests. There are no definitions for “discretionary income beneficiary” or “discretionary income interest” because those terms are not used in the Act.

Inventory value. There is no definition for inventory value in this Act because the provisions in which that term was used in the 1962 Uniform Act have either been eliminated (in the case of the underproductive property provision) or changed in a way that eliminates the need for the term (in the case of bonds and other money obligations, property subject to depletion, and the method for determining entitlement to income distributed from a probate estate).

“Net income.” The reference to “transfers under this part 4 to or from income” means transfers made under Sections 15-4-404 (1), 15-1-422 (2), 15-1-427 (2), 15-1-428 (2), 15-1-429 (1), and 15-1-431.

“Terms of a trust.” This term was chosen in preference to “terms of the trust instrument” (the phrase used in the 1962 Uniform Act) to make it clear that the Act applies to oral trusts as well as those whose terms are expressed in written documents. The definition is based on the Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 4 (1959) and the Restatement (Third) of Trusts § 4 (Tent. Draft No. 1, 1996). Constructional preferences or rules would also apply, if necessary, to determine the terms of the trust.

ANNOTATION

Army retirement pension is not a “return derived from principal” as is ordinary unearned income. In re Ellis, 36 Colo. App. 234, 538 P.2d 1347 (1975), aff’d, 191 Colo. 317, 552 P.2d 506 (1976) (decided prior to 2000 repeal and reenactment).

15-1-403. Fiduciary duties - general principles. (1) In allocating receipts and disbursements to or between principal and income, and with respect to any matter within the scope of subparts 2 and 3 of this part 4, a fiduciary:

(a) Shall administer a trust or estate in accordance with the terms of the trust or the will, even if there is a different provision in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4;

(b) May administer a trust or estate by the exercise of a discretionary power of administration given to the fiduciary by the terms of the trust or the will, even if the exercise of the power produces a result different from a result required or permitted by subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4;

(c) Shall administer a trust or estate in accordance with subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 if the terms of the trust or the will do not contain a different provision or do not give the fiduciary a discretionary power of administration; and

(d) Shall add a receipt or charge a disbursement to principal to the extent that the terms of the trust and subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 do not provide a rule for allocating the receipt or disbursement to or between principal and income.

(2) In exercising the power to adjust under section 15-1-404 (1) or a discretionary power of administration regarding a matter within the scope of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4, whether granted by the terms of a trust, a will, or subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4, a fiduciary shall administer a trust or estate impartially, based on what is fair and reasonable to all of the beneficiaries, except to the extent that the terms of the trust or the will clearly manifest an intention that the fiduciary shall or may favor one or more of the beneficiaries. A determination in accordance with subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 is presumed to be fair and reasonable to all of the beneficiaries.

(3) The terms and conditions of a trust or a will shall govern all actions taken by a fiduciary with respect to any matter within the scope of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4. The provisions of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 are default provisions and may be expanded, restricted, eliminated, or otherwise altered by the provisions of a trust or a will. The provisions of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 shall govern the administration of a trust or will by a fiduciary only if such trust or will contains no conflicting provision.

(4) Nothing in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 shall be construed to limit or restrict a maker of a trust or will from making provisions in such trust or will that are different from the provisions in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Act. The rule in Section 2(a) of the 1962 Uniform Act is restated in Section 15-1-403 (1), without changing its substance, to emphasize that the Act contains only default rules and that provisions in the terms of the trust are paramount. However, Section 2(a) of the 1962 Uniform Act applies only to the allocation of receipts and disbursements to or between principal and income. In this Act, the first sentence of Section 15-1-403 (1) states that it also applies to matters within the scope of sections 15-1-406 to 15-1-410. Section 15-1-403 (1)(b) incorporates the rule in Section 2(b) of the 1962 Uniform Act that a discretionary allocation made by the trustee that is contrary to a rule in the Act should not give rise to an inference of imprudence or partiality by the trustee.

The Act deletes the language that appears at the end of 1962 Uniform Act Section 2(a)(3) — “and in view of the manner in which men of ordinary prudence, discretion and judgment would act in the management of their affairs” — because persons of ordinary prudence, discretion and judgment, acting in the management of their own affairs do not normally think in terms of the interests of successive beneficiaries. If there is an analogy to an individual’s decision-making process, it is probably the individual’s decision to spend or to save, but this is not a useful guideline for trust administration. No case has been found in which a court has relied on the “prudent man” rule of the 1962 Uniform Act.

Fiduciary discretion. The general rule is that if a discretionary power is conferred upon a trustee, the exercise of that power is not subject to control by a court except to prevent an abuse of discretion. Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 187. The situations in which a court will control the exercise of a trustee’s discretion are discussed in the comments to § 187. See also id. § 233 Comment p.

Questions for which there is no provision. Section 15-1-403 (1)(d) allocates receipts and disbursements to principal when there is no provision for a different allocation in the terms of the trust, the will, or the Act. This may occur because money is received from a financial instrument not available at the present time (inflation-indexed bonds might have fallen into this category had they been announced after this Act was approved by the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws) or because a transaction is of a type or occurs in a manner not anticipated by the Drafting Committee for this Act or the drafter of the trust instrument.

Allocating to principal a disbursement for which there is no provision in the Act or the terms of the trust preserves the income beneficiary's level of income in the year it is allocated to principal, but thereafter will reduce the amount of income produced by the principal. Allocating to principal a receipt for which there is no provision will increase the income received by the income beneficiary in subsequent years, and will eventually, upon termination of the trust, also favor the remainder beneficiary. Allocating these items to principal implements the rule that requires a trustee to administer the trust impartially, based on what is fair and reasonable to both income and remainder beneficiaries. However, if the trustee decides that an adjustment between principal and income is needed to enable the trustee to comply with Section 15-1-403 (2), after considering the return from the portfolio as a whole, the trustee may make an appropriate adjustment under Section 15-1-404 (1).

Duty of impartiality. Whenever there are two or more beneficiaries, a trustee is under a duty to deal impartially with them. Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 183 (1992). This rule applies whether the beneficiaries' interests in the trust are concurrent or successive. If the terms of the trust give the trustee discretion to favor one beneficiary over another, a court will not control the exercise of such discretion except to prevent the trustee from abusing it. Id. § 183, Comment a. "The precise meaning of the trustee's duty of impartiality and the balancing of competing interests and objectives inevitably are matters of judgment and interpretation. Thus, the duty and balancing are affected by the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust, not only at the outset but as they may change from time to time." Id. § 232, Comment c.

The terms of a trust may provide that the trustee, or an accountant engaged by the trustee, or a committee of persons who may be family members or business associates, shall have the power to determine what is income and what is principal. If the terms of a trust provide that this Act specifically or principal and income legislation in general does not apply to the trust but fail to provide a rule to deal with a matter provided for in this Act, the trustee has an implied grant of discretion to decide the question. Section 15-1-403 (2) provides that the rule of impartiality applies in the exercise of such a discretionary power to the extent that the terms of the trust do not provide that one or more of the beneficiaries are to be favored. The fact that a person is named an income beneficiary or a remainder beneficiary is not by itself an indication of partiality for that beneficiary.

15-1-404. Trustee's power to adjust. (1) A trustee may adjust between principal and income to the extent the trustee considers necessary if the trustee invests and manages trust assets as a prudent investor, the terms of the trust describe the amount that may or must be distributed to a beneficiary by referring to the trust's income, and the trustee determines, after applying the rules in section 15-1-403 (1), that the trustee is unable to comply with section 15-1-403 (2).

(2) In deciding whether and to what extent to exercise the power conferred by subsection (1) of this section, a trustee shall consider all factors relevant to the trust and its beneficiaries, including the following factors to the extent they are relevant:

- (a) The nature, purpose, and expected duration of the trust;
- (b) The intent of the settlor;
- (c) The identity and circumstances of the beneficiaries;
- (d) The needs for liquidity, regularity of income, and preservation and appreciation of capital;
- (e) The assets held in the trust; the extent to which they consist of financial assets, interests in closely held enterprises, tangible and intangible personal property, or real property; the extent to which an asset is used by a beneficiary; and whether an asset was purchased by the trustee or received from the settlor;
- (f) The net amount allocated to income under the other sections of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 and the increase or decrease in the value of the principal assets, which the trustee may estimate as to assets for which market values are not readily available;
- (g) Whether and to what extent the terms of the trust give the trustee the power to invade principal or accumulate income or prohibit the trustee from invading principal or accumulating income, and the extent to which the trustee has exercised a power from time to time to invade principal or accumulate income;
- (h) The actual and anticipated effect of economic conditions on principal and income and effects of inflation and deflation; and

- (i) The anticipated tax consequences of an adjustment.
- (3) A trustee may not make an adjustment:
  - (a) That diminishes the income interest in a trust that requires all of the income to be paid at least annually to a spouse and for which an estate tax or gift tax marital deduction would be allowed, in whole or in part, if the trustee did not have the power to make the adjustment;
  - (b) That reduces the actuarial value of the income interest in a trust to which a person transfers property with the intent to qualify for a gift tax exclusion;
  - (c) That changes the amount payable to a beneficiary as a fixed annuity or a fixed fraction of the value of the trust assets;
  - (d) From any amount that is permanently set aside for charitable purposes under a will or the terms of a trust unless both income and principal are so set aside;
  - (e) If possessing or exercising the power to make an adjustment causes an individual to be treated as the owner of all or part of the trust for income tax purposes, and the individual would not be treated as the owner if the trustee did not possess the power to make an adjustment;
  - (f) If possessing or exercising the power to make an adjustment causes all or part of the trust assets to be included for estate tax purposes in the estate of an individual who has the power to remove a trustee or appoint a trustee, or both, and the assets would not be included in the estate of the individual if the trustee did not possess the power to make an adjustment;
  - (g) If the trustee is a beneficiary of the trust;
  - (h) If the trustee is not a beneficiary, but the adjustment would benefit the trustee directly or indirectly; or
  - (i) If the trust is a unitrust.
- (4) If the provisions of paragraph (e), (f), (g), or (h) of subsection (3) of this section apply to a trustee and there is more than one trustee, a cotrustee to whom the provision does not apply may make the adjustment unless the exercise of the power by the remaining trustee or trustees is not permitted by the terms of the trust.
- (5) A trustee may release the entire power conferred by subsection (1) of this section or may release only the power to adjust from income to principal or the power to adjust from principal to income if the trustee is uncertain about whether possessing or exercising the power will cause a result described in paragraph (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), or (h) of subsection (3) of this section, or if the trustee determines that possessing or exercising the power will or may deprive the trust of a tax benefit or impose a tax burden not described in subsection (3) of this section. The release may be permanent or for a specified period, including a period measured by the life of an individual.
- (6) Terms of a trust that limit the power of a trustee to make an adjustment between principal and income do not affect the application of this section unless it is clear from the terms of the trust that the terms are intended to deny the trustee the power of adjustment conferred by subsection (1) of this section.
- (7) Nothing in this section or in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 is intended to create or imply a duty to make an adjustment, and a trustee is not liable for not considering whether to make an adjustment or for choosing not to make an adjustment. In a proceeding with respect to a trustee's exercise or nonexercise of the power to make an adjustment under this section, the sole remedy is to direct, deny, or revise an adjustment between principal and income.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Purpose and Scope of Provision. The purpose of Section 15-1-404 is to enable a trustee to select investments using the standards of a prudent investor without having to realize a particular portion of the portfolio's total return in the form of traditional trust accounting income such as interest, dividends, and rents. Section 15-1-404 (1) authorizes a trustee to make adjustments between principal and income if three conditions are met: (1) the trustee must be managing the trust assets under the prudent investor rule; (2) the terms of the trust must express the income beneficiary's distribution rights in terms of the right to receive "income" in the sense of traditional trust accounting income; and (3) the trustee must determine, after applying the rules in Section 15-1-403 (1), that he is unable to comply with Section 15-1-403 (2). In deciding whether and to what extent to exercise the power to adjust, the trustee is required to consider the factors described in Section 15-1-404 (2), but the trustee may not make an adjustment in circumstances described in Section 15-4-404 (3).

Section 15-1-404 does not empower a trustee to increase or decrease the degree of beneficial enjoyment to which a beneficiary is entitled under the terms of the trust; rather, it authorizes the trustee to make adjustments between principal and income that may be necessary if the income component of a portfolio's total return is too small or too large because of investment decisions made by the trustee under the prudent investor rule. The paramount consideration in applying Section 15-1-404 (1) is the requirement in Section 15-1-403 (2) that "a fiduciary must administer a trust or estate impartially, based on what is fair and reasonable to all of the beneficiaries, except to the extent that the terms of the trust or the will clearly manifest an intention that the fiduciary shall or may favor one or more of the beneficiaries." The power to adjust is subject to control by the court to prevent an abuse of discretion. Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 187 (1959). See also id. §§ 183, 232, 233, Comment p (1959).

Section 15-1-404 will be important for trusts that are irrevocable when a State adopts the prudent investor rule by statute or judicial approval of the rule in Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule. Wills and trust instruments executed after the rule is adopted can be drafted to describe a beneficiary's distribution rights in terms that do not depend upon the amount of trust accounting income, but to the extent that drafters of trust documents continue to describe an income beneficiary's distribution rights by referring to trust accounting income, Section 15-1-404 will be an important tool in trust administration.

Three conditions to the exercise of the power to adjust. The first of the three conditions that must be met before a trustee can exercise the power to adjust — that the trustee invest and manage trust assets as a prudent investor — is expressed in this Act by language derived from the Uniform Prudent Investor Act, but the condition will be met whether the prudent investor rule applies because the Uniform

Act or other prudent investor legislation has been enacted, the prudent investor rule has been approved by the courts, or the terms of the trust require it. Even if a State's legislature or courts have not formally adopted the rule, the Restatement establishes the prudent investor rule as an authoritative interpretation of the common law prudent man rule, referring to the prudent investor rule as a "modest reformulation of the Harvard College dictum and the basic rule of prior Restatements." Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule, Introduction, at 5. As a result, there is a basis for concluding that the first condition is satisfied in virtually all States except those in which a trustee is permitted to invest only in assets set forth in a statutory "legal list."

The second condition will be met when the terms of the trust require all of the "income" to be distributed at regular intervals; or when the terms of the trust require a trustee to distribute all of the income, but permit the trustee to decide how much to distribute to each member of a class of beneficiaries; or when the terms of a trust provide that the beneficiary shall receive the greater of the trust accounting income and a fixed dollar amount (an annuity), or of trust accounting income and a fractional share of the value of the trust assets (a unitrust amount). If the trust authorizes the trustee in its discretion to distribute the trust's income to the beneficiary or to accumulate some or all of the income, the condition will be met because the terms of the trust do not permit the trustee to distribute more than the trust accounting income.

To meet the third condition, the trustee must first meet the requirements of Section 15-1-403 (1), i.e., she must apply the terms of the trust, decide whether to exercise the discretionary powers given to the trustee under the terms of the trust, and must apply the provisions of the Act if the terms of the trust do not contain a different provision or give the trustee discretion. Second, the trustee must determine the extent to which the terms of the trust clearly manifest an intention by the settlor that the trustee may or must favor one or more of the beneficiaries. To the extent that the terms of the trust do not require partiality, the trustee must conclude that she is unable to comply with the duty to administer the trust impartially. To the extent that the terms of the trust do require or permit the trustee to favor the income beneficiary or the remainder beneficiary, the trustee must conclude that she is unable to achieve the degree of partiality required or permitted. If the trustee comes to either conclusion — that she is unable to administer the trust impartially or that she is unable to achieve the degree of partiality required or permitted — she may exercise the power to adjust under Section 15-1-404 (1).

Impartiality and productivity of income. The duty of impartiality between income and remainder beneficiaries is linked to the trustee's duty to make the portfolio productive of trust accounting income whenever the distribution requirements are expressed in terms of distributing the trust's "income." The 1962 Uniform Act implies that the duty to produce income applies on an asset by asset basis because the right of an income beneficiary to receive "delayed income" from the sale proceeds of underproductive property under Section 12 of that Act arises if "any part of principal ... has not produced an average net income of a least 1% per year of its inventory value for more than a year ... ." Under the prudent investor rule, "[t]o whatever extent a requirement of income productivity exists, ... the requirement applies not investment by investment but to the portfolio as a whole." Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, Comment i, at 34. The power to adjust under Section 15-1-404 (1) is also to be exercised by considering net income from the portfolio as a whole and not investment by investment. Section 15-1-423 (2) of this Act eliminates the underproductive property rule in all cases other than trusts for which a marital deduction is allowed; the rule applies to a marital deduction trust if the trust's assets "consist substantially of property that does not provide the spouse with sufficient income from or use of the trust assets ..." — in other words, the section applies by reference to the portfolio as a whole.

While the purpose of the power to adjust in Section 15-1-404 (1) is to eliminate the need for a trustee who operates under the prudent investor rule to be concerned about the income component of the portfolio's total return, the trustee must still determine the extent to which a distribution must be made to an income beneficiary and the adequacy of the portfolio's liquidity as a whole to make that distribution.

For a discussion of investment considerations involving specific investments and techniques under the prudent investor rule, see Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, Comments k-p.

Factors to consider in exercising the power to adjust. Section 15-1-404 (2) requires a trustee to consider factors relevant to the trust and its beneficiaries in deciding whether and to what extent the power to adjust should be exercised. Section 2(c) of the Uniform Prudent Investor Act sets forth circumstances that a trustee is to consider in investing and managing trust assets. The circumstances in Section 2(c) of the Uniform Prudent Investor Act are the source of the factors in paragraphs (a) through (f) and (h) of Section 15-1-404 (2) (modified where necessary to adapt them to the purposes of this Act) so that, to the extent possible, comparable factors will apply to investment decisions and decisions involving the power to adjust. If a trustee who is operating under the prudent investor rule decides that the portfolio should be composed of financial assets whose total return will result primarily from capital appreciation rather than dividends, interest, and rents, the trustee can decide at the same time the extent to which an adjustment from principal to income may be necessary under Section 15-1-404. On the other hand, if a trustee decides that the risk and return objectives for the trust are best achieved by a portfolio whose total return includes interest and dividend income that is sufficient to provide the income beneficiary with the beneficial interest to which the beneficiary is entitled under the terms of the trust, the trustee can decide that it is unnecessary to exercise the power to adjust.

Assets received from the settlor. Section 3 of the Uniform Prudent Investor Act provides that "[a] trustee shall diversify the investments of the trust unless the trustee reasonably determines that, because of special circumstances, the purposes of the trust are better served without diversifying." The special circumstances may include the wish to retain a family business, the benefit derived from deferring liquidation of the asset in order to defer payment of income taxes, or the anticipated capital appreciation from retaining an asset such as undeveloped real estate for a long period. To the extent the trustee retains assets received from the settlor because of special circumstances that overcome the duty to diversify, the trustee may take these circumstances into account in determining whether and to what extent the power to adjust should be exercised to change the results produced by other provisions of this Act that apply to the retained assets. See Section 15-1-404 (2)(e); Uniform Prudent Investor Act § 3, Comment, 7B U.L.A. 18, at 25-26 (Supp. 1997); Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 229 and Comments a-e.

Limitations on the power to adjust. The purpose of subsections (3)(a) through (d) is to preserve tax benefits that may have been an important purpose for creating the trust. Subsections (3)(e), (f), and (h) deny the power to adjust in the circumstances described in those subsections in order to prevent adverse tax consequences, and subsection (3)(g) denies the power to adjust to any beneficiary, whether or not possession of the power may have adverse tax consequences.

Under subsection (3)(a), a trustee cannot make an adjustment that diminishes the income interest in a trust that requires all of the income to be paid at least annually to a spouse and for which an estate tax or gift tax marital deduction is allowed; but this subsection does not prevent the trustee from making an adjustment that increases the amount of income paid from a marital deduction trust to the spouse. Subsection (3)(a) applies to a trust that qualifies for the marital deduction because the spouse has a general power of appointment over the trust, but it applies to a qualified terminable interest property (QTIP) trust only if and to the extent that the fiduciary makes the election required to obtain the tax deduction. Subsection (3)(a) does not apply to a so-called "estate" trust. This type of trust qualifies for the marital deduction because the terms of the trust require the principal and undistributed income to be paid to the surviving spouse's estate when the spouse dies; it is not necessary for the terms of an estate trust to require the income to be distributed annually. Reg. § 20.2056(c)-2(b)(1)(iii).

Subsection (3)(c) applies to annuity trusts and unitrusts with no charitable beneficiaries as well as to trusts with charitable income or remainder beneficiaries; its purpose is to make it clear that a beneficiary's right to receive a fixed annuity or a fixed fraction of the value of a trust's assets is not subject to adjustment under Section 15-1-404 (1). Subsection (3)(c) does not apply to any additional amount to which the beneficiary may be entitled that is expressed in terms of a right to receive income from the trust. For example, if a beneficiary is to receive a fixed annuity or the trust's income, whichever is greater, subsection (3)(c) does not prevent a trustee from making an adjustment under Section 15-1-404 (1) in determining the amount of the trust's income.

If subsection (3)(e), (f), (g), or (h), prevents a trustee from exercising the power to adjust, subsection (4) permits a cotrustee who is not subject to the provision to exercise the power unless the terms of the trust do not permit the cotrustee to do so.

Release of the power to adjust. Section 15-1-404 (5) permits a trustee to release all or part of the power to adjust in circumstances in which the possession or exercise of the power might deprive the trust of a tax benefit or impose a tax burden. For example, if possessing the power would diminish the actuarial value of the income interest in a trust for which the income beneficiary's estate may be eligible to claim a credit for property previously taxed if the beneficiary dies within ten years after the death of the person creating the trust, the trustee is permitted under subsection (5) to release just the power to adjust from income to principal.

Trust terms that limit a power to adjust. Section 15-1-404 (6) applies to trust provisions that limit a trustee's power to adjust. Since the power is intended to enable trustees to employ the prudent investor rule without being constrained by traditional principal and income rules, an instrument executed before the adoption of this Act whose terms describe the amount that may or must be distributed to a beneficiary by referring to the trust's income or that prohibit the invasion of principal or that prohibit equitable adjustments in general should not be construed as forbidding the use of the power to adjust under Section 15-1-404 (1) if the need for adjustment arises because the trustee is operating under the prudent investor rule. Instruments containing such provisions that are executed after the adoption of this Act should specifically refer to the power to adjust if the settlor intends to forbid its use. See generally, Joel C. Dobris, Limits on the Doctrine of Equitable Adjustment in Sophisticated Postmortem Tax Planning, 66 Iowa L. Rev. 273 (1981).

Examples. The following examples illustrate the application of Section 15-1-404:

Example (1) — T is the successor trustee of a trust that provides income to A for life, remainder to B. T has received from the prior trustee a portfolio of financial assets invested 20% in stocks and 80% in bonds. Following the prudent investor rule, T determines that a strategy of investing the portfolio 50% in stocks and 50% in bonds has risk and return objectives that are reasonably suited to the trust, but T also determines that adopting this approach will cause the trust to receive a smaller amount of dividend and interest income. After considering the factors in Section 15-1-404 (2), T may transfer cash from principal to income to the extent T considers it necessary to increase the amount distributed to the income beneficiary.

Example (2) — T is the trustee of a trust that requires the income to be paid to the settlor's son C for life, remainder to C's daughter D. In a period of very high inflation, T purchases bonds that pay double-digit interest and determines that a portion of the interest, which is allocated to income under Section 15-1-416 of this Act, is a return of capital. In consideration of the loss of value of principal due to inflation and other factors that T considers relevant, T may transfer part of the interest to principal.

Example (3) — T is the trustee of a trust that requires the income to be paid to the settlor's sister E for life, remainder to charity F. E is a retired schoolteacher who is single and has no children. E's income from her social security, pension, and savings exceeds the amount required to provide for her accustomed standard of living. The terms of the trust permit T to invade principal to provide for E's health and to support her in her accustomed manner of living, but do not otherwise indicate that T should favor E or F. Applying the prudent investor rule, T determines that the trust assets should be invested entirely in growth stocks that produce very little dividend income. Even though it is not necessary to invade principal to maintain E's accustomed standard of living, she is entitled to receive from the trust the degree of beneficial enjoyment normally accorded a person who is the sole income beneficiary of a trust, and T may transfer cash from principal to income to provide her with that degree of enjoyment.

Example (4) — T is the trustee of a trust that is governed by the law of State X. The trust became irrevocable before State X adopted the prudent investor rule. The terms of the trust require all of the income to be paid to G for life, remainder to H, and also give T the power to invade principal for the benefit of G for "dire emergencies only." The terms of the trust limit the aggregate amount that T can distribute to G from principal during G's life to 6% of the trust's value at its inception. The trust's portfolio is invested initially 50% in stocks and 50% in bonds, but after State X adopts the prudent investor rule T determines that, to achieve suitable risk and return objectives for the trust, the assets should be invested 90% in stocks and 10% in bonds. This change increases the total return from the portfolio and decreases the dividend and interest income. Thereafter, even though G does not experience a dire emergency, T may exercise the power to adjust under Section 15-1-404 (1) to the extent that T determines that the adjustment is from only the capital appreciation resulting from the change in the portfolio's asset allocation. If T is unable to determine the extent to which capital appreciation resulted from the change in asset allocation or is unable to maintain adequate records to determine the extent to which principal distributions to G for dire emergencies do not exceed the 6% limitation, T may not exercise the power to adjust. See Joel C. Dobris, Limits on the Doctrine of Equitable Adjustment in Sophisticated Postmortem Tax Planning, 66 Iowa L. Rev. 273 (1981).

Example (5) — T is the trustee of a trust for the settlor's child. The trust owns a diversified portfolio of marketable financial assets with a value of $600,000, and is also the sole beneficiary of the settlor's IRA, which holds a diversified portfolio of marketable financial assets with a value of $900,000. The trust receives a distribution from the IRA that is the minimum amount required to be distributed under the Internal Revenue Code, and T allocates 10% of the distribution to income under Section 15-1-419 (3) of this Act. The total return on the IRA's assets exceeds the amount distributed to the trust, and the value of the IRA at the end of the year is more than its value at the beginning of the year. Relevant factors that T may consider in determining whether to exercise the power to adjust and the extent to which an adjustment should be made to comply with Section 15-1-403 (2) include the total return from all of the trust's assets, those owned directly as well as its interest in the IRA, the extent to which the trust will be subject to income tax on the portion of the IRA distribution that is allocated to principal, and the extent to which the income beneficiary will be subject to income tax on the amount that T distributes to the income beneficiary.

Example (6) — T is the trustee of a trust whose portfolio includes a large parcel of undeveloped real estate. T pays real property taxes on the undeveloped parcel from income each year pursuant to Section 15-1-426 (c). After considering the return from the trust's portfolio as a whole and other relevant factors described in Section 15-1-404 (2), T may exercise the power to adjust under Section 15-1-404 (1) to transfer cash from principal to income in order to distribute to the income beneficiary an amount that T considers necessary to comply with Section 15-1-403 (2).

Example (7) — T is the trustee of a trust whose portfolio includes an interest in a mutual fund that is sponsored by T. As the manager of the mutual fund, T charges the fund a management fee that reduces the amount available to distribute to the trust by $2,000. If the fee had been paid directly by the trust, one-half of the fee would have been paid from income under Section 15-1-426 (1)(a) and the other one-half would have been paid from principal under Section 15-1-427 (1)(a). After considering the total return from the portfolio as a whole and other relevant factors described in Section 15-1-404 (2), T may exercise its power to adjust under Section 15-1-404 (1) by transferring $1,000, or half of the trust's proportionate share of the fee, from principal to income.

15-1-404.5. Conversion - unitrusts - administration. (1) Conversion by trustee. Unless expressly prohibited by the governing instrument, a trustee may release the power to adjust described in section 15-1-404 and convert a trust to a unitrust as described in this section if all of the following apply:

(a) The trust describes the amount that may or must be distributed to a beneficiary by referring to the trust's income and the trustee determines that conversion to a unitrust will enable the trustee to better carry out the purposes of the trust;

(b) The trustee sends a written notice of the trustee's decision to convert the trust to a unitrust specifying a prospective effective date for the conversion, which may not be sooner than sixty days after the notice is sent, and including a copy of this section to the qualified beneficiaries, determined as of the date the notice is sent and assuming nonexercise of all powers of appointment;

(c) There are one or more legally competent beneficiaries described in section 15-1-402 (10.5) (a), and one or more legally competent remainder beneficiaries described in either section 15-1-402 (10.5) (b) or 15-1-402 (10.5) (c), determined as of the date the notice is sent; and

(d) No beneficiary has objected in writing to the conversion to a unitrust and delivered such objection to the trustee within sixty days after the notice was sent.

(2) Conversion, reconversion, and adjustment of the distribution percentage by agreement. Conversion to a unitrust or reconversion to an income trust may be made by agreement between the trustee and all qualified beneficiaries of the trust. The trustee and all qualified beneficiaries may also agree to modify the distribution percentage; except that the trustee and the qualified beneficiaries may not agree to a distribution percentage less than three percent or greater than five percent. The agreement may include any other actions a court could properly order pursuant to subsection (7) of this section.

(3) Conversion or reconversion by court. (a) The trustee may, for any reason, elect to petition the court to order conversion to a unitrust, including without limitation the reason that conversion under subsection (1) of this section is unavailable because:

- (I) A beneficiary timely objects to the conversion to a unitrust;
- (II) There are no legally competent beneficiaries described in section 15-1-402 (10.5) (a); or
- (III) There are no legally competent beneficiaries described in section 15-1-402 (10.5) (b) or (10.5) (c).

(b) A beneficiary may request the trustee to convert to a unitrust or adjust the distribution percentage pursuant to this subsection (3). If the trustee declines or fails to act within six months after receiving a written request from a beneficiary to do so, the beneficiary may petition the court to order the conversion or adjustment.

(c) The trustee may petition the court prospectively to convert from a unitrust to an income trust or to adjust the distribution percentage if the trustee determines that the reconversion or adjustment will enable the trustee to better carry out the purposes of the trust. A beneficiary may request the trustee to petition the court prospectively to reconvert from a unitrust to an income trust or adjust the distribution percentage. If the trustee declines or fails to act within six months after receiving a written request from a beneficiary to do so, the beneficiary may petition the court to order the reconversion or adjustment.

(d) (I) In a judicial proceeding instituted under this subsection (3), the trustee may present opinions and reasons concerning:

(A) The trustee's support for, or opposition to, a conversion to a unitrust, a reconversion from a unitrust to an income trust, or an adjustment of the distribution percentage of a unitrust, including whether the trustee believes conversion, reconversion, or adjustment of the distribution percentage would enable the trustee to better carry out the purposes of the trust; and

(B) Any other matter relevant to the proposed conversion, reconversion, or adjustment of the distribution percentage.

(II) A trustee's actions undertaken in accordance with this subsection (3) shall not be deemed improper or inconsistent with the trustee's duty of impartiality unless the court finds from all the evidence that the trustee acted in bad faith.

(e) The court shall order conversion to a unitrust, reconversion prospectively from a unitrust to an income trust, or adjustment of the distribution percentage of a unitrust if the court determines that the conversion, reconversion, or adjustment of the distribution percentage will enable the trustee to better carry out the purposes of the trust.

(f) If a conversion to a unitrust is made pursuant to a court order, the trustee may reconvert the unitrust to an income trust only:

- (I) Pursuant to a subsequent court order; or
- (II) By filing with the court an agreement made pursuant to subsection (2) of this section to reconvert to an income trust.

(g) Upon a reconversion, the power to adjust, as described in section 15-1-404 and as it existed before the conversion, shall be revived.

(h) An action may be taken under this subsection (3) no more frequently than every two years, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise.

(4) Administration of a unitrust. During the time that a trust is a unitrust, the trustee shall administer the trust in accordance with the provisions of this subsection (4) as follows, unless otherwise expressly provided by the terms of the trust:

(a) The trustee shall invest the trust assets seeking a total return without regard to whether the return is from income or appreciation of principal;

(b) The trustee shall make income distributions in accordance with the governing instrument subject to the provisions of this section;

(c) The distribution percentage for any trust converted to a unitrust by a trustee in accordance with subsection (1) of this section shall be four percent, unless a different percentage has been determined in an agreement made pursuant to subsection (2) of this section or ordered by the court pursuant to subsection (3) of this section;

(d) (I) The trustee shall pay to a beneficiary in the case of an underpayment within a reasonable time, and shall recover from a beneficiary in the case of an overpayment, either by repayment by the beneficiary or by withholding from future distributions to the beneficiary;

(A) An amount equal to the difference between the amount properly payable and the amount actually paid; and

(B) Interest compounded annually at a rate per annum equal to the distribution percentage in the year or years during which the underpayment or overpayment occurs.

(II) For purposes of this paragraph (d), accrual of interest may not commence until the beginning of the trust year following the year in which the underpayment or overpayment occurs.

(e) A change in the method of determining a reasonable current return by converting to a unitrust in accordance with this section and substituting the distribution amount for net trust accounting income is a proper change in the definition of trust income and shall be given effect notwithstanding any contrary provision of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4. The distribution amount shall in all cases be deemed a reasonable current return that fairly apportions the total return of a unitrust.

(4.5) For purposes of subsection (4) of this section:

(a) "Income", as that term appears in the governing instrument, shall be deemed to mean the distribution amount.

(b) (I) The "distribution amount" shall be an annual amount equal to the distribution percentage multiplied by the average net fair market value of the trust's assets.

(II) For purposes of this paragraph (b), the average net fair market value of the trust's assets shall be the net fair market value of the trust's assets averaged over the lesser of:

(A) The three preceding years; or

(B) The period during which the trust has been in existence.

(5) Determination of matters in administration of unitrust. The trustee may determine any of the following matters in administering a unitrust as the trustee deems necessary or helpful for the proper functioning of the trust:

(a) The effective date of a conversion to a unitrust pursuant to subsection (1) of this section;

(b) The manner of prorating the distribution amount for a short year in which a beneficiary's interest commences or ceases, or if the trust is a unitrust for only part of the year, or the trustee may elect to treat the trust year as two separate years, the first of which ends at the close of the day on which the conversion or reconversion occurs and the second of which ends at the close of the trust year;

(c) Whether distributions are made in cash or in kind;

(d) The manner of adjusting valuations and calculations of the distribution amount to account for other payments from, or contributions to, the trust;

(e) Whether to value the trust's assets annually or more frequently;

(f) Which valuation dates to use and how many valuation dates to use;

(g) Valuation decisions concerning any asset for which there is no readily available market value, including:

(I) How frequently to value such an asset;

(II) Whether and how often to engage a professional appraiser to value such an asset; and

(III) Whether to exclude the value of such an asset from the net fair market value of the trust's assets for purposes of determining the distribution amount. For purposes of this section, any such asset so excluded shall be referred to as an "excluded asset", and the trustee shall distribute any net income received from the excluded asset as provided for in the governing instrument, subject to the following principles:

(A) The trustee shall treat each asset for which there is no readily available market value as an excluded asset unless the trustee determines that there are compelling reasons not to do so and the trustee considers all relevant factors including the best interests of the beneficiaries;

(B) If tangible personal property or real property is possessed or occupied by a beneficiary, the trustee may not limit or restrict any right of the beneficiary to use the property in accordance with the governing instrument regardless of whether the trustee treats the property as an excluded asset; and

(C) By way of example and not by way of limitation, assets for which there is a readily available market value include cash and cash equivalents; stocks, bonds, and other securities and instruments for which there is an established market on a stock exchange, in an over-the-counter market, or otherwise; and any other property that can reasonably be expected to be sold within one week of the decision to sell without extraordinary efforts by the seller. By way of example and not by way of limitation, assets for which there is no readily available market value include stocks, bonds, and other securities and instruments for which there is no established market on a stock exchange, in an over-the-counter market, or otherwise; real property; tangible personal property; and artwork and other collectibles.

(h) Any other administrative matter that the trustee determines is necessary or helpful for the proper functioning of the unitrust.

(6) Allocations. (a) Expenses, taxes, and other charges that would otherwise be deducted from income if the trust was not a unitrust may not be deducted from the distribution amount.

(b) Unless otherwise provided by the governing instrument, the distribution amount each year shall be deemed to be paid from the following sources for that year in the following order:

- (I) Net income determined as if the trust was not a unitrust;
- (II) Other ordinary income as determined for federal income tax purposes;
- (III) Net realized short-term capital gains as determined for federal income tax purposes;
- (IV) Net realized long-term capital gains as determined for federal income tax purposes;
- (V) Trust principal comprising assets for which there is a readily available market value; and
- (VI) Other trust principal.

(7) Court orders. (a) The court may order any of the following actions in a proceeding brought by a trustee or a beneficiary pursuant to paragraph (a), (b), or (c) of subsection (3) of this section:

- (I) Select a distribution percentage other than four percent, except that the court may not order a distribution percentage less than three percent or greater than five percent;
- (II) Average the valuation of the trust's net assets over a period other than three years;
- (III) Reconvert prospectively from a unitrust, or adjust the distribution percentage of a unitrust;
- (IV) Direct the distribution of net income, determined as if the trust were not a unitrust, in excess of the distribution amount as to any or all trust assets if the distribution is necessary to preserve a tax benefit; or
- (V) Change or direct any administrative procedure as the court determines is necessary or helpful for the proper functioning of the unitrust.

(b) Nothing in this subsection (7) shall be construed to limit the equitable jurisdiction of the court to grant other relief as the court deems proper.

(8) Restrictions. Conversion to a unitrust shall not affect any provision in the governing instrument that:

- (a) Directs or authorizes the trustee to distribute the principal;
- (b) Directs or authorizes the trustee to distribute a fixed annuity or a fixed fraction of the value of trust assets;
- (c) Authorizes a beneficiary to withdraw a portion or all of the principal; or

(d) Diminishes in any manner an amount permanently set aside for charitable purposes under the governing instrument unless both income and principal are set aside.

(9) Tax limitations. If a particular trustee is also a beneficiary of the trust and conversion or failure to convert would enhance or diminish the beneficial interest of that trustee, or if possession or exercise of the conversion power by a particular trustee alone would cause any individual to be treated as owner of a part of the trust for federal income tax purposes or cause a part of the trust to be included in the gross estate of any individual for federal estate tax purposes, then that particular trustee may not participate as a trustee in the exercise of the conversion power; except that:

(a) The trustee may petition the court under paragraph (a) of subsection (3) of this section to order conversion in accordance with this section; and

(b) A co-trustee or co-trustees to whom this subsection (9) does not apply, may convert the trust to a unitrust in accordance with subsection (1) or (2) of this section.

(10) Releases. A trustee may irrevocably release the power granted by this section if the trustee reasonably believes the release is in the best interests of the trust and its beneficiaries. The release may be personal to the releasing trustee or it may apply generally to some or all subsequent trustees. The release may be for any specified period, including a period measured by the life of an individual.

(11) Remedies. (a) A trustee who reasonably and in good faith takes any action or omits to take any action under this section is not liable to any person interested in the trust. An act or omission by a trustee under this section shall be presumed to be reasonable and undertaken in good faith unless the act or omission is determined by the court to have been an abuse of discretion.

(b) If a trustee reasonably and in good faith takes or omits to take any action under this section and a person interested in the trust opposes the act or omission, the person's exclusive remedy shall be to seek an order of the court directing the trustee to:

(I) Convert the trust to a unitrust;

(II) Reconvert from a unitrust;

(III) Change the distribution percentage; or

(IV) Order any administrative procedures the court determines are necessary or helpful for the proper functioning of the trust.

(c) A claim for relief under this subsection (11) that is not barred by adjudication, consent, or limitation, is nevertheless barred as to any beneficiary who has received a statement fully disclosing the matter unless a proceeding to assert the claim is commenced within six months after receipt of the statement. A beneficiary is deemed to have received a statement if it is received by the beneficiary or the beneficiary's representative in a manner described in section 15-10-403 or 15-1-405.

(12) No duty. A trustee has no duty to inform a beneficiary about the availability and provisions of this section. A trustee has no duty to review the trust to determine whether any action should be taken under this section unless the trustee is requested in writing by a qualified beneficiary to do so.

(13) Application. (a) This section shall apply to trusts in existence on May 22, 2003, and to trusts created on or after that date.

(b) This section shall be construed to apply to the administration of a trust that is administered in Colorado under Colorado law or that is governed by Colorado law with respect to the meaning and effect of its terms unless:

(I) The trust is a trust described in the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", section 642 (c) (5), 664 (d), or 2702 (a) (3);

(II) The governing instrument expressly prohibits the use of this section by specific reference to one or more provisions of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4;

(III) The terms of a trust in existence on May 22, 2003, incorporate provisions that operate as a unitrust. The trustee or a beneficiary of such a trust may proceed under section 15-1-405 to adopt provisions in this section that do not contradict provisions in the governing instrument.

(14) Application to express trusts. (a) This subsection (14) does not apply to a charitable remainder unitrust as defined by section 664 (d), federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", 26 U.S.C. sec. 664, as amended.

(b) As used in this section:

(I) "Unitrust" means a trust, the terms of which require or permit distribution of a unitrust amount, without regard to whether the trust has been converted to a unitrust in accordance with this section or whether the trust is established by express terms of the governing instrument.

(II) "Unitrust amount" means an amount equal to a percentage of a unitrust's assets that may or are required to be distributed to one or more beneficiaries annually in accordance with the terms of the unitrust. The unitrust amount may be determined by reference to the net fair market value of the unitrust's assets as of a particular date each year or as an average determined on a multiple-year basis.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Colorado Unitrust Conversion: A Tool for Trustees and Estate Planning Attorneys", see 40 Colo. Law. 57 (March 2011).

15-1-405. Notice of action. (1) A trustee may give a notice of proposed action regarding a matter governed by subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 as provided in this section. For the purpose of this section, a proposed action includes a course of action and a decision not to take action.

(2) The trustee shall mail notice of the proposed action to all adult beneficiaries who are receiving, or are entitled to receive, income under the trust or to receive a distribution of principal if the trust were terminated at the time the notice is given. If there are no adult beneficiaries who may receive such notice, then notice shall be given to all beneficiaries who are receiving, or are entitled to receive, income under the trust or to receive a distribution of principal if the trust were terminated at the time notice is given, in accordance with the provisions of section 15-10-403. Notice may be given to any other beneficiary. A person shall be bound under this section with respect to such proposed action if the person receives actual notice, if another person having a substantially identical interest receives notice, or if the person would be bound under the provisions of section 15-10-403.

(3) Notice of proposed action need not be given to any person who consents in writing to the proposed action. The consent may be executed at any time before or after the proposed action is taken.

(4) The notice of proposed action shall state that it is given pursuant to this section and shall state all of the following:

(a) The name and mailing address of the trustee;

(b) The name and telephone number of a person who may be contacted for additional information;

(c) A description of the action proposed to be taken and an explanation of the reasons for the action;

(d) The time within which objections to the proposed action can be made, which shall be at least thirty days from the mailing of the notice of proposed action;

(e) The date on or after which the proposed action may be taken or is effective.

(5) A beneficiary may object to the proposed action by mailing a written objection to the trustee at the address stated in the notice of proposed action within the time period specified in the notice of proposed action.

(6) A trustee is not liable to a beneficiary for an action regarding a matter governed by this chapter if the trustee does not receive a written objection to the proposed action from the beneficiary within the applicable period and the other requirements of this section are satisfied. If no beneficiary entitled to notice objects under this section, the trustee is not liable to any current or future beneficiary with respect to the proposed action.

(7) If the trustee receives a written objection within the applicable time period, either the trustee or a beneficiary may petition the court to have the proposed action performed as proposed, performed with modifications, or denied. In the proceeding, a beneficiary objecting to the proposed action has the burden of proving that the trustee's proposed action should not be performed. A beneficiary who has not objected is not estopped from opposing the proposed action in the proceeding. If the trustee decides not to implement the proposed action, the trustee shall notify the beneficiaries of the decision not to take the action and the reasons for the decision, and the trustee's decision not to implement the proposed action does not itself give rise to liability to any current or future beneficiary. A beneficiary may petition the court to have the action performed, and has the burden of proving that it should be performed.

SUBPART 2

DECEDENT'S ESTATE OR TERMINATING INCOME INTEREST

Cross references: For information concerning the effective date of this subpart 2, see § 15-1-434.

15-1-406. Determination and distribution of net income. (1) After a decedent dies, in the case of an estate, or after an income interest in a trust ends, the following rules shall apply:

(a) A fiduciary of an estate or of a terminating income interest shall determine the amount of net income and net principal receipts received from property specifically given to a beneficiary under the rules in subparts 3 to 5 of this part 4 that apply to trustees and the rules in paragraph (e) of this subsection (1). The fiduciary shall distribute the net income and net principal receipts to the beneficiary who is to receive the specific property.

(b) A fiduciary shall determine the remaining net income of a decedent's estate or a terminating income interest under the rules in subparts 3 to 5 of this part 4 that apply to trustees and by:

(I) Including in net income all income from property used to discharge liabilities;

(II) Paying from income or principal, in the fiduciary's discretion, fees of attorneys, accountants, and fiduciaries; court costs and other expenses of administration; and interest on death taxes, but the fiduciary may pay those expenses from income of property passing to a trust for which the fiduciary claims an estate tax, marital, or charitable deduction only to the extent that the payment of those expenses from income will not cause the reduction or loss of the deduction; and

(III) Paying from principal all other disbursements made or incurred in connection with the settlement of a decedent's estate or the winding up of a terminating income interest, including debts, funeral expenses, disposition of remains, family allowances, and death taxes and related penalties that are apportioned to the estate or terminating income interest by the will, the terms of the trust, or applicable law.

(c) A fiduciary shall distribute to a beneficiary who receives a pecuniary amount outright the interest or any other amount provided by the will, the terms of the trust, or applicable law from net income determined under paragraph (b) of this subsection (1) or from principal to the extent that net income is insufficient. If a beneficiary is to receive a pecuniary amount outright from a trust after an income interest ends and no interest or other amount is provided for by the terms of the trust or applicable law, the fiduciary shall distribute the interest or other amount to which the beneficiary would be entitled under applicable law if the pecuniary amount were required to be paid under a will.

(d) A fiduciary shall distribute the net income remaining after distributions required by paragraph (c) of this subsection (1) in the manner described in section 15-1-407 to all other beneficiaries, including a beneficiary who receives a pecuniary amount in trust, even if the beneficiary holds an unqualified power to withdraw assets from the trust or other presently exercisable general power of appointment over the trust.

(e) A fiduciary may not reduce principal or income receipts from property described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) because of a payment described in section 15-1-426 or 15-1-427 to the extent that the will, the terms of the trust, or applicable law requires the fiduciary to make the payment from assets other than the property or to the extent that the fiduciary recovers or expects to recover the payment from a third party. The net income and principal receipts from the property are determined by including all of the amounts the fiduciary receives or pays with respect to the property, whether those amounts accrued or became due before, on, or after the date of a decedent's death or an income interest's terminating event, and by making a reasonable provision for amounts that the fiduciary believes the estate or terminating income interest may become obligated to pay after the property is distributed.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Terminating income interests and successive income interests. A trust that provides for a single income beneficiary and an outright distribution of the remainder ends when the income interest ends. A more complex trust may have a number of income interests, either concurrent or successive, and the trust will not necessarily end when one of the income interests ends. For that reason, the Act speaks in terms of income interests ending and beginning rather than trusts ending and beginning. When an income interest in a trust ends, the trustee's powers continue during the winding up period required to complete its administration. A terminating income interest is one that has ended but whose administration is not complete.

If two or more people are given the right to receive specified percentages or fractions of the income from a trust concurrently and one of the concurrent interests ends, e.g., when a beneficiary dies, the beneficiary's income interest ends but the trust does not. Similarly, when a trust with only one income beneficiary ends upon the beneficiary's death, the trust instrument may provide that part or all of the trust assets shall continue in trust for another income beneficiary. While it is common to think and speak of this (and even to characterize it in a trust instrument) as a "new" trust, it is a continuation of the original trust for a remainder beneficiary who has an income interest in the trust assets instead of the right to receive them outright. For purposes of this Act, this is a successive income interest in the same trust. The fact that a trust may or may not end when an income interest ends is not significant for purposes of this Act.

If the assets that are subject to a terminating income interest pass to another trust because the income beneficiary exercises a general power of appointment over the trust assets, the recipient trust would be a new trust; and if they pass to another trust because the beneficiary exercises a nongeneral power of appointment over the trust assets, the recipient trust might be a new trust in some States (see 5A Austin W. Scott & William F. Fratcher, The Law of Trusts § 640, at 483 (4th ed. 1989)); but for purposes of this Act a new trust created in these circumstances is also a successive income interest.

Gift of a pecuniary amount. Section 15-1-406 (c) and (d) provide different rules for an outright gift of a pecuniary amount and a gift in trust of a pecuniary amount; this is the same approach used in Section 5(b)(2) of the 1962 Uniform Act.

Interest on pecuniary amounts. Section 15-1-406 (1)(c) provides that the beneficiary of an outright pecuniary amount is to receive the interest or other amount provided by applicable law if there is no provision in the will or the terms of the trust. Many States have no applicable law that provides for interest or some other amount to be paid on an outright pecuniary gift under an inter vivos trust; this section provides that in such a case the interest or other amount to be paid shall be the same as the interest or other amount required to be paid on testamentary pecuniary gifts. This provision is intended to accord gifts under inter vivos instruments the same treatment as testamentary gifts. The various state authorities that provide for the amount that a beneficiary of an outright pecuniary amount is entitled to receive are collected in Richard B. Covey, Marital Deduction and Credit Shelter Dispositions and the Use of Formula Provisions, App. B (4th ed. 1997).

Administration expenses and interest on death taxes. Under Section 15-1-406 (1)(b)(II) a fiduciary may pay administration expenses and interest on death taxes from either income or principal. An advantage of permitting the fiduciary to choose the source of the payment is that, if the fiduciary's decision is consistent with the decision to deduct these expenses for income tax purposes or estate tax purposes, it eliminates the need to adjust between principal and income that may arise when, for example, an expense that is paid from principal is deducted for income tax purposes or an expense that is paid from income is deducted for estate tax purposes.

The United States Supreme Court has considered the question of whether an estate tax marital deduction or charitable deduction should be reduced when administration expenses are paid from income produced by property passing in trust for a surviving spouse or for charity and deducted for income tax purposes. The Court rejected the IRS position that administration expenses properly paid from income under the terms of the trust or state law must reduce the amount of a marital or charitable transfer, and held that the value of the transferred property is not reduced for estate tax purposes unless the administration expenses are material in light of the income the trust corpus could have been expected to generate. Commissioner v. Estate of Otis C. Hubert, 117 S.Ct. 1124 (1997). The provision in Section 15-1-406 (1)(b)(II) permits a fiduciary to pay and deduct administration expenses from income only to the extent that it will not cause the reduction or loss of an estate tax marital or charitable contributions deduction, which means that the limit on the amount payable from income will be established eventually by Treasury Regulations.

Interest on estate taxes. The IRS agrees that interest on estate and inheritance taxes may be deducted for income tax purposes without having to reduce the estate tax deduction for amounts passing to a charity or surviving spouse, whether the interest is paid from principal or income. Rev. Rul. 93-48, 93-2 C.B. 270. For estates of persons who died before 1998, a fiduciary may not want to deduct for income tax purposes interest on estate tax that is deferred under Section 6166 or 6163 because deducting that interest for estate tax purposes may produce more beneficial results, especially if the estate has little or no income or the income tax bracket is significantly lower than the estate tax bracket. For estates of persons who die after 1997, no estate tax or income tax deduction will be allowed for interest paid on estate tax that is deferred under Section 6166. However, interest on estate tax deferred under Section 6163 will continue to be deductible for both purposes, and interest on estate tax deficiencies will continue to be deductible for estate tax purposes if an election under Section 6166 is not in effect.

Under the 1962 Uniform Act, Section 13(c)(5) charges interest on estate and inheritance taxes to principal. The 1931 Uniform Act has no provision. Section 15-1-426 (1)(c) of this Act provides that, except to the extent provided in Section 15-1-406 (1)(b)(II) or (III), all interest must be paid from income.

ANNOTATION

In enacting this act, the general assembly departed from the uniform act and rejected the approach that all trustee fees and expenses had to be paid out of income. The court, therefore, has discretion to determine how much of the fees and expenses will be paid out of income. In this case, there was no demonstration that the court's allocation was unreasonable or an abuse of discretion. Matter of Trust by Cannady, 926 P.2d 191 (Colo. App. 1996) (decided prior to 2000 repeal and reenactment).

15-1-407. Distribution to residuary and remainder beneficiaries. (1) Each beneficiary described in section 15-1-406 (1) (d) is entitled to receive a portion of the net income equal to the beneficiary's fractional interest in undistributed principal assets, using values as of the distribution date. If a fiduciary makes more than one distribution of assets to beneficiaries to whom this section applies, each beneficiary, including one who does not receive part of the distribution, is entitled, as of each distribution date, to the net income the fiduciary has received after the date of death or terminating event or earlier distribution date but has not distributed as of the current distribution date.

(2) In determining a beneficiary's share of net income, the following rules shall apply:

(a) The beneficiary is entitled to receive a portion of the net income equal to the beneficiary's fractional interest in the undistributed principal assets immediately before the distribution date, including assets that later may be sold to meet principal obligations.

(b) The beneficiary's fractional interest in the undistributed principal assets must be calculated without regard to property specifically given to a beneficiary and property required to pay pecuniary amounts not in trust.

(c) The beneficiary's fractional interest in the undistributed principal assets must be calculated on the basis of the aggregate value of those assets as of the distribution date without reducing the value by any unpaid principal obligation.

(d) The distribution date for purposes of this section may be the date as of which the fiduciary calculates the value of the assets if that date is reasonably near the date on which assets are actually distributed.

(3) If a fiduciary does not distribute all of the collected but undistributed net income to each person as of a distribution date, the fiduciary shall maintain appropriate records showing the interest of each beneficiary in that net income.

(4) A fiduciary may apply the rules in this section, to the extent that the fiduciary considers it appropriate, to net gain or loss realized after the date of death or terminating event or earlier distribution date from the disposition of a principal asset if this section applies to the income from the asset.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Relationship to prior Acts. Section 15-1-407 retains the concept in Section 5(b)(2) of the 1962 Uniform Act that the residuary legatees of estates are to receive net income earned during the period of administration on the basis of their proportionate interests in the undistributed assets when distributions are made. It changes the basis for determining their proportionate interests by using asset values as of a date reasonably near the time of distribution instead of inventory values; it extends the application of these rules to distributions from terminating trusts; and it extends these rules to gain or loss realized from the disposition of assets during administration, an omission in the 1962 Uniform Act that has been noted by several commentators. See, e.g., Richard B. Covey, Marital Deduction and Credit Shelter Dispositions and the Use of Formula Provisions 91 (4th ed. 1998); Thomas H. Cantrill, Fractional or Percentage Residuary Bequests: Allocation of Postmortem Income, Gain and Unrealized Appreciation, 10 Prob. Notes 322, 327 (1985).

SUBPART 3

APPORTIONMENT AT BEGINNING AND END OF INCOME INTEREST

Cross references: For information concerning the effective date of this subpart 3, see § 15-1-434.

15-1-408. When right to income begins and ends. (1) An income beneficiary is entitled to net income from the date on which the income interest begins. An income interest begins on the date specified in the terms of the trust or, if no date is specified, on the date an asset becomes subject to a trust or successive income interest.

(2) An asset becomes subject to a trust:

(a) On the date it is transferred to the trust in the case of an asset that is transferred to a trust during the transferor's life;

(b) On the date of a testator's death in the case of an asset that becomes subject to a trust by reason of a will, even if there is an intervening period of administration of the testator's estate; or

(c) On the date of an individual's death in the case of an asset that is transferred to a fiduciary by a third party because of the individual's death.

(3) An asset becomes subject to a successive income interest on the day after the preceding income interest ends, as determined under subsection (4) of this section, even if there is an intervening period of administration to wind up the preceding income interest.

(4) An income interest ends on the day before an income beneficiary dies or another terminating event occurs, or on the last day of a period during which there is no beneficiary to whom a trustee may distribute income.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Period during which there is no beneficiary. The purpose of the second part of subsection (4) is to provide that, at the end of a period during which there is no beneficiary to whom a trustee may distribute income, the trustee must apply the same apportionment rules that apply when a mandatory income interest ends. This provision would apply, for example, if a settlor creates a trust for grandchildren before any grandchildren are born. When the first grandchild is born, the period preceding the date of birth is treated as having ended, followed by a successive income interest, and the apportionment rules in Sections 15-1-409 and 15-1-410 apply accordingly if the terms of the trust do not contain different provisions.

15-1-409. Apportionment of receipts and disbursements when decedent dies or income interest begins. (1) A trustee shall allocate an income receipt or disbursement, other than one to which section 15-1-406 (1) (a) applies, to principal if its due date occurs before a decedent dies in the case of an estate or before an income interest begins in the case of a trust or successive income interest.

(2) A trustee shall allocate an income receipt or disbursement to income if its due date occurs on or after the date on which a decedent dies or an income interest begins and it is a periodic due date. An income receipt or disbursement must be treated as accruing from day to day if its due date is not periodic or it has no due date. The portion of the receipt or disbursement accruing before the date on which a decedent dies or an income interest begins must be allocated to principal and the balance must be allocated to income.

(3) An item of income or an obligation is due on the date the payer is required to make a payment. If a payment date is not stated, there is no due date for the purposes of subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4. Distributions to shareholders or other owners from an entity to which section 15-1-411 applies are deemed to be due on the date fixed by the entity for determining who is entitled to receive the distribution or, if no date is fixed, on the declaration date for the distribution. A due date is periodic for receipts or disbursements that must be paid at regular intervals under a lease or an obligation to pay interest or if an entity customarily makes distributions at regular intervals.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts. Professor Bogert stated that “Section 4 of the [1962] Act makes a change with respect to the apportionment of the income of trust property not due until after the trust began but which accrued in part before the commencement of the trust. It treats such income as to be credited entirely to the income account in the case of a living trust, but to be apportioned between capital and income in the case of a testamentary trust. The [1931] Act apportions such income in the case of both types of trusts, except in the case of corporate dividends.” George G. Bogert, The Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act, 38 Notre Dame Law. 50, 52 (1962). The 1962 Uniform Act also provides that an asset passing to an inter vivos trust by a bequest in the settlor’s will is governed by the rule that applies to a testamentary trust, so that different rules apply to assets passing to an inter vivos trust depending upon whether they were transferred to the trust during the settlor’s life or by his will.

Having several different rules that apply to similar transactions is confusing. In order to simplify administration, Section 15-1-409 applies the same rule to inter vivos trusts (revocable and irrevocable), testamentary trusts, and assets that become subject to an inter vivos trust by a testamentary bequest.

Periodic payments. Under Section 15-1-402, a periodic payment is principal if it is due but unpaid before a decedent dies or before an asset becomes subject to a trust, but the next payment is allocated entirely to income and is not apportioned. Thus, periodic receipts such as rents, dividends, interest, and annuities, and disbursements such as the interest portion of a mortgage payment, are not apportioned. This is the original common law rule. Edwin A. Howes, Jr., The American Law Relating to Income and Principal 70 (1905). In trusts in which a surviving spouse is dependent upon a regular flow of cash from the decedent’s securities portfolio, this rule will help to maintain payments to the spouse at the same level as before the settlor’s death. Under the 1962 Uniform Act, the pre-death portion of the first periodic payment due after death is apportioned to principal in the case of a testamentary trust or securities bequeathed by will to an inter vivos trust.

Nonperiodic payments. Under the second sentence of Section 15-1-409 (2), interest on an obligation that does not provide a due date for the interest payment, such as interest on an income tax refund, would be apportioned to principal to the extent it accrues before a person dies or an income interest begins unless the obligation is specifically given to a devisee or remainder beneficiary, in which case all of the accrued interest passes under Section 15-1-406 (1)(a) to the person who receives the obligation. The same rule applies to interest on an obligation that has a due date but does not provide for periodic payments. If there is no stated interest on the obligation, such as a zero coupon bond, and the proceeds from the obligation are received more than one year after it is purchased or acquired by the trustee, the entire amount received is principal under Section 15-1-416.

15-1-410. Apportionment when income interest ends. (1) For the purposes of this section, “undistributed income” means net income received before the date on which an income interest ends. The term does not include an item of income or expense that is due or accrued or net income that has been added or is required to be added to principal under the terms of the trust.

(2) When a mandatory income interest ends, the trustee shall pay to a mandatory income beneficiary who survives that date, or the estate of a deceased mandatory income beneficiary whose death causes the interest to end, the beneficiary’s share of the undistributed income that is not disposed of under the terms of the trust unless the beneficiary has an unqualified power to revoke more than five percent of the trust immediately before the income interest ends. In the latter case, the undistributed income from the portion of the trust that may be revoked must be added to principal.

(3) When a trustee’s obligation to pay a fixed annuity or a fixed fraction of the value of the trust’s assets ends, the trustee shall prorate the final payment if and to the extent required by applicable law to accomplish a purpose of the trust or its settlor relating to income, gift, estate, or other tax requirements.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts. Both the 1931 Uniform Act (Section 4) and the 1962 Uniform Act (Section 4(d)) provide that a deceased income beneficiary’s estate is entitled to the undistributed income. The Drafting Committee concluded that this is probably not what most settlors would want, and that, with respect to undistributed income, most settlors would favor the income beneficiary first, the remainder beneficiaries second, and the income beneficiary’s heirs last, if at all. However, it decided not to eliminate this provision to avoid causing disputes about whether the trustee should have distributed collected cash before the income beneficiary died.

Accrued periodic payments. Under the prior Uniform Acts, an income beneficiary or his estate is entitled to receive a portion of any payments, other than dividends, that are due or that have accrued when the income interest terminates. The last sentence of subsection (1) changes that rule by providing that such items are not included in undistributed income. The items affected include periodic payments of interest, rent, and dividends, as well as items of income that accrue over a longer period of time; the rule also applies to expenses that are due or accrued.

Example — accrued periodic payments. The rules in Section 15-1-409 and Section 15-1-410 work in the following manner: Assume that a periodic payment of rent that is due on July 20 has not been paid when an income interest ends on July 30; the successive income interest begins on July 31, and the rent payment that was due on July 20 is paid on August 3. Under Section 15-1-409 (1), the July 20 payment is added to the principal of the successive income interest when received. Under Section 15-1-409 (2), the entire periodic payment of rent that is due on August 20 is income when received by the successive income interest. Under Section 15-1-410, neither the income beneficiary of the terminated income interest nor the beneficiary’s estate is entitled to any part of either the July 20 or the August 20 payments because neither one was received before the income interest ended on July 30. The same principles apply to expenses of the trust.

Beneficiary with an unqualified power to revoke. The requirement in subsection (2) to pay undistributed income to a mandatory income beneficiary or her estate does not apply to the extent the beneficiary has an unqualified power to revoke more than five percent of the trust immediately before the income interest ends. Without this exception, subsection (2) would apply to a revocable living trust whose settlor is the mandatory income beneficiary during her lifetime, even if her will provides that all of the assets in the probate estate are to be distributed to the trust.

If a trust permits the beneficiary to withdraw all or a part of the trust principal after attaining a specified age and the beneficiary attains that age but fails to withdraw all of the principal that she is permitted to withdraw, a trustee is not required to pay her or her estate the undistributed income attributable to the portion of the principal that she left in the trust. The assumption underlying this rule is that the beneficiary has either provided for the disposition of the trust assets (including the undistributed income) by exercising a power of appointment that she has been given or has not withdrawn the assets because she is willing to have the principal and undistributed income be distributed under the terms of the trust. If the beneficiary has the power to withdraw 25% of the trust principal, the trustee must pay to her or her estate the undistributed income from the 75% that she cannot withdraw.

SUBPART 4

ALLOCATION OF RECEIPTS DURING ADMINISTRATION OF TRUST

Cross references: For information concerning the effective date of this subpart 4, see § 15-1-434.

15-1-411. Character of receipts. (1) For the purposes of this section, “entity” means a corporation, partnership, limited liability company, regulated investment company, real estate investment trust, common trust fund, or any other organization in which a trustee has an interest other than a trust or estate governed by section 15-1-412, a business or activity governed by section 15-1-413, or an asset-backed security governed by section 15-1-425.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in this section, a trustee shall allocate to income money received from an entity.

(3) A trustee shall allocate the following receipts from an entity to principal:

(a) Property other than money;

(b) Money received in one distribution or a series of related distributions in exchange for part or all of a trust’s interest in the entity;

(c) Money received in total or partial liquidation of the entity; and

(d) Money received from an entity that is a regulated investment company or a real estate investment trust if the money distributed is a capital gain dividend for federal income tax purposes.

(4) Money is received in partial liquidation:

(a) To the extent that the entity, at or near the time of a distribution, indicates that it is a distribution in partial liquidation; or

(b) If the total amount of money and property received in a distribution or series of related distributions is greater than twenty percent of the entity’s gross assets, as shown by the entity’s year-end financial statements immediately preceding the initial receipt.

(5) Money is not received in partial liquidation, nor may it be taken into account under paragraph (b) of subsection (4) of this section, to the extent that it does not exceed the amount of income tax that a trustee or beneficiary must pay on taxable income of the entity that distributes the money.

(6) A trustee may rely upon a statement made by an entity about the source or character of a distribution if the statement is made at or near the time of distribution by the entity’s board of directors or other person or group of persons authorized to exercise powers to pay money or transfer property comparable to those of a corporation’s board of directors.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Entities to which Section 15-1-411 applies.
The reference to partnerships in Section 15-1-

411 (1) is intended to include all forms of partnerships, including limited partnerships, limited liability partnerships, and variants that have slightly different names and characteristics from State to State. The section does not apply, however, to receipts from an interest in property that a trust owns as a tenant in common with one or more co-owners, nor would it apply to an interest in a joint venture if, under applicable law, the trust's interest is regarded as that of a tenant in common.

Capital gain dividends. Under the Internal Revenue Code and the Income Tax Regulations, a "capital gain dividend" from a mutual fund or real estate investment trust is the excess of the fund's or trust's net long-term capital gain over its net short-term capital loss. As a result, a capital gain dividend does not include any net short-term capital gain, and cash received by a trust because of a net short-term capital gain is income under this Act.

Reinvested dividends. If a trustee elects (or continues an election made by its predecessor) to reinvest dividends in shares of stock of a distributing corporation or fund, whether evidenced by new certificates or entries on the books of the distributing entity, the new shares would be principal. Making or continuing such an election would be equivalent to deciding under Section 15-1-404 to transfer income to principal in order to comply with Section 15-1-403 (2). However, if the trustee makes or continues the election for a reason other than to comply with Section 15-1-403 (2), e.g., to make an investment without incurring brokerage commissions, the trustee should transfer cash from principal to income in an amount equal to the reinvested dividends.

Distribution of property. The 1962 Uniform Act describes a number of types of property that would be principal if distributed by a corporation. This becomes unwieldy in a section that applies to both corporations and all other entities. By stating that principal includes the distribution of any property other than money, Section 15-1-411 embraces all of the items enumerated in Section 6 of the 1962 Uniform Act as well as any other form of nonmonetary distribution not specifically mentioned in that Act.

Partial liquidations. Under subsection (4)(a), any distribution designated by the entity as a partial liquidating distribution is principal regardless of the percentage of total assets that it represents. If a distribution exceeds 20% of the entity's gross assets, the entire distribution is a partial liquidation under subsection (4)(b) whether or not the entity describes it as a partial liquidation. In determining whether a distribution is greater than 20% of the gross assets, the portion of the distribution that does not exceed the amount of income tax that the trustee or a beneficiary must pay on the entity's taxable income is ignored.

Other large distributions. A cash distribution may be quite large (for example, more than 10% but not more than 20% of the entity's gross assets) and have characteristics that suggest it should be treated as principal rather than income. For example, an entity may have received cash from a source other than the conduct of its normal business operations because it sold an investment asset; or because it sold a business asset other than one held for sale to customers in the normal course of its business and did not replace it; or it borrowed a large sum of money and secured the repayment of the loan with a substantial asset; or a principal source of its cash was from assets such as mineral interests, 90% of which would have been allocated to principal if the trust had owned the assets directly. In such a case the trustee, after considering the total return from the portfolio as a whole and the income component of that return, may decide to exercise the power under Section 15-1-404 (1) to make an adjustment between income and principal, subject to the limitations in Section 15-1-404 (3).

15-1-412. Distribution from trust or estate. A trustee shall allocate to income an amount received as a distribution of income from a trust or an estate in which the trust has an interest other than a purchased interest, and shall allocate to principal an amount received as a distribution of principal from such a trust or estate. If a trustee purchases an interest in a trust that is an investment entity, or a decedent or donor transfers an interest in such a trust to a trustee, section 15-1-411 or section 15-1-425 shall apply to a receipt from the trust.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Terms of the distributing trust or estate. Under Section 15-1-403 (1), a trustee is to allocate receipts in accordance with the terms of the recipient trust or, if there is no provision, in accordance with this Act. However, in determining whether a distribution from another trust or an estate is income or principal, the trustee should also determine what the terms of the distributing trust or estate say about the distribution — for example, whether they direct that the distribution, even though made from the income of the distributing trust or estate, is to be added to principal of the recipient trust. Such a provision should override the terms of this Act, but if the terms of the recipient trust contain a provision requiring such a distribution to be allocated to income, the trustee may have to obtain a judicial resolution of the conflict between the terms of the two documents.

Investment trusts. An investment entity to which the second sentence of this section applies includes a mutual fund, a common trust fund, a business trust or other entity organized as a trust for the purpose of receiving capital contributed by investors, investing that capital, and managing investment assets, including asset-backed security arrangements to which Section 15-1-425 applies. See John H. Langbein, The Secret Life of the Trust: The Trust as an Instrument of Commerce, 107 Yale L.J. 165 (1997).

15-1-413. Business and other activities conducted by trustee. (1) If a trustee who conducts a business or other activity determines that it is in the best interest of all the beneficiaries to account separately for the business or activity instead of accounting for it as part of the trust's general accounting records, the trustee may maintain separate accounting records for its transactions, whether or not its assets are segregated from other trust assets.

(2) A trustee who accounts separately for a business or other activity may determine the extent to which its net cash receipts must be retained for working capital, the acquisition or replacement of fixed assets, and other reasonably foreseeable needs of the business or activity, and the extent to which the remaining net cash receipts are accounted for as principal or income in the trust's general accounting records. If a trustee sells assets of the business or other activity, other than in the ordinary course of the business or activity, the trustee shall account for the net amount received as principal in the trust's general accounting records to the extent the trustee determines that the amount received is no longer required in the conduct of the business.

(3) Activities for which a trustee may maintain separate accounting records include:

- (a) Retail, manufacturing, service, and other traditional business activities;
- (b) Farming;
- (c) Raising and selling livestock and other animals;
- (d) Management of rental properties;
- (e) Extraction of minerals and other natural resources;
- (f) Timber operations; and
- (g) Activities governed by section 15-1-424.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Purpose and scope. The provisions in Section 15-1-413 are intended to give greater flexibility to a trustee who operates a business or other activity in proprietorship form rather than in a wholly-owned corporation (or, where permitted by state law, a single-member limited liability company), and to facilitate the trustee's ability to decide the extent to which the net receipts from the activity should be allocated to income, just as the board of directors of a corporation owned entirely by the trust would decide the amount of the annual dividend to be paid to the trust. It permits a trustee to account for farming or livestock operations, rental properties, oil and gas properties, timber operations, and activities in derivatives and options as though they were held by a separate entity. It is not intended, however, to permit a trustee to account separately for a traditional securities portfolio to avoid the provisions of this Act that apply to such securities.

Section 15-1-413 permits the trustee to account separately for each business or activity for which the trustee determines separate accounting is appropriate. A trustee with a computerized accounting system may account for these activities in a "subtrust"; an individual trustee may continue to use the business and record-keeping methods employed by the decedent or transferor who may have conducted the business under an assumed name. The intent of this section is to give the trustee broad authority to select business record-keeping methods that best suit the activity in which the trustee is engaged.

If a fiduciary liquidates a sole proprietorship or other activity to which Section 15-1-413 applies, the proceeds would be added to principal, even though derived from the liquidation of accounts receivable, because the proceeds would no longer be needed in the conduct of the business. If the liquidation occurs during probate or during an income interest's winding up period, none of the proceeds would be income for purposes of Section 15-1-406.

Separate accounts. A trustee may or may not maintain separate bank accounts for business activities that are accounted for under Section 15-1-413. A professional trustee may decide not to maintain separate bank accounts, but an individual trustee, especially one who has continued a decedent's business practices, may continue the same banking arrangements that were used during the decedent's lifetime. In either case, the trustee is authorized to decide to what extent cash is to be retained as part of the business assets and to what extent it is to be transferred to the trust's general accounts, either as income or principal.

15-1-414. Principal receipts. (1) A trustee shall allocate to principal:

(a) To the extent not allocated to income under subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4, assets received from a transferor during the transferor's lifetime, a decedent's estate, a trust with a terminating income interest, or a payer under a contract naming the trust or its trustee as beneficiary;

(b) Money or other property received from the sale, exchange, liquidation, or change in form of a principal asset, including realized profit, subject to this subpart 4;

(c) Amounts recovered from third parties to reimburse the trust because of disbursements described in section 15-1-427 (1) (g) or for other reasons to the extent not based on the loss of income;

(d) Proceeds of property taken by eminent domain, but a separate award made for the loss of income with respect to an accounting period during which a current income beneficiary had a mandatory income interest is income;

(e) Net income received in an accounting period during which there is no beneficiary to whom a trustee may or must distribute income; and

(f) Other receipts as provided in sections 15-1-418 to 15-1-425.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Eminent domain awards. Even though the award in an eminent domain proceeding may include an amount for the loss of future rent on a lease, if that amount is not separately stated the entire award is principal. The rule is the same in the 1931 and 1962 Uniform Acts.

15-1-415. Rental property. To the extent that a trustee accounts for receipts from rental property pursuant to this section, the trustee shall allocate to income an amount received as rent of real or personal property, including an amount received for cancellation or renewal of a lease. An amount received as a refundable deposit, including a security deposit or a deposit that is to be applied as rent for future periods, must be added to principal and held subject to the terms of the lease and is not available for distribution to a beneficiary until the trustee's contractual obligations have been satisfied with respect to that amount.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Application of Section 15-1-415. This section applies to the extent that the trustee does not account separately under Section 15-1-415 for the management of rental properties owned by the trust.

Receipts that are capital in nature. A portion of the payment under a lease may be a reimbursement of principal expenditures for improvements to the leased property that is characterized as rent for purposes of invoking contractual or statutory remedies for nonpayment. If the trustee is accounting for rental income under Section 15-1-415, a transfer from income to reimburse principal may be appropriate under Section 15-1-429 to the extent that some of the "rent" is really a reimbursement for improvements. This set of facts could also be a relevant factor for a trustee to consider under Section 15-1-404 (2) in deciding whether and to what extent to make an adjustment between principal and income under Section 15-1-404 (2) after considering the return from the portfolio as a whole.

15-1-416. Obligation to pay money. (1) An amount received as interest, whether determined at a fixed, variable, or floating rate, on an obligation to pay money to the trustee, including an amount received as consideration for prepaying principal, must be allocated to income without any provision for amortization of premium.

(2) A trustee shall allocate to principal an amount received from the sale, redemption, or other disposition of an obligation to pay money to the trustee more than one year after it is purchased or acquired by the trustee, including an obligation whose purchase price or value when it is acquired is less than its value at maturity. If the obligation matures within one year after it is purchased or acquired by the trustee, an amount received in excess of its purchase price or its value when acquired by the trust must be allocated to income.

(3) This section shall not apply to an obligation to which the provisions of section 15-1-419, 15-1-420, 15-1-421, 15-1-422, 15-1-424, or 15-1-425 applies.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Variable or floating interest rates. The reference in subsection (1) to variable or floating interest rate obligations is intended to clarify that, even though an obligation's interest rate may change from time to time based upon changes in an index or other market indicator, an obligation to pay money containing a variable or floating rate provision is subject to this section and is not to be treated as a derivative financial instrument under Section 15-1-424.

Discount obligations. Subsection (2) applies to all obligations acquired at a discount, including short-term obligations such as U.S. Treasury Bills, long-term obligations such as U.S. Savings Bonds, zero-coupon bonds, and discount bonds that pay interest during part, but not all, of the period before maturity. Under subsection (2), the entire increase in value of these obligations is principal when the trustee receives the proceeds from the disposition unless the obligation, when acquired, has a maturity of less than one year. In order to have one rule that applies to all discount obligations, the Act eliminates the provision in the 1962 Uniform Act for the payment from principal of an amount equal to the increase in the value of U.S. Series E bonds. The provision for bonds that mature within one year after acquisition by the trustee is derived from the Illinois act. 760 ILCS 15/8 (1996).

Subsection (2) also applies to inflation-indexed bonds — any increase in principal due to inflation after issuance is principal upon redemption if the bond matures more than one year after the trustee acquires it; if it matures within one year, all of the increase, including any attributable to an inflation adjustment, is income.

Effect of Section 15-1-404. In deciding whether and to what extent to exercise the power to adjust between principal and income granted by Section 15-1-404 (1), a relevant factor for the trustee to consider is the effect on the portfolio as a whole of having a portion of the assets invested in bonds that do not pay interest currently.

15-1-417. Insurance policies and similar contracts. (1) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (2) of this section, a trustee shall allocate to principal the proceeds of a life insurance policy or other contract in which the trust or its trustee is named as beneficiary, including a contract that insures the trust or its trustee against loss for damage to, destruction of, or loss of title to a trust asset. The trustee shall allocate dividends on an insurance policy to income if the premiums on the policy are paid from income, and to principal if the premiums are paid from principal.

(2) A trustee shall allocate to income proceeds of a contract that insures the trustee against loss of occupancy or other use by an income beneficiary, loss of income, or, subject to section 15-1-413, loss of profits from a business.

(3) This section shall not apply to a contract governed by the provisions of section 15-1-419.

15-1-418. Insubstantial allocations not required. (1) If a trustee determines that an allocation between principal and income required by the provisions of sections 15-1-419 to 15-1-422 or section 15-1-425 is insubstantial, the trustee may allocate the entire amount to principal unless one of the circumstances described in section 15-1-404 (3) applies to the allocation. This power may be exercised by a cotrustee in the circumstances described in section 15-1-404 (4) and may be released for the reasons and in the manner described in section 15-1-404 (5). An allocation is presumed to be insubstantial if:

(a) The amount of the allocation would increase or decrease net income in an accounting period, as determined before the allocation, by less than ten percent; or

(b) The value of the asset producing the receipt for which the allocation would be made is less than ten percent of the total value of the trust's assets at the beginning of the accounting period.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is intended to relieve a trustee from making relatively small allocations while preserving the trustee's right to do so if an allocation is large in terms of absolute dollars.

For example, assume that a trust's assets, which include a working interest in an oil well, have a value of $1,000,000; the net income from the assets other than the working interest is $40,000; and the net receipts from the working interest are $400. The trustee may allocate all of the net receipts from the working interest to principal instead of allocating 10%, or $40, to income under Section 15-1-421. If the net receipts from the working interest are $35,000, so that the amount allocated to income under Section 15-1-421 would be $3,500, the trustee may decide that this amount is sufficiently significant to the income beneficiary that the allocation provided for by Section 15-1-421 should be made, even though the trustee is still permitted under Section 15-1-418 to allocate all of the net receipts to principal because the $3,500 would increase the net income of $40,000, as determined before making an allocation under Section 15-1-421, by less than 10%. Section 15-1-418 will also relieve a trustee from having to allocate net receipts from the sale of trees in a small woodlot between principal and income.

While the allocation to principal of small amounts under this section should not be a cause for concern for tax purposes, allocations are not permitted under this section in circumstances described in Section 15-1-404 (3) to eliminate claims that the power in this section has adverse tax consequences.

15-1-419. Deferred compensation, annuities, and similar payments. (1) For purposes of this section:

(a) "Payment" means a payment that a trustee may receive over a fixed number of years or during the life of one or more individuals because of services rendered or property transferred to the payer in exchange for future payments. The term includes a payment made in money or property from the payer's general assets or from a separate fund created by the payer. For purposes of subsections (4) to (7) of this section, "payment" also includes any payment from any separate fund, regardless of the reason for the payment.

(b) "Separate fund" includes a private or commercial annuity, an individual retirement account, and a pension, profit-sharing, stock-bonus, or stock-ownership plan.

(2) To the extent that a payment is characterized as interest, a dividend, or a payment made in lieu of interest or a dividend, a trustee shall allocate the payment to income. The trustee shall allocate to principal the balance of the payment and any other payment received in the same accounting period that is not characterized as interest, a dividend, or an equivalent payment.

(3) If no part of a payment is characterized as interest, a dividend, or an equivalent payment, and all or part of the payment is required to be made, a trustee shall allocate to income ten percent of the part that is required to be made during the accounting period and the balance to principal. If no part of a payment is required to be made or the payment received is the entire amount to which the trustee is entitled, the trustee shall allocate the entire payment to principal. For purposes of this subsection (3), a payment is not required to be made to the extent that it is made because the trustee exercises a right of withdrawal.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (5) of this section, subsections (6) and (7) of this section apply, and subsections (2) and (3) do not apply, in determining the allocation of a payment made from a separate fund to:

(a) A trust to which an election to qualify for a marital deduction under 26 U.S.C. sec. 2056 (b) (7), as amended, has been made; or

(b) A trust that qualifies for the marital deduction under 26 U.S.C. sec. 2056 (b) (5), as amended.

(5) Subsections (4), (6), and (7) of this section do not apply if and to the extent that the series of payments would, without application of said subsection (4), qualify for the marital deduction under 26 U.S.C. sec. 2056 (b) (7) (C), as amended.

(6) A trustee shall determine the internal income of each separate fund for the accounting period as if the separate fund were a trust subject to this part 4. Upon request of the surviving spouse, the trustee shall demand that the person administering the separate fund distribute the internal income to the trust. The trustee shall allocate a payment from the separate fund to income to the extent of the internal income of the separate fund and distribute that amount to the surviving spouse. The trustee shall allocate the balance of the payment to principal. Upon request of the surviving spouse, the trustee shall allocate principal to income to the extent the internal income of the separate fund exceeds payments made from the separate fund to the trust during the accounting period.

(7) If a trustee cannot determine the internal income of a separate fund but can determine the value of the separate fund, the internal income of the separate fund is deemed to equal four percent of the fund's value, according to the most recent statement of value preceding the beginning of the accounting period. If the trustee can determine neither the internal income of the separate fund nor the fund's value, the internal income of the fund is deemed to equal the product of the interest rate and the present value of the expected future payments, as determined under 26 U.S.C. sec. 7520, as amended, for the month preceding the accounting period for which the computation is made.

(8) This section does not apply to a payment governed by the provisions of section 15-1-420.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Scope. Section 15-1-419 applies to amounts received under contractual arrangements that provide for payments to a third party beneficiary as a result of services rendered or property transferred to the payer. While the right to receive such payments is a liquidating asset of the kind described in Section 15-1-420 (i.e., “an asset whose value will diminish or terminate because the asset is expected to produce receipts for a period of limited duration”), these payment rights are covered separately in Section 15-1-419 because of their special characteristics.

Section 15-1-419 applies to receipts from all forms of annuities and deferred compensation arrangements, whether the payment will be received by the trust in a lump sum or in installments over a period of years. It applies to bonuses that may be received over two or three years and payments that may last for much longer periods, including payments from an individual retirement account (IRA), deferred compensation plan (whether qualified or not qualified for special federal income tax treatment), and insurance renewal commissions. It applies to a retirement plan to which the settlor has made contributions, just as it applies to an annuity policy that the settlor may have purchased individually, and it applies to variable annuities, deferred annuities, annuities issued by commercial insurance companies, and “private annuities” arising from the sale of property to another individual or entity in exchange for payments that are to be made for the life of one or more individuals. The section applies whether the payments begin when the payment right becomes subject to the trust or are deferred until a future date, and it applies whether payments are made in cash or in kind, such as employer stock (in-kind payments usually will be made in a single distribution that will be allocated to principal under the second sentence of subsection (3)).

The 1962 Uniform Act. Under Section 12 of the 1962 Uniform Act, receipts from “rights to receive payments on a contract for deferred compensation” are allocated to income each year in an amount “not in excess of 5% per year" of the property's inventory value. While "not in excess of 5%" suggests that the annual allocation may range from zero to 5% of the inventory value, in practice the rule is usually treated as prescribing a 5% allocation. The inventory value is usually the present value of all the future payments, and since the inventory value is determined as of the date on which the payment right becomes subject to the trust, the inventory value, and thus the amount of the annual income allocation, depends significantly on the applicable interest rate on the decedent's date of death. That rate may be much higher or lower than the average long-term interest rate. The amount determined under the 5% formula tends to become fixed and remain unchanged even though the amount received by the trust increases or decreases.

Allocations Under Section 15-1-419 (2). Section 15-1-419 (2) applies to plans whose terms characterize payments made under the plan as dividends, interest, or payments in lieu of dividends or interest. For example, some deferred compensation plans that hold debt obligations or stock of the plan's sponsor in an account for future delivery to the person rendering the services provide for the annual payment to that person of dividends received on the stock or interest received on the debt obligations. Other plans provide that the account of the person rendering the services shall be credited with "phantom" shares of stock and require an annual payment that is equivalent to the dividends that would be received on that number of shares if they were actually issued; or a plan may entitle the person rendering the services to receive a fixed dollar amount in the future and provide for the annual payment of interest on the deferred amount during the period prior to its payment. Under Section 15-1-419 (2), payments of dividends, interest or payments in lieu of dividends or interest under plans of this type are allocated to income; all other payments received under these plans are allocated to principal.

Section 15-1-419 (2) does not apply to an IRA or an arrangement with payment provisions similar to an IRA. IRAs and similar arrangements are subject to the provisions in Section 15-1-419 (3).

Allocations Under Section 15-1-419 (3). The focus of Section 15-1-419, for purposes of allocating payments received by a trust to or between principal and income, is on the payment right rather than on assets that may be held in a fund from which the payments are made. Thus, if an IRA holds a portfolio of marketable stocks and bonds, the amount received by the IRA as dividends and interest is not taken into account in determining the principal and income allocation except to the extent that the Internal Revenue Service may require them to be taken into account when the payment is received by a trust that qualifies for the estate tax marital deduction

(a situation that is provided for in Section 15-1-419 (4)). An IRA is subject to federal income tax rules that require payments to begin by a particular date and be made over a specific number of years or a period measured by the lives of one or more persons. The payment right of a trust that is named as a beneficiary of an IRA is not a right to receive particular items that are paid to the IRA, but is instead the right to receive an amount determined by dividing the value of the IRA by the remaining number of years in the payment period. This payment right is similar to the right to receive a unitrust amount, which is normally expressed as an amount equal to a percentage of the value of the unitrust assets without regard to dividends or interest that may be received by the unitrust.

An amount received from an IRA or a plan with a payment provision similar to that of an IRA is allocated under Section 15-1-419 (3), which differentiates between payments that are required to be made and all other payments. To the extent that a payment is required to be made (either under federal income tax rules or, in the case of a plan that is not subject to those rules, under the terms of the plan), 10% of the amount received is allocated to income and the balance is allocated to principal. All other payments are allocated to principal because they represent a change in the form of a principal asset; Section 15-1-419 follows the rule in Section 15-1-414 (1) (b), which provides that money or property received from a change in the form of a principal asset be allocated to principal.

Section 15-1-419 (3) produces an allocation to income that is similar to the allocation under the 1962 Uniform Act formula if the annual payments are the same throughout the payment period, and it is simpler to administer. The amount allocated to income under Section 15-1-419 is not dependent upon the interest rate that is used for valuation purposes when the decedent dies, and if the payments received by the trust increase or decrease from year to year because the fund from which the payment is made increases or decreases in value, the amount allocated to income will also increase or decrease.

Marital deduction requirements. When an IRA is payable to a QTIP marital deduction trust, the IRS treats the IRA as separate terminable interest property and requires that a QTIP election be made for it. In order to qualify for QTIP treatment, an IRS ruling states that all of the IRA's income must be distributed annually to the QTIP marital deduction trust and then must be allocated to trust income for distribution to the spouse. Rev. Rul. 89-89, 1989-2 C.B. 231. If an allocation to income under this Act of 10% of the required distribution from the IRA does not meet the requirement that all of the IRA's income be distributed from the trust to the spouse, the provision in subsection (4) requires the trustee to make a larger allocation to income to the extent necessary to qualify for the marital deduction. The requirement of Rev. Rul. 89-89 should also be satisfied if the IRA beneficiary designation permits the spouse to require the trustee to withdraw the necessary amount from the IRA and distribute it to her, even though the spouse never actually requires the trustee to do so. If such a provision is in the beneficiary designation, a distribution under subsection (4) should not be necessary.

15-1-420. Liquidating asset. (1) For purposes of this section, “liquidating asset” means an asset whose value will diminish or terminate because the asset is expected to produce receipts for a period of limited duration. The term includes a leasehold, patent, copyright, royalty right, and right to receive payments during a period of more than one year under an arrangement that does not provide for the payment of interest on the unpaid balance. The term does not include a payment subject to section 15-1-419, resources subject to section 15-1-421, timber subject to section 15-1-422, an activity subject to section 15-1-424, an asset subject to section 15-1-425, or any asset for which the trustee establishes a reserve for depreciation under section 15-1-428.

(2) A trustee shall allocate to income ten percent of the receipts from a liquidating asset and the balance to principal.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts. Section 11 of the 1962 Uniform Act allocates receipts from “property subject to depletion” to income in an amount “not in excess of 5%” of the asset’s inventory value. The 1931 Uniform Act has a similar 5% rule that applies when the trustee is under a duty to change the form of the investment. The 5% rule imposes on a trust the obligation to pay a fixed annuity to the income beneficiary until the asset is exhausted. Under both the 1931 and 1962 Uniform Acts the balance of each year’s receipts is added to principal. A fixed payment can produce unfair results. The remainder beneficiary receives all of the receipts from unexpected growth in the asset, e.g., if royalties on a patent or copyright increase significantly. Conversely, if the receipts diminish more rapidly than expected, most of the amount received by the trust will be allocated to income and little to principal. Moreover, if the annual payments remain the same for the life of the asset, the amount allocated to principal will usually be less than the original inventory value. For these reasons, Section 15-1-420 abandons the annuity approach under the 5% rule.

Lottery payments. The reference in subsection (1) to rights to receive payments under an arrangement that does not provide for the payment of interest includes state lottery prizes and similar fixed amounts payable over time that are not deferred compensation arrangements covered by Section 15-1-419.

15-1-421. Minerals, water, and other natural resources. (1) To the extent that a trustee accounts for receipts from an interest in minerals or other natural resources pursuant to this section, the trustee shall allocate them as follows:

(a) If received as nominal delay rental or nominal annual rent on a lease, a receipt must be allocated to income.

(b) If received from a production payment, a receipt must be allocated to income if and to the extent that the agreement creating the production payment provides a factor for interest or its equivalent. The balance must be allocated to principal.

(c) If an amount received as a royalty, shut-in-well payment, take-or-pay payment, bonus, or delay rental is more than nominal, ninety percent must be allocated to principal and the balance to income.

(d) If an amount is received from a working interest or any other interest not provided for in paragraph (a), (b), or (c) of this subsection (1), ninety percent of the net amount received must be allocated to principal and the balance to income.

(2) An amount received on account of an interest in water that is renewable must be allocated to income. If the water is not renewable, ninety percent of the amount must be allocated to principal and the balance to income.

(3) Subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 apply whether or not a decedent or donor was extracting minerals, water, or other natural resources before the interest became subject to the trust.

(4) If a trust owns an interest in minerals, water, or other natural resources on July 1, 2001, the trustee may allocate receipts from the interest as provided in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 or in the manner used by the trustee before July 1, 2001. If the trust acquires an interest in minerals, water, or other natural resources after July 1, 2001, the trustee shall allocate receipts from the interest as provided in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts. The 1962 Uniform Act allocates to principal as a depletion allowance, 27-1/2% of the gross receipts, but not more than 50% of the net receipts after paying expenses. The Internal Revenue Code no longer provides for a 27-1/2% depletion allowance, although the major oil-producing States have retained the 27-1/2% provision in their principal and income acts (Texas amended its Act in 1993, but did not change the depletion provision). Section 9 of the 1931 Uniform Act allocates all of the net proceeds received as consideration for the "permanent severance of natural resources from the lands" to principal.

Section 15-1-421 allocates 90% of the net receipts to principal and 10% to income. A depletion provision that is tied to past or present Code provisions is undesirable because it causes a large portion of the oil and gas receipts to be paid out as income. As wells are depleted, the amount received by the income beneficiary falls drastically. Allocating a larger portion of the receipts to principal enables the trustee to acquire other income producing assets that will continue to produce income when the mineral reserves are exhausted.

Application of Sections 15-1-413 and 15-1-418. This section applies to the extent that the trustee does not account separately for receipts from minerals and other natural resources under Section 15-1-413 or allocate all of the receipts to principal under Section 15-1-418.

Open mine doctrine. The purpose of Section 15-1-421 (3) is to abolish the "open mine doctrine" as it may apply to the rights of an income beneficiary and a remainder beneficiary in receipts from the production of minerals from land owned or leased by a trust. Instead, such receipts are to be allocated to or between principal and income in accordance with the provisions of this Act. For a discussion of the open mine doctrine, see generally 3A Austin W. Scott & William F. Fratcher, The Law of Trusts § 239.3 (4th ed. 1988), and Nutter v. Stockton, 626 P.2d 861 (Okla. 1981).

Effective date provision. Section 9(b) of the 1962 Uniform Act provides that the natural resources provision does not apply to property interests held by the trust on the effective date of the Act, which reflects concerns about the constitutionality of applying a retroactive administrative provision to interests in real estate, based on the opinion in the Oklahoma case of Franklin v. Margay Oil Corporation, 153 P.2d 486, 501 (Okla. 1944). Section 15-1-421 (4) permits a trustee to use either the method provided for in this Act or the method used before the Act takes effect. Lawyers in jurisdictions other than Oklahoma may conclude that retroactivity is not a problem as to property situated in their States, and this provision permits trustees to decide, based on advice from counsel in States whose law may be different from that of Oklahoma, whether they may apply this provision retroactively if they conclude that to do so is in the best interests of the beneficiaries.

If the property is in a State other than the State where the trust is administered, the trustee must be aware that the law of the property's situs may control this question. The outcome turns on a variety of questions: whether the terms of the trust specify that the law of a State other than the situs of the property shall govern the administration of the trust, and whether the courts will follow the terms of the trust; whether the trust's asset is the land itself or a leasehold interest in the land (as it frequently is with oil and gas property); whether a leasehold interest or its proceeds should be classified as real property or personal property, and if as personal property, whether applicable state law treats it as a movable or an immovable for conflict of laws purposes. See 5A Austin W. Scott & William F.

Fratcher, The Law of Trusts §§ 648, at 531, 533-534; § 657, at 600 (4th ed. 1989).

15-1-421.5. Disposition of natural resources. (1) If any part of the principal consists of a right to receive royalties, overriding or limited royalties, working interests, production payments, net profit interests, or other interests in minerals or other natural resources in, on, or under land, the receipts from taking the natural resources from the land shall be allocated as follows:

(a) If received as rent on a lease or extension payments on a lease, the receipts are income;

(b) If received from a production payment, the receipts are income to the extent of any factor for interest or its equivalent provided in the governing instrument. There shall be allocated to principal the fraction of the balance of the receipts that the unrecovered cost of the production payment bears to the balance owed on the production payment, exclusive of any factor for interest or its equivalent. The receipts not allocated to principal are income.

(c) If received as a royalty, overriding or limited royalty, or bonus, or from a working, net profit, or any other interest in minerals or other natural resources, receipts not provided for in paragraph (a) or (b) of this subsection (1) shall be apportioned on a yearly basis in accordance with this paragraph (c) regardless of whether any natural resource was being taken from the land at the time the trust was established. Fifteen percent of the gross receipts, but not to exceed fifty percent of the net receipts remaining after payment of all expenses, direct and indirect, computed without allowance for depletion, shall be added to principal as an allowance for depletion. The balance of the gross receipts after payment therefrom of all expenses, direct and indirect, is income.

(2) If a trustee, on April 22, 2009, held an item of depletable property of a type specified in this section, he or she shall allocate receipts from the property in the manner used before April 22, 2009, but as to all depletable property acquired after April 22, 2009, by an existing or new trust, the method of allocation provided herein shall be used.

(3) This section does not apply to timber, water, soil, sod, dirt, turf, or mosses.

15-1-422. Timber. (1) To the extent that a trustee accounts for receipts from the sale of timber and related products pursuant to this section, the trustee shall allocate the net receipts:

(a) To income to the extent that the amount of timber removed from the land does not exceed the rate of growth of the timber during the accounting periods in which a beneficiary has a mandatory income interest;

(b) To principal to the extent that the amount of timber removed from the land exceeds the rate of growth of the timber or the net receipts are from the sale of standing timber;

(c) To or between income and principal if the net receipts are from the lease of timberland or from a contract to cut timber from land owned by a trust, by determining the amount of timber removed from the land under the lease or contract and applying the rules in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this subsection (1); or

(d) To principal to the extent that advance payments, bonuses, and other payments are not allocated pursuant to paragraph (a), (b), or (c) of this subsection (1).

(2) In determining net receipts to be allocated pursuant to subsection (1) of this section, a trustee shall deduct and transfer to principal a reasonable amount for depletion.

(3) Subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 apply whether or not a decedent or transferor was harvesting timber from the property before it became subject to the trust.

(4) If a trust owns an interest in timberland on July 1, 2001, the trustee may allocate net receipts from the sale of timber and related products as provided in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 or in the manner used by the trustee before July 1, 2001. If the trust acquires an interest in timberland after July 1, 2001, the trustee shall allocate net receipts from the sale of timber and related products as provided in subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Scope of section. The rules in Section 15-1-422 are intended to apply to net receipts from the sale of trees and by-products from harvesting and processing trees without regard to the kind of trees that are cut or whether the trees are cut before or after a particular number of years of growth. The rules apply to the sale of trees that are expected to produce lumber for building purposes, trees sold as pulpwood, and Christmas and other ornamental trees. Subsection (1) applies to net receipts from property owned by the trustee and property leased by the trustee. The Act is not intended to prevent a tenant in possession of the property from using wood that he cuts on the property for personal, noncommercial purposes, such as a Christmas tree, firewood, mending old fences or building new fences, or making repairs to structures on the property.

Under subsection (1), the amount of net receipts allocated to income depends upon whether the amount of timber removed is more or less than the rate of growth. The method of determining the amount of timber removed and the rate of growth is up to the trustee, based on methods customarily used for the kind of timber involved.

Application of Sections 15-1-413 and 15-1-418. This section applies to the extent that the trustee does not account separately for net receipts from the sale of timber and related products under Section 15-1-413 or allocate all of the receipts to principal under Section 15-1-418. The option to account for net receipts separately under Section 15-1-413 takes into consideration the possibility that timber harvesting operations may have been conducted before the timber property became subject to the trust, and that it may make sense to continue using accounting methods previously established for the property. It also permits a trustee to use customary accounting practices for timber operations even if no harvesting occurred on the property before it became subject to the trust.

15-1-423. Property not productive of income. (1) If a marital deduction is allowed for all or part of a trust whose assets consist substantially of property that does not provide the spouse with sufficient income from or use of the trust assets, and if the amounts that the trustee transfers from principal to income under section 15-1-404 and distributes to the spouse from principal pursuant to the terms of the trust are insufficient to provide the spouse with the beneficial enjoyment required to obtain the marital deduction, the spouse may require the trustee to make property productive of income, convert property within a reasonable time, or exercise the power conferred by section 15-1-404 (1). The trustee may decide which action or combination of actions to take.

(2) In cases not governed by the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, proceeds from the sale or other disposition of an asset are principal without regard to the amount of income the asset produces during any accounting period.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts' Conflict with Uniform Prudent Investor Act. Section 2(b) of the Uniform Prudent Investor Act provides that "[a] trustee's investment and management decisions respecting individual assets must be evaluated not in isolation but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole ... ." The underproductive property provisions in Section 12 of the 1962 Uniform Act and Section 11 of the 1931 Uniform Act give the income beneficiary a right to receive a portion of the proceeds from the sale of underproductive property as "delayed income." In each Uniform Act the provision applies on an asset by asset basis and not by taking into consideration the trust portfolio as a whole, which conflicts with the basic precept in Section 2(b) of the Prudent Investor Act. Moreover, in determining the amount of delayed income, the prior Uniform Acts do not permit a trustee to take into account the extent to which the trustee may have distributed principal to the income beneficiary, under principal invasion provisions in the terms of the trust, to compensate for insufficient income from the unproductive asset. Under Section 15-1-404 (2)(g) of this Act, a trustee must consider prior distributions of principal to the income beneficiary in deciding whether and to what extent to exercise the power to adjust conferred by Section 15-1-404 (1).

Duty to make property productive of income. In order to implement the Uniform Prudent Investor Act, this Act abolishes the right to receive delayed income from the sale proceeds of an asset that produces little or no income, but it does not alter existing state law regarding the income beneficiary's right to compel the trustee to make property productive of income. As the law continues to develop in this area, the duty to make property productive of current income in a particular situation should be determined by taking into consideration the performance of the portfolio as a whole and the extent to which a trustee makes principal distributions to the income beneficiary under the terms of the trust and adjustments between principal and income under Section 15-1-404 of this Act.

Trusts for which the value of the right to receive income is important for tax reasons may be affected by Reg. § 1.7520-3(b)(2)(v) Example (1), § 20.7520-3(b)(2)(v) Examples (1) and (2), and § 25.7520-3(b)(2)(v) Examples (1) and (2), which provide that if the income beneficiary does not have the right to compel the trustee to make the property productive, the income interest is considered unproductive and may not be valued actuarially under those sections.

Marital deduction trusts. Subsection (1) draws on language in Reg. § 20.2056(b)-5(f)(4) and (5) to enable a trust for a spouse to qualify for a marital deduction if applicable state law is unclear about the spouse's right to compel the trustee to make property productive of income.

15-1-424. Derivatives and options. (1) For purposes of this section, "derivative" means a contract or financial instrument or a combination of contracts and financial instruments that gives a trust the right or obligation to participate in some or all changes in the price of a tangible or intangible asset or group of assets, or changes in a rate, an index of prices or rates, or other market indicator for an asset or a group of assets.

(2) To the extent that a trustee does not account under section 15-1-413 for transactions in derivatives, the trustee shall allocate to principal receipts from and disbursements made in connection with those transactions.

(3) If a trustee grants an option to buy property from the trust, whether or not the trust owns the property when the option is granted, grants an option that permits another person to sell property to the trust, or acquires an option to buy property for the trust or an option to sell an asset owned by the trust, and the trustee or other owner of the asset is required to deliver the asset if the option is exercised, an amount received for granting the option must be allocated to principal. An amount paid to acquire the option must be paid from principal. A gain or loss realized upon the exercise of an option, including an option granted to a settlor of the trust for services rendered, must be allocated to principal.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Scope and application. It is difficult to predict how frequently and to what extent trustees

The trustee should also consider the application of Section 15-1-404 of this Act and the provisions of Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 240, at 186, app. § 240, at 252 (1992). Example (6) in the Comment to Section 15-1-404 describes a situation involving the payment from income of carrying charges on unproductive real estate in which Section 15-1-404 may apply.

Once the two conditions have occurred — insufficient beneficial enjoyment from the property and the spouse's demand that the trustee take action under this section — the trustee must act; but instead of the formulaic approach of the 1962 Uniform Act, which is triggered only if the trustee sells the property, this Uniform Act permits the trustee to decide whether to make the property productive of income, convert it, transfer funds from principal to income, or to take some combination of those actions. The trustee may rely on the power conferred by Section 15-1-404 (1) to adjust from principal to income if the trustee decides that it is not feasible or appropriate to make the property productive of income or to convert the property. Given the purpose of Section 15-1-423, the power under Section 15-1-404 (1) would be exercised to transfer principal to income and not to transfer income to principal.

Section 15-1-423 does not apply to a so-called "estate" trust, which will qualify for the marital deduction, even though the income may be accumulated for a term of years or for the life of the surviving spouse, if the terms of the trust require the principal and undistributed income to be paid to the surviving spouse's estate when the spouse dies. Reg. § 20.2056(c)-2(b)(1)(iii).

will invest directly in derivative financial instruments rather than participating indirectly through investment entities that may utilize these instruments in varying degrees. If the trust participates in derivatives indirectly through an entity, an amount received from the entity will be allocated under Section 15-1-411 and not Section 15-1-424. If a trustee invests directly in derivatives to a significant extent, the expectation is that receipts and disbursements related to derivatives will be accounted for under Section 15-1-413; if a trustee chooses not to account under Section 15-1-413, Section 15-1-424 (2) provides the default rule. Certain types of option transactions in which trustees may engage are dealt with in subsection (3) to distinguish those transactions from ones involving options that are embedded in derivative financial instruments.

Definition of "derivative." "Derivative" is a difficult term to define because new derivatives are invented daily as dealers tailor their terms to achieve specific financial objectives for particular clients. Since derivatives are typically contract-based, a derivative can probably be devised for almost any set of objectives if another party can be found who is willing to assume the obligations required to meet those objectives.

The most comprehensive definition of derivative is in the Exposure Draft of a Proposed Statement of Financial Accounting Standards titled "Accounting for Derivative and Similar Financial Instruments and for Hedging Activities," which was released by the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) on June 20, 1996 (No. 162-B). The definition in Section 15-1-424 (1) is derived in part from the FASB definition. The purpose of the definition in subsection (1) is to implement the substantive rule in subsection (2) that provides for all receipts and disbursements to be allocated to principal to the extent the trustee elects not to account for transactions in derivatives under Section 15-1-413. As a result, it is much shorter than the FASB definition, which serves much more ambitious objectives.

A derivative is frequently described as including futures, forwards, swaps and options, terms that also require definition, and the definition in this Act avoids these terms. FASB used the same approach, explaining in paragraph 65 of the Exposure Draft:

The definition of derivative financial instrument in this Statement includes those financial instruments generally considered to be derivatives, such as forwards, futures, swaps, options, and similar instruments. The Board considered defining a derivative financial instrument by merely referencing those commonly understood instruments, similar to paragraph 5 of Statement 119, which says that "... a derivative financial instrument is a futures, forward, swap, or option contract, or other financial instrument with similar characteristics." However, the continued development of financial markets and innovative financial instruments could ultimately render a definition based on examples inadequate and obsolete. The Board, therefore, decided to base the definition of a derivative financial instrument on a description of the common characteristics of those instruments in order to accommodate the accounting for newly developed derivatives. (Footnote omitted.)

Marking to market. A gain or loss that occurs because the trustee marks securities to market or to another value during an accounting period is not a transaction in a derivative financial instrument that is income or principal under the Act — only cash receipts and disbursements, and the receipt of property in exchange for a principal asset, affect a trust's principal and income accounts.

Receipt of property other than cash. If a trustee receives property other than cash upon the settlement of a derivatives transaction, that property would be principal under Section 15-1-414 (1) (b).

Options. Options to which subsection (3) applies include an option to purchase real estate owned by the trustee and a put option purchased by a trustee to guard against a drop in value of a large block of marketable stock that must be liquidated to pay estate taxes. Subsection (3) would also apply to a continuing and regular practice of selling call options on securities owned by the trust if the terms of the option require delivery of the securities. It does not apply if the consideration received or given for the option is something other than cash or property, such as cross-options granted in a buy-sell agreement between owners of an entity.

15-1-425. Asset-backed securities. (1) For purposes of this section, "asset-backed security" means an asset whose value is based upon the right it gives the owner to receive distributions from the proceeds of financial assets that provide collateral for the security. The term includes an asset that gives the owner the right to receive from the collateral financial assets only the interest or other current return or only the proceeds other than interest or current return. The term does not include an asset governed by the provisions of section 15-1-411 or 15-1-419.

(2) If a trust receives a payment from interest or other current return and from other proceeds of the collateral financial assets, the trustee shall allocate to income the portion of the payment that the payer identifies as being from interest or other current return and shall allocate the balance of the payment to principal.

(3) If a trust receives one or more payments in exchange for the trust's entire interest in an asset-backed security in one accounting period, the trustee shall allocate the payments to principal. If a payment is one of a series of payments that will result in the liquidation of the trust's interest in the security over more than one accounting period, the trustee shall allocate ten percent of the payment to income and the balance to principal.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Scope of section. Typical asset-backed securities include arrangements in which debt obligations such as real estate mortgages, credit card receivables and auto loans are acquired by an investment trust and interests in the trust are sold to investors. The source for payments to an investor is the money received from principal and interest payments on the underlying debt. An asset-backed security includes an "interest only" or a "principal only" security that permits the investor to receive only the interest payments received from the bonds, mortgages or other assets that are the collateral for the asset-backed security, or only the principal payments made on those collateral assets. An asset-backed security also includes a security that permits the investor to participate in either the capital appreciation of an underlying security or in the interest or dividend return from such a security, such as the "Primes" and "Scores" issued by Americus Trust. An asset-backed security does not include an interest in a corporation, partnership, or an investment trust described in the Comment to Section 15-1-412, whose assets consist significantly or entirely of investment assets. Receipts from an instrument that do not come within the scope of this section or any other section of the Act would be allocated entirely to principal under the rule in Section 15-1-403 (1)(d), and the trustee may then consider whether and to what extent to exercise the power to adjust in Section 15-1-404, taking into account the return from the portfolio as whole and other relevant factors.

SUBPART 5

ALLOCATION OF DISBURSEMENTS DURING ADMINISTRATION OF TRUST

Cross references: For information concerning the effective date of this subpart 5, see § 15-1-434.

15-1-426. Disbursements from income. (1) A trustee shall make the following disbursements from income to the extent that they are not disbursements governed by the provisions of section 15-1-406 (1) (b) (II) or (1) (b) (III):

(a) One-half of the regular compensation of the trustee and of any person providing investment advisory or custodial services to the trustee;

(b) One-half of all expenses for accountings, judicial proceedings, or other matters that involve both the income and remainder interests;

(c) All of the other ordinary expenses incurred in connection with the administration, management, or preservation of trust property and the distribution of income, including interest, ordinary repairs, regularly recurring taxes assessed against principal, and expenses of a proceeding or other matter that concerns primarily the income interest; and

(d) Recurring premiums on insurance covering the loss of a principal asset or the loss of income from or use of the asset.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Trustee fees. The regular compensation of a trustee or the trustee's agent includes compensation based on a percentage of either principal or income or both.

Insurance premiums. The reference in paragraph (1)(d) to “recurring” premiums is intended to distinguish premiums paid annually for fire insurance from premiums on title insurance, each of which covers the loss of a principal asset. Title insurance premiums would be a principal disbursement under Section 15-1-427 (1)(e).

Regularly recurring taxes. The reference to “regularly recurring taxes assessed against principal” includes all taxes regularly imposed on real property and tangible and intangible personal property.

15-1-427. Disbursements from principal. (1) A trustee shall make the following disbursements from principal:

(a) The remaining one-half of the disbursements described in section 15-1-426 (1) (a) and section 15-1-426 (1) (b);

(b) All of the trustee’s compensation calculated on principal as a fee for acceptance, distribution, or termination, and disbursements made to prepare property for sale;

(c) Payments on the principal of a trust debt;

(d) Expenses of a proceeding that concerns primarily principal, including a proceeding to construe the trust or to protect the trust or its property;

(e) Premiums paid on a policy of insurance not described in section 15-1-426 (1) (d) of which the trust is the owner and beneficiary;

(f) Estate, inheritance, and other transfer taxes, including penalties, apportioned to the trust; and

(g) Disbursements related to environmental matters, including reclamation, assessing environmental conditions, remedying and removing environmental contamination, monitoring remedial activities and the release of substances, preventing future releases of substances, collecting amounts from persons liable or potentially liable for the costs of those activities, penalties imposed under environmental laws or regulations and other payments made to comply with those laws or regulations, statutory or common law claims by third parties, and defending claims based on environmental matters.

(2) If a principal asset is encumbered with an obligation that requires income from that asset to be paid directly to the creditor, the trustee shall transfer from principal to income an amount equal to the income paid to the creditor in reduction of the principal balance of the obligation.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Environmental expenses. All environmental expenses are payable from principal, subject to the power of the trustee to transfer funds to principal from income under Section 15-1-429. However, the Drafting Committee decided that it was not necessary to broaden this provision to cover other expenditures made under compulsion of governmental authority. See generally the annotation at 43 A.L.R.4th 1012 (Duty as Between Life Tenant and Remainderman with Respect to Cost of Improvements or Repairs Made Under Compulsion of Governmental Authority).

Environmental expenses paid by a trust are to be paid from principal under Section 15-1-502 (1)(g) on the assumption that they will usually be extraordinary in nature. Environmental expenses might be paid from income if the trustee is carrying on a business that uses or sells toxic substances, in which case environmental cleanup costs would be a normal cost of doing business and would be accounted for under Section 15-1-413. In accounting under that Section, environmental costs will be a factor in determining how much of the net receipts from the business is trust income. Paying all other environmental expenses from principal is consistent with this Act’s approach regarding receipts — when a receipt is not clearly a current return on a principal asset, it should be added to principal because over time both the income and remainder beneficiaries benefit from this treatment. Here, allocating payments required by environmental laws to principal imposes the detriment of those payments over time on both the income and remainder beneficiaries.

Under Sections 15-1-429 (1) and 15-1-429 (2)(e), a trustee who makes or expects to make a principal disbursement for an environmental expense described in Section 15-1-427 (1)(g) is authorized to transfer an appropriate amount from income to principal to reimburse principal for disbursements made or to provide a reserve for future principal disbursements.

The first part of Section 15-1-427 (1)(g) is based upon the definition of an "environmental remediation trust" in Treas. Reg. § 301.7701-4(e)(as amended in 1996). This is not because the Act applies to an environmental remediation trust, but because the definition is a useful and thoroughly vetted description of the kinds of expenses that a trustee owning contaminated property might incur. Expenses incurred to comply with environmental laws include the cost of environmental consultants, administrative proceedings and burdens of every kind imposed as the result of an administrative or judicial proceeding, even though the burden is not formally characterized as a penalty.

Title proceedings. Disbursements that are made to protect a trust's property, referred to in Section 15-1-427 (1) (d), include an "action to assure title" that is mentioned in Section 13(c)(2) of the 1962 Uniform Act.

Insurance premiums. Insurance premiums referred to in Section 15-1-427 (1)(e) include title insurance premiums. They also include premiums on life insurance policies owned by the trust, which represent the trust's periodic investment in the insurance policy. There is no provision in the 1962 Uniform Act for life insurance premiums.

Taxes. Generation-skipping transfer taxes are payable from principal under subsection (1)(f).

15-1-428. Transfers from income to principal for depreciation. (1) For purposes of this section, "depreciation" means a reduction in value due to wear, tear, decay, corrosion, or gradual obsolescence of a fixed asset having a useful life of more than one year.

(2) A trustee may transfer to principal a reasonable amount of the net cash receipts from a principal asset that is subject to depreciation, but may not transfer any amount for depreciation:

(a) Of that portion of real property used or available for use by a beneficiary as a residence or of tangible personal property held or made available for the personal use or enjoyment of a beneficiary;

(b) During the administration of a decedent's estate; or

(c) Under this section if the trustee is accounting under section 15-1-413 for the business or activity in which the asset is used.

(3) An amount transferred to principal need not be held as a separate fund.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts. The 1931 Uniform Act has no provision for depreciation. Section 13(a)(2) of the 1962 Uniform Act provides that a charge shall be made against income for "... a reasonable allowance for depreciation on property subject to depreciation under generally accepted accounting principles ... ." That provision has been resisted by many trustees, who do not provide for any depreciation for a variety of reasons. One reason relied upon is that a charge for depreciation is not needed to protect the remainder beneficiaries if the value of the land is increasing; another is that generally accepted accounting principles may not require depreciation to be taken if the property is not part of a business. The Drafting Committee concluded that the decision to provide for depreciation should be discretionary with the trustee. The power to transfer funds from income to principal that is granted by this section is a discretionary power of administration referred to in Section 15-1-403 (2), and in exercising the power a trustee must comply with Section 15-1-403 (2).

One purpose served by transferring cash from income to principal for depreciation is to provide funds to pay the principal of an indebtedness secured by the depreciable property. Section 15-1-429 (2)(d) permits the trustee to transfer additional cash from income to principal for this purpose to the extent that the amount transferred from income to principal for depreciation is less than the amount of the principal payments.

15-1-429. Transfers from income to reimburse principal. (1) If a trustee makes or expects to make a principal disbursement described in this section, the trustee may transfer an appropriate amount from income to principal in one or more accounting periods to reimburse principal or to provide a reserve for future principal disbursements.

(2) Principal disbursements governed by the provisions of subsection (1) of this section include the following, but only to the extent that the trustee has not been and does not expect to be reimbursed by a third party:

(a) An amount chargeable to income but paid from principal because it is unusually large, including extraordinary repairs;

(b) A capital improvement to a principal asset, whether in the form of changes to an existing asset or the construction of a new asset, including special assessments;

(c) Disbursements made to prepare property for rental, including tenant allowances, leasehold improvements, and broker's commissions;

(d) Periodic payments on an obligation secured by a principal asset to the extent that the amount transferred from income to principal for depreciation is less than the periodic payments; and

(e) Disbursements described in section 15-1-427 (1) (g).

(3) If the asset whose ownership gives rise to the disbursements becomes subject to a successive income interest after an income interest ends, a trustee may continue to transfer amounts from income to principal as provided in subsection (1) of this section.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Prior Acts. The sources of Section 15-1-429 are Section 13(b) of the 1962 Uniform Act, which permits a trustee to "regularize distributions," if charges against income are unusually large, by using "reserves or other reasonable means" to withhold sums from income distributions; Section 13(c)(3) of the 1962 Uniform Act, which authorizes a trustee to establish an allowance for depreciation out of income if principal is used for extraordinary repairs, capital improvements and special assessments; and Section 12(3) of the 1931 Uniform Act, which permits the trustee to spread income expenses of unusual amount "throughout a series of years." Section 15-1-429 contains a more detailed enumeration of the circumstances in which this authority may be used, and includes in subsection (2)(d) the express authority to use income to make principal payments on a mortgage if the depreciation charge against income is less than the principal payments on the mortgage.

15-1-430. Income taxes. (1) A tax required to be paid by a trustee based on receipts allocated to income must be paid from income.

(2) A tax required to be paid by a trustee based on receipts allocated to principal must be paid from principal, even if the tax is called an income tax by the taxing authority.

(3) A tax required to be paid by a trustee on the trust's share of an entity's taxable income must be paid:

(a) From income to the extent that receipts from the entity are allocated only to income;

(b) From principal to the extent that receipts from the entity are allocated only to principal;

(c) Proportionately from principal and income to the extent that receipts from the entity are allocated to both income and principal; and

(d) From principal to the extent that the tax exceeds the total receipts from the entity.

(4) After applying subsections (1) to (3) of this section, the trustee shall adjust income or principal receipts to the extent that the trust's taxes are reduced because the trust receives a deduction for payments made to a beneficiary.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Electing Small Business Trusts. An Electing Small Business Trust (ESBT) is a creature created by Congress in the Small Business Job

Protection Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-188). For years beginning after 1996, an ESBT may qualify as an S corporation stockholder even if the trustee does not distribute all of the trust's income annually to its beneficiaries. The portion of an ESBT that consists of the S corporation stock is treated as a separate trust for tax purposes (but not for trust accounting purposes), and the S corporation income is taxed directly to that portion of the trust even if some or all of that income is distributed to the beneficiaries.

A trust normally receives a deduction for distributions it makes to its beneficiaries. Subsection (4) takes into account the possibility that an ESBT may not receive a deduction for trust accounting income that is distributed to the beneficiaries. Only limited guidance has been issued by the Internal Revenue Service, and it is too early to anticipate all of the technical questions that may arise, but the powers granted to a trustee in Sections 15-1-431 and 15-1-404 to make adjustments are probably sufficient to enable a trustee to correct inequities that may arise because of technical problems.

15-1-431. Adjustments between principal and income because of taxes. (1) A fiduciary may make adjustments between principal and income to offset the shifting of economic interests or tax benefits between income beneficiaries and remainder beneficiaries that arise from:

(a) Elections and decisions, other than those described in subsection (2) of this section, that the fiduciary makes from time to time regarding tax matters;

(b) An income tax or any other tax that is imposed upon the fiduciary or a beneficiary as a result of a transaction involving or a distribution from the estate or trust; or

(c) The ownership by an estate or trust of an interest in an entity whose taxable income, whether or not distributed, is includable in the taxable income of the estate, trust, or a beneficiary.

(2) If the amount of an estate tax marital deduction or charitable contribution deduction is reduced because a fiduciary deducts an amount paid from principal for income tax purposes instead of deducting it for estate tax purposes, and as a result estate taxes paid from principal are increased and income taxes paid by an estate, trust, or beneficiary are decreased, each estate, trust, or beneficiary that benefits from the decrease in income tax shall reimburse the principal from which the increase in estate tax is paid. The total reimbursement must equal the increase in the estate tax to the extent that the principal used to pay the increase would have qualified for a marital deduction or charitable contribution deduction but for the payment. The proportionate share of the reimbursement for each estate, trust, or beneficiary whose income taxes are reduced must be the same as its proportionate share of the total decrease in income tax. An estate or trust shall reimburse principal from income.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Discretionary adjustments. Section 15-1-431 (1) permits the fiduciary to make adjustments between income and principal because of tax law provisions. It would permit discretionary adjustments in situations like these: (1) A fiduciary elects to deduct administration expenses that are paid from principal on an income tax return instead of on the estate tax return; (2) a distribution of a principal asset to a trust or other beneficiary causes the taxable income of an estate or trust to be carried out to the distributee and relieves the persons who receive the income of any obligation to pay income tax on the income; or (3) a trustee realizes a capital gain on the sale of a principal asset and pays a large state income tax on the gain, but under applicable federal income tax rules the trustee may not deduct the state income tax payment from the capital gain in calculating the trust's federal capital gain tax, and the income beneficiary receives the benefit of the deduction for state income tax paid on the capital gain. See generally Joel C. Dobris, Limits on the Doctrine of Equitable Adjustment in Sophisticated Post-mortem Tax Planning, 66 Iowa L. Rev. 273 (1981).

Section 15-1-431 (1)(c) applies to a qualified Subchapter S trust (QSST) whose income beneficiary is required to include a pro rata share of the S corporation's taxable income in his return. If the QSST does not receive a cash distribution from the corporation that is large enough to cover the income beneficiary's tax liability, the trustee may distribute additional cash from principal to the income beneficiary. In this case the retention of cash by the corporation benefits the trust principal. This situation could occur if the corporation's taxable income includes capital gain from the sale of a business asset and the sale proceeds are reinvested in the business instead of being distributed to shareholders.

Mandatory adjustment. Subsection (2) provides for a mandatory adjustment from income to principal to the extent needed to preserve an estate tax marital deduction or charitable contributions deduction. It is derived from New York's EPTL § 11-1.2(A), which requires principal to be reimbursed by those who benefit when a fiduciary elects to deduct administration expenses on an income tax return instead of the estate tax return. Unlike the New York provision, subsection (2) limits a mandatory reimbursement to cases in which a marital deduction or a charitable contributions deduction is reduced by the payment of additional estate taxes because of the fiduciary's income tax election. It is intended to preserve the result reached in Estate of Britenstool v. Commissioner, 46 T.C. 711 (1966), in which the Tax Court held that a reimbursement required by the predecessor of EPTL § 11-1.2(A) resulted in the estate receiving the same charitable contributions deduction it would have received if the administration expenses had been deducted for estate tax purposes instead of for income tax purposes. Because a fiduciary will elect to deduct administration expenses for income tax purposes only when the income tax reduction exceeds the estate tax reduction, the effect of this adjustment is that the principal is placed in the same position it would have occupied if the fiduciary had deducted the expenses for estate tax purposes, but the income beneficiaries receive an additional benefit. For example, if the income tax benefit from the deduction is $30,000 and the estate tax benefit would have been $20,000, principal will be reimbursed $20,000 and the net benefit to the income beneficiaries will be $10,000.

Irrevocable grantor trusts. Under Sections 671-679 of the Internal Revenue Code (the "grantor trust" provisions), a person who creates an irrevocable trust for the benefit of another person may be subject to tax on the trust's income or capital gains, or both, even though the settlor is not entitled to receive any income or principal from the trust. Because this is now a well-known tax result, many trusts have been created to produce this result, but there are also trusts that are unintentionally subject to this rule. The Act does not require or authorize a trustee to distribute funds from the trust to the settlor in these cases because it is difficult to establish a rule that applies only to trusts where this tax result is unintended and does not apply to trusts where the tax result is intended. Settlers who intend this tax result rarely state it as an objective in the terms of the trust, but instead rely on the operation of the tax law to produce the desired result. As a result it may not be possible to determine from the terms of the trust if the result was intentional or unintentional. If the drafter of such a trust wants the trustee to have the authority to distribute principal or income to the settlor to reimburse the settlor for taxes paid on the trust's income or capital gains, such a provision should be placed in the terms of the trust. In some situations the Internal Revenue Service may require that such a provision be placed in the terms of the trust as a condition to issuing a private letter ruling.

15-1-454. Applicability. (1) Except as specifically provided by the person establishing the principal, this subpart 7 shall apply:

(a) To life estates, estates for a term, remainders, reversions, and other legal estates created before July 1, 2001, or after July 1, 2010;

(b) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section, to trusts in existence before July 1, 2001, that have elected:

(I) Not to have subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 apply to such trust, in accordance with section 15-1-434 (2); or

(II) To have the prior laws apply in accordance with section 15-1-434 (3); and

(c) To trusts in existence before July 1, 2001, that are subject to section 15-1-434 (3) and that have not elected to have subparts 1 through 6 of this part 4 apply to the trust, in accordance with section 15-1-434 (3).

(2) (a) This subpart 7 shall apply retroactively to a life estate or estate for term in principal, which estate was created during the period beginning on July 1, 2001, and before July 1, 2010, and also to the remainder or reversion that commences in possession upon the termination of such life estate or estate for a term unless a tenant or a remainderman of such principal, or any part of such principal, elects to apply and complies with the provisions of subsection (3) of this section.

(b) This subpart 7 shall apply retroactively to trusts described in paragraphs (b) and (c) of subsection (1) of this section beginning on July 1, 2001, unless the qualified beneficiaries of the trust elect to apply and comply with the provisions of section 15-1-405.

(3) (a) A tenant or a remainderman of principal, or any part of such principal, may make and deliver and, if required, record a notice of election as provided in this subsection (3) on or before July 1, 2009.

(b) The notice of election shall be a written statement of the election by such tenant or remainderman, against the retroactive application of this subpart 7 to such estates in such principal. The notice of election shall include a reference to this subsection (3); the dates of the instruments creating the present and future legal estates in such principal; the names of the persons creating such estates; a description of the principal, including the location of such principal; a description of such estates and the names or descriptions of the persons who are tenants and remaindermen of such principal; identification of which such persons are tenants and which are remaindermen; and the name and address of the person making the election. The notice of election shall be signed and acknowledged by the person making the election.

(c) (I) In the case of an election made by a tenant, notice shall be delivered to the other tenants and to the remaindermen of the principal. In the case of an election made by a remainderman, notice shall be delivered to the other remaindermen and to the tenants of the principal.

(II) If the estate of the remainderman is unvested, notice may be made by or delivered to the persons then living or in existence who would, if then living or in existence, succeed to the principal upon the termination of the life estate or estate for a term in the principal.

(III) In the case of a child under the age of eighteen years, such notice may be made by or delivered to a conservator, guardian, or parent of such child. In the case of a person who is not competent to manage his or her affairs, such notice may be made by or delivered to the conservator, guardian, or person acting under a general power of attorney with respect to the business or financial affairs of such individual.

(IV) The notice of election shall be considered delivered to the person to whom delivery is required to be made when the notice of election or a copy thereof is delivered in person or when mailed by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to such person.

(V) The recording of notice as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (3) shall fulfill the requirement of delivery of such notice in the case of any unborn, unascertained, or unknown person and in the case of a child who is under the age of eighteen years or an individual who is not competent to manage his or her affairs and for whom there is no person authorized by subparagraph (III) of this paragraph (c) to receive such notice.

(d) (I) In the case that the principal is realty, a copy of the notice of election with an additional statement made as required by this subparagraph (I) shall be recorded with the recorder of the county where such realty is located. The additional statement shall state to whom, when, and by what means the notice was mailed or otherwise delivered and be signed by the person making the election.

(II) In the case that the principal is not realty, a copy of the notice with such additional statement may be recorded with the recorder of the county where the principal is located or, if the principal is intangible personalty, where the address of the tenant in possession of such principal is located. If such location is not within this state, then such copy and statement shall be recorded with the recorder of the city and county of Denver.

(III) Such copy of the notice and additional statement when recorded as provided in this paragraph (d) are prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.

(e) No fiduciary for any trust, estate, individual, or other person with an interest, right, or power affected by the retroactive application of such amendments shall be required to make such election, nor shall such fiduciary be held responsible for not making such election.

15-1-455. Application of this subpart 7 - powers of settlor. (1) This subpart 7 shall govern the ascertainment of income and principal and the apportionment of receipts and expenses between tenants and remaindermen in all cases where a principal has been established with or, unless otherwise stated in this subpart 7, without the interposition of a trust; except that, in the establishment of the principal, provision may be made touching all matters covered by this subpart 7, and the person establishing the principal may himself or herself direct the manner of ascertainment of income and principal and the apportionment of receipts and expenses or grant discretion to the trustee or other person to do so, and such provision and direction, where not otherwise contrary to law, shall control notwithstanding this subpart 7.

(2) If neither this subpart 7 nor the direction of the person establishing the principal states an applicable rule, income and principal shall be determined in accordance with what is reasonable and equitable in view of the interests of those entitled to income as well as those entitled to principal and in view of the manner in which persons of ordinary prudence, discretion, and judgment would determine such matters. If the person establishing the principal grants the trustee or other person discretion in crediting a receipt or charging an expenditure to income or principal or partly to each, no inference of imprudence or partiality arises from the fact that the trustee or other person has made an allocation contrary to the provisions of this subpart 7.

15-1-456. Income and principal - disposition. (1) All receipts of money or other property paid or delivered as rent of realty or hire of personalty or dividends on corporate shares payable other than in shares of the corporation itself, or interest on money loaned, or interest on or the rental or use value of property wrongfully withheld or tortiously damaged, or otherwise in return for the use of principal, shall be deemed income unless otherwise expressly provided in this subpart 7.

(2) All receipts of money or other property paid or delivered as the consideration for the sale or other transfer, not a leasing or letting, of property forming a part of the principal, or as a repayment of loans, or in liquidation of the assets of a corporation, or as the proceeds of property taken on eminent domain proceedings where separate awards to tenant and remainderman are not made, or as proceeds of insurance upon property forming a part of the principal except where such insurance has been issued for the benefit of either tenant or remainderman alone, or otherwise as a refund or replacement or change in form of principal, shall be deemed principal, unless otherwise expressly provided in this subpart 7. Any profit or loss resulting upon any change in form of principal shall inure to or fall upon principal.

(3) All income after payment of expenses properly chargeable to it shall be paid and delivered to the tenant or retained by him or her if already in his or her possession or held for accumulation where legally so directed by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established; except that the principal shall be held for ultimate distribution as determined by the terms of the transaction by which it was established or by law.

15-1-457. Apportionment of income. (1) Whenever a tenant shall have the right to income from periodic payments, which shall include rent, interest on loans, and annuities, but shall not include dividends on corporate shares, and such right shall cease and determine by death or in any other manner at a time other than the date when such periodic payments should be paid, the tenant or his or her personal representative shall be entitled to that portion of any such income next payable which amounts to the same percentage thereof as the time elapsed from the last due date of such periodic payments to and including the day of the determination of his or her right is of the total period during which such income would normally accrue.

(2) The remaining income shall be paid to the person next entitled to income by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established. But no action shall be brought by the trustee or tenant to recover such apportioned income or any portion thereof until after the day on which it would have become due to the tenant but for the determination of the right of the tenant entitled thereto.

(3) The provisions of this section shall apply regardless of whether an ultimate remainderman is specifically named. Likewise, when the right of the first tenant accrues at a time other than the payment dates of such periodic payments, he or she shall only receive that portion of such income which amounts to the same percentage thereof as the time during which he or she has been so entitled is of the total period during which such income would normally accrue. The balance shall be a part of the principal.

15-1-458. Corporate dividends and share rights. (1) All dividends on shares of a corporation forming a part of the principal, which shares are payable in the identical class of the shares of the corporation as the stock on which the dividend is paid, shall be deemed principal. Subject to the provisions of this section, all dividends payable otherwise than in such identical class of the shares of the corporation itself, including ordinary and extraordinary dividends and dividends payable in other shares or in other securities or in obligations of corporations other than the declaring corporation, shall be deemed income. Except with respect to investment trusts, regulated investment companies, and trusts qualifying and electing to be taxed under federal law as real estate investment trusts, where the trustees have the option of receiving a dividend either in cash or in the shares of the declaring corporation, it shall be considered as a cash dividend and deemed income, irrespective of the choice made by the trustee. Distributions made from ordinary income by an investment trust, by a regulated investment company, or by a trust qualifying and electing to be taxed under federal laws as a real estate investment trust shall be deemed income. All other distributions made by the company or trust, including distributions from capital gains, depreciation, or depletion, whether in the form of cash or an option to take new stock or cash or an option to purchase additional shares, shall be deemed principal.

(2) All rights to subscribe to the shares or other securities or obligations of a corporation accruing on account of the ownership of shares or other securities in such corporation and the proceeds of any sale of such rights shall be deemed principal. All rights to subscribe to the shares or other securities or obligations of a corporation accruing on account of the ownership of shares or other securities in another corporation, and the proceeds of any sale of such rights, shall be deemed income.

(3) Where the assets of a corporation are wholly or partially liquidated, amounts paid upon corporate shares as cash dividends declared before such liquidation occurred or as arrears of preferred or guaranteed dividends shall be deemed income; all other amounts paid upon corporate shares on disbursement of the corporate assets to the stockholders shall be deemed principal.

(4) If a corporation succeeds another by merger, consolidation, or reorganization or otherwise acquires its assets and the corporate shares of the succeeding corporation are issued to the shareholders of the original corporation in like proportion to, or in substitution for, their shares of the original corporation, the two corporations shall be considered a single corporation in applying the provisions of this section, but two corporations shall not be considered a single corporation under this section merely because one owns corporate shares of or otherwise controls or directs the other.

(5) In applying this section, the date when a dividend accrues to the person who is entitled to it shall be held to be the date specified by the corporation as the one on which the stockholders entitled thereto are determined, or, in default thereof, the date of declaration of the dividend.

(6) All disbursements of corporate assets to the stockholders, whenever made, which are designated by the corporation as a return of capital or division of corporate property shall be deemed principal.

(7) Any distribution of shares or other securities or obligations of a corporation, other than the distributing corporation, or the proceeds of sale or other disposition thereof, made as a result of a court decree or final administrative order by a governmental agency ordering the distributing corporation to divest itself of the shares, securities, or other obligations, shall be deemed principal unless the distributing corporation designates that the distribution is wholly or partly in lieu of an ordinary cash dividend, in which case the distribution, to the extent that it is in lieu of the ordinary cash dividend, shall be deemed income. The provisions of this subsection (7) shall take effect on or after March 13, 1963, and shall apply to all estates of tenants or remaindermen then legally effective, whenever created, as well as to all estates of tenants or remaindermen which become legally effective thereafter.

15-1-459. Premium and discount bonds. Where any part of the principal consists of bonds or other obligations for the payment of money, they shall be deemed principal at their inventory value, which in the case of a testamentary trust, unless a contrary intention appears from the will, shall be the value at the date of death, or in default thereof at their market value at the time the principal was established, or at their cost where purchased later, regardless of their par or maturity value, and, upon their respective maturities or upon their sale, any loss or gain realized thereon shall fall upon or inure to the principal. If, however, any of such bonds or obligations bears no stated interest but is redeemable at maturity or at a future time at an amount in excess of the amount in consideration of which it was issued, such accretion, as and when realized or realizable, shall be income.

15-1-460. Principal used in business. (1) Whenever a trustee or a tenant is authorized by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established, or by law, to use any part of the principal in the continuance of a business that the original owner of the property comprising the principal had carried on, the net profits of such business attributable to such principal shall be deemed income.

(2) If such business consists of buying and selling property, the net profits for any period shall be ascertained by deducting, from the gross returns during and the inventory value of the property at the end of such period, the expenses during the inventory value of the property at the beginning of such period.

(3) If such business does not consist of buying and selling property, the net income shall be computed in accordance with the customary practice of such business, but not in such a way as to decrease the principal.

(4) Any increase in the value of the principal used in such business shall be deemed principal, and all losses in any one calendar year, after the income from such business for that year has been exhausted, shall fall upon the principal.

Source: L. 2009: Entire section added, (HB 09-1241), ch. 169, p. 753, § 14, effective April 22.

15-1-461. Principal comprising animals. If any part of the principal consists of animals employed in business, the provisions of section 15-1-460 shall apply; and, in other cases where the animals are held as a part of the principal partly or wholly because of the offspring or increase which they are expected to produce, all offspring or increase shall be deemed principal to the extent necessary to maintain the original number of such animals, and the remainder shall be deemed income; and in all other cases such offspring or increase shall be deemed income.

Source: L. 2009: Entire section added, (HB 09-1241), ch. 169, p. 754, § 14, effective April 22.

15-1-462. Principal subject to depletion. If any part of the principal consists of property other than natural resources, subject to depletion, such as leaseholds, patents, copyrights, and royalty rights, and the trustee or tenant in possession is not under a duty to change the form of the investment of the principal, the full amount of rents, royalties, or return from the property shall be income to the tenant; except that, where the trustee or tenant is under a duty, arising either by law or by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established, to change the form of the investment, either at once or as soon as it may be done without loss, then the return from such property not in excess of four percent per annum of its fair inventory value, which in the case of a testamentary trust, unless a contrary intention appears from the will, shall be the value at date of death, or, in default of same, its market value at the time the principal was established, or at its cost where purchased later, shall be deemed income and the remainder principal.

15-1-463. Unproductive estate. (1) If any part of a principal in the possession of a trustee consists of realty or personalty that for more than a year and until disposed of as stated in this section has not produced an average net income of at least one percent per annum of its fair inventory value, which in the case of a testamentary trust, unless a contrary intention appears from the will, shall be the value at date of death, or, in default thereof, its market value at the time the principal was established or of its cost where purchased later, and the trustee is under a duty to change the form of the investment as soon as it may be done without sacrifice of value and such change is delayed, but is made before the principal is finally distributed, then the tenant, or, in case of his or her death, his or her personal representative, shall be entitled to share in the net proceeds received from the property as delayed income to the extent stated in this section.

(2) Such income shall be the difference between the net proceeds received from the property and the amount which, had it been placed at simple interest at the rate of four percent per annum for the period during which the change was delayed, would have produced the net proceeds at the time of change, but in no event shall such income be more than the amount by which the net proceeds exceed the fair inventory value of the property, which in the case of a testamentary trust, unless a contrary intention appears from the will, shall be the value at the date of death, or, in default thereof, its market value at the time the principal was established or its cost where purchased later. The net proceeds shall consist of the gross proceeds received from the property less any expenses incurred in disposing of it and less all carrying charges which have been paid out of principal during the period while it has been unproductive.

(3) The time the change is delayed starts when the duty to make it first arose, which shall be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be:

(a) One year after the trustee first received the property if the property was unproductive at that time; or

(b) One year after the property became unproductive.

(4) If the tenant has received any income from the property or has had any beneficial use thereof during the period while the change has been delayed, his or her share of the delayed income shall be reduced by the amount of such income received or the value of the use had.

(5) In the case of successive tenants, the delayed income shall be divided among them or their representatives according to the length of the period for which each was entitled to income.

Source: L. 2009: Entire section added, (HB 09-1241), ch. 169, p. 754, § 14, effective April 22.

15-1-464. Disposition of natural resources. (1) If any part of the principal consists of property in lands from which may be taken timber, minerals, oils, gas, or other natural resources, and the trustee or tenant is authorized by law or by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established to sell, lease, or otherwise develop such natural resources, and no provision is made for the disposition of the net proceeds thereof after the payment of expenses and carrying charges on such property, such net proceeds, if received as rent on a lease, shall be deemed income but, if received as consideration, whether as royalties or otherwise, for the permanent severance of such natural resources from the lands, shall be deemed, to the extent provided in this section, principal to be invested to produce income, and the remainder of such net proceeds shall be deemed income. Of the net proceeds received during any period as consideration for permanent severance of a natural resource, the amount to be considered as principal for that period shall be the greater of the following:

(a) The amount that bears the same ratio to the fair inventory value of such natural resource, which in the case of a testamentary trust, unless a contrary intention appears in the will, shall be the value at date of death, or, in default thereof, its market value at the time the principal was established, or its cost if purchased later, as the number of units of the natural resource severed during the period bears to the total number of severable units of the natural resource estimated as having existed at the time the principal was established;

(b) The amount that bears the same ratio to the estimated value of the natural resource at the time of commencement of severance as the number of units of the natural resources severed during the period bears to the total number of severable units of the natural resource estimated as having existed at the time of commencement of such severance;

(c) An amount equal to that percentage of the net proceeds received as consideration for such permanent severance that is allowable as a deduction from gross income for depletion purpose under the federal income tax law then in effect at the time of severance or, if the federal income tax law then in effect makes no provision for the deduction of any stated percentage for depletion, or for any reason is not applicable to such natural resource, then fifteen percent of such net proceeds. Such disposition of net proceeds shall apply whether permanent severance commenced before or after the time the principal was established and without regard to the time when the instrument under which severance is being made was executed.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to abrogate or extend any right which may otherwise have accrued by law to a tenant to develop or work such natural resources for his or her own benefit.

15-1-464.5. Disposition of natural resources - special applicability. (1) If any part of the principal consists of a right to receive royalties, overriding or limited royalties, working interests, production payments, net profit interests, or other interests in minerals or other natural resources in, on, or under land, the receipts from taking the natural resources from the land shall be allocated as follows:

(a) If received as rent on a lease or extension payments on a lease, the receipts are income;

(b) If received from a production payment, the receipts are income to the extent of any factor for interest or its equivalent provided in the governing instrument. There shall be allocated to principal the fraction of the balance of the receipts that the unrecovered cost of the production payment bears to the balance owed on the production payment, exclusive of any factor for interest or its equivalent. The receipts not allocated to principal are income.

(c) If received as a royalty, overriding or limited royalty, or bonus, or from a working, net profit, or any other interest in minerals or other natural resources, receipts not provided for in paragraph (a) or (b) of this subsection (1) shall be apportioned on a yearly basis in accordance with this paragraph (c) regardless of whether any natural resource was being taken from the land at the time the trust was established. Fifteen percent of the gross receipts, but not to exceed fifty percent of the net receipts remaining after payment of all expenses, direct and indirect, computed without allowance for depletion, shall be added to principal as an allowance for depletion. The balance of the gross receipts after payment therefrom of all expenses, direct and indirect, is income.

(2) If a trustee, on April 22, 2009, held an item of depletable property of a type specified in this section, he or she shall allocate receipts from the property in the manner used before April 22, 2009, but as to all depletable property acquired after April 22, 2009, by an existing or new trust, the method of allocation provided herein shall be used.

(3) This section does not apply to timber, water, soil, sod, dirt, turf, or mosses.

(4) (a) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this subsection (4), this section applies to a trust or estate that is subject to this subpart 7 and shall control over the other provisions of this subpart 7 to the extent that any inconsistency exists between such provisions and this section.

(b) (I) In the case of a trust or a probate estate, the trustee or the personal representative may elect to have this section not apply to the trust or the probate estate by giving notice of such election to the beneficiaries of the trust or the probate estate as provided in subsection (5) of this section.

(II) In the case of an estate other than a trust, a life tenant or the remainderman may elect to have this section not apply to the estate by giving notice of such election in the same time and manner as provided in section 15-1-454 (3) for an election out of the application of this subpart 7 to the estate.

(5) (a) If a trustee or a personal representative makes an election under this section, he or she shall satisfy the requirements set forth in section 15-1-405 for providing notice of the election.

(b) If a life tenant or a remainderman makes an election under this section, he or she shall satisfy the requirements set forth in section 15-1-454 (3) for providing notice of the election and recording the election.

15-1-465. Expenses - trust estates. (1) All ordinary expenses incurred in connection with the trust estate or with its administration and management, including regularly recurring taxes assessed against any portion of the principal, water rates, premiums on insurance taken upon the estates of both tenant and remainderman, interest on mortgages on the principal, ordinary repairs, a reasonable portion, but not less than one-half, of the trustees' compensation for current management of principal and application of income to the use of tenant, compensation of assistants, and court costs and attorneys' and other fees on regular accountings shall be paid out of income, but such expenses where incurred in disposing of, or as carrying charges on, an unproductive estate, as defined in section 15-1-463, shall be paid out of principal, subject to the provisions of section 15-1-463 (2).

(2) All other expenses, including trustees' commissions at trust inception and termination and not more than one-half of trustees' compensation for current management of principal and application of income to the use of the tenant, cost of investing or reinvesting principal, attorneys' fees and other costs incurred in maintaining or defending any action to construe the trust or protect it or the property or assure the title thereof, unless due to the fault or cause of the tenant, and costs of, or assessments for, improvements to property forming part of the principal, shall be paid out of principal. Any tax levied by any authority, federal, state, or foreign, upon profit or gain defined as principal under the terms of section 15-1-466 (2) shall be paid out of principal, notwithstanding that said tax may be denominated a tax upon income by the taxing authority.

(3) Expenses paid out of income according to subsection (1) of this section that represent regularly recurring charges shall be considered to have accrued from day to day and shall be apportioned on that basis whenever the right of the tenant begins or ends at some date other than the payment date of the expenses. If the expenses to be paid out of income are of an unusual amount, the trustee may distribute them throughout an entire year or part thereof or throughout a series of years. After such distribution, if the right of the tenant ends during the period, the expenses shall be apportioned between tenant and remainderman on the basis of such distribution.

(4) If the costs of, or special taxes or assessments for, an improvement representing an addition of value to property held by the trustee as part of principal are paid out of principal, as provided in subsection (2) of this section, the trustee shall reserve out of income and add to the principal each year a sum equal to the cost of the improvement divided by the number of years of the reasonably expected duration of the improvement.

15-1-466. Expenses - nontrust estates. (1) The provisions of section 15-1-465, so far as applicable and excepting those provisions concerning costs of, or special taxes or assessments for, improvements to property, shall govern the apportionment of expenses between tenants and remaindermen where no trust has been created; except that such apportionment shall be subject to any legal agreement of the parties or any specific direction of the taxing or other statutes. If either tenant or remainderman has incurred an expense for the benefit of his or her own estate and without the consent or agreement of the other, he or she shall pay such expense in full.

(2) Subject to the exceptions described in subsection (1) of this section, the cost of, or special taxes or assessments for, an improvement representing an addition of value to property forming part of the principal shall be paid by the tenant, if such improvement cannot reasonably be expected to outlast the estate of the tenant. In all other cases, a portion thereof only shall be paid by the tenant, while the remainder shall be paid by the remainderman. Such portion shall be ascertained by taking that percentage of the total that is found by dividing the present value of the tenant's estate by the present value of an estate of the same form as that of the tenant; except that, it is limited for a period corresponding to the reasonably expected duration of the improvement. The computation of present values of the estates shall be made on the expectancy basis set forth in the American experience tables of mortality, and no other evidence of duration or expectancy shall be considered.

15-1-467. Disposition of net probate income. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 15-1-455, an executor shall, at the time of distribution, pay over to the trustee of any trust, or to any other legatee to whom specific property other than money is bequeathed or devised, the net probate income of such property and shall pay over all other net probate income to:

- (a) The trustee of any trust created out of residue or to which any portion of residue is added;
- (b) Any legatee for life or years of any portion of the residue;
- (c) Any legatee of a present, legal, possessory interest in any portion of the residue; and
- (d) Any trustee of a sum of money under a trust created or added to by the will but not payable out of the residue, in pro rata shares, in accordance with the respective values of the property bequeathed or devised outright or in trust. The values shall be those finally determined for federal estate tax purposes, or, if no such determination is made, the values shall be those at date of death as determined by the executor. Nothing in this subsection (1) shall prevent a court from ordering distribution of any net probate income directly to the beneficiary of a trust.

(2) If an executor makes a partial distribution of property to any legatee or trustee, the recipient of such partial distribution shall share in the net probate income collected to the date of distribution, but his or her share in the net probate income later collected by the executor shall be reduced accordingly.

(3) The amount of any net probate income distributed by the executor to each trustee or other distributee shall be stated in any order of distribution.

(4) A trustee who receives net probate income from an executor shall treat it as income of the trust for which he or she is acting.

(5) If net probate income, with respect to which income taxes have been paid by the executor, is distributed, and any of the distributees is a charitable or other tax-exempt organization, and a charitable deduction was allowable on the income tax return of the executor for the taxable year of the executor in which the income was received or accrued, such income taxes paid by the executor shall be allocated among the distributees so that the diminution in such taxes resulting from the charitable deduction allowable to the executor will inure to the benefit of such charitable or exempt organization.

(6) If net probate income with respect to which income taxes have been paid by the executor is distributed and includes tax-exempt or partially tax-exempt income or income with respect to which a credit or special deduction is allowable and the will requires such tax-exempt or partially tax-exempt income or income with respect to which a credit or special deduction is allowable to be distributed other than proportionately to the distributees of net probate income, such income taxes shall be allocated among the distributees so that the benefit of such tax exemption, partial tax exemption, credit, or special deduction will inure to the benefit of the distributee of such tax-exempt or partially tax-exempt income or of the income with respect to which a credit or special deduction is allowable.

(7) If a trust, whether inter vivos or testamentary, contains provisions whereby, on the happening or the failure to happen of an event, a gift is made of money in trust, or of specific property other than money, in trust or outright, or of any portion of the residue of such trust in further trust, or for life or years, the income of such trust for the period following the happening or failure to happen of such event shall be disposed of by the trustee thereof in the manner, so far as applicable, that would prevail if the trustee of such trust were an executor acting under the provisions of this section.

(8) This section shall be effective with respect to wills the testators of which die on or after April 18, 1961, to revocable inter vivos trusts the settlors of which die after said date, and to irrevocable inter vivos trusts which are created after said date.

ANNOTATION

Ex-husband had fiduciary duty to ex-wife since he retained complete control over her share of stock. Despite having the power to sell the stock within his sole discretion, the husband still was required to operate within the bounds of prudent judgment, reasonableness, and equity. Marshall v. Grauberger, 796 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1990).

As a matter of law, the husband owed the wife a fiduciary duty to deal with her interest with the utmost good faith. Marshall v. Grauberger, 796 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1990).

A trustee's duty of loyalty and of reasonable care dictates that he must seek to obtain the best price for trust property he is selling. If a trust has been damaged but there is uncertainty as to the extent of the damage, damages are to be closely approximated by drawing reasonable and probable inferences from the facts proven. Marshall v. Grauberger, 796 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1990).

15-1-803. Powers conferred on fiduciaries. Fiduciaries have all powers conferred upon them by the provisions of this part 8, unless limited by the language or provisions in the will or trust instrument expressing a clear intention that powers conferred under this part 8 shall be denied to the fiduciary. They have, in addition to the powers conferred in this part 8, such other or further powers as are set forth in the will or trust instrument or as are provided by other statutes or by court rule or order. If any power specifically conferred on a fiduciary by the will or trust instrument conflicts with any power conferred by this part 8, the fiduciary shall be deemed to have only the power specifically conferred by the will or trust instrument and not the conflicting power conferred by this part 8. Provisions in articles 10 to 20 of this title concerning the exercise of powers in the administration of an estate by an executor having powers under a will shall apply to executors having powers conferred under this part 8.

(dd) In the case of a trustee, to hold the assets of two or more trusts or parts of such trusts created by the same instrument or by two or more instruments if the trust provisions are substantially similar, as an undivided whole, without separation as between the assets of such trusts or parts of such trusts; but such separate trusts or parts of such trusts shall have undivided interests in such assets; and no such holding shall defer the vesting of any estate in possession or otherwise;

(ee) In the case of an estate, to join with the surviving spouse, his conservator, his guardian, the executor of his will, or the administrator of his estate, in the execution and filing of a joint income tax return for any period prior to the death of a decedent for which he has not filed a return, a federal gift tax return on gifts made by the decedent's surviving spouse, or a Colorado gift tax return on gifts made before January 1, 1980, by the decedent's surviving spouse, and to consent to said gifts being made one-half by the decedent, for any

(gg) In the case of a bank acting as a corporate fiduciary, to invest fiduciary funds awaiting investment or distribution in short-term investments, including, but not limited to, a collective investment fund. A bank acting as a corporate fiduciary may also deposit fiduciary funds awaiting investment or distribution in the commercial department of such bank or in an affiliate bank. For the purposes of this paragraph (gg), the term "bank" includes a state bank or bank and trust company which is chartered by this state or as a national bank.

(hh) To grant a conservation easement in gross, as defined in section 38-30.5-102, C.R.S., whether for consideration or gratuitously; except that, if such grant is for less than fair market value, the consent of interested persons, as defined in section 15-10-201 (27), shall be obtained in writing or an order of the court shall be obtained after notice to interested persons, unless a will or trust instrument directs, permits, or requires a donation of a conservation easement in gross, in which case no such consent or order shall be required;

(ii) Subject to the terms of the documents controlling the entity concerned, to retain or acquire interests in any entity in which the fiduciary does not have general liability, regardless of form, including but not limited to any partnership, corporation, limited liability company, and joint venture, and to become a shareholder, partner, member, or joint venturer.

Cross references: For testamentary additions to trusts, see § 15-11-511.

15-1-1001. Legislative declaration. It is the purpose of this part 10 to preserve the intent of testators and grantors of testamentary and inter vivos trusts created prior to and after June 2, 1971, for charitable, educational, religious, and benevolent purposes, by minimizing the imposition of federal income and excise taxes, and federal estate and gift taxes, imposed upon the assets of such trusts, and thereby preserving the maximum amount of the trust assets for the charitable, educational, religious, and benevolent purposes for which they were intended. The attorney general of this state shall perform such acts as, in his opinion, will result in the effectuation of this declaration of purpose.

15-1-1002. Prohibition of certain acts - amendment of governing instrument.

(1) In the administration of any trust which is a private foundation as defined in section 509 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", a charitable trust as defined in section 4947 (a) (1) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", or a split-interest trust as defined in section 4947 (a) (2) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the governing instrument or in any other law of this state, and except as otherwise provided by court decree entered on or after June 2, 1971, the following acts shall be prohibited:

(a) Engaging in any act of "self-dealing", as defined in section 4941 (d) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", which would give rise to any liability for the tax imposed by section 4941 (a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986";

(b) Retaining any "excess business holdings", as defined in section 4943 (c) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", which would give rise to any liability for the tax imposed by section 4943 (a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986";

(c) Making any investments which would jeopardize the carrying out of any of the exempt purposes of the trust, within the meaning of section 4944 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", so as to give rise to any liability for the tax imposed by section 4944 (a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986"; and

(d) Making any "taxable expenditure", as defined in section 4945 (d) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", which would give rise to any liability for the tax imposed by section 4945 (a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986".

(2) The provisions of subsection (1) of this section shall not apply either to those split-interest trusts or to amounts thereof which are not subject to the prohibitions applicable to private foundations by reason of the provisions of section 4947 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986".

(3) Notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the governing instrument or in any other law of this state, the trustee of any charitable trust as defined in section 4947 (a) (1) or 4947 (a) (2) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", with the consent of all the beneficiaries under the governing instrument, may, without application to any court and either before or after the funding of such trust, amend the governing instrument to conform to the provisions of sections 508 (e), 664, 2055 (e), and 2522 (c) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", to the extent applicable, by executing a written amendment to the trust for that purpose. Consent shall not be required as to individual beneficiaries not living at the time of amendment or as to charitable beneficiaries not named or not in existence at the time of amendment. The possibility of beneficial interests arising after the amendment of the governing instruments shall not defeat the ability to amend. In the case of an individual beneficiary not competent to give consent, the consent of such beneficiary's guardian or conservator, if any, or the consent of a guardian ad litem appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be treated as the consent of the beneficiary. A copy of the proposed amendment, executed by the trustee and consented to by all beneficiaries whose consent is required under this subsection (3), shall be delivered in person or by registered mail to the attorney general. The attorney general may, within sixty days after such receipt, indicate by registered mail to the trustee his specific objections to such proposed amendment, in which event the provisions of subsection (4) of this section shall apply if he does not withdraw his objections. In the case of any amendment to a trust created by will or to a trust created by inter vivos instrument, unless otherwise provided, the amendment shall be deemed to apply as of the date of death of the decedent or as of the date of gift.

(4) In the event that all such trustees and beneficiaries under the governing instrument do not consent to such amendment or in the event that there are no named beneficiaries, any court of competent jurisdiction shall have the power to amend the governing instrument in accordance with subsection (3) of this section upon petition of the trustee or any beneficiary and upon a subsequent finding by the court that the testator's or the grantor's intention would not be defeated by such amendment. A copy of such petition shall be delivered in person or by registered mail to the attorney general.

(5) Unless otherwise expressly provided in the governing instrument, any devise, bequest, or transfer in a testamentary or revocable inter vivos trust for religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses to be determined by the trustee or any other person shall be made only to organizations and for purposes within the meaning of section 2055 (a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986".

15-1-1003. Requirement for distribution of certain amounts. In the administration of any trust which is a private foundation, as defined in section 509 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", or which is a charitable trust, as defined in section 4947 (a) (1) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", there shall be distributed, for the purposes specified in the trust instrument, for each taxable year, amounts at least sufficient to avoid liability for the tax imposed by section 4942 (a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986". No trustee of such a trust shall be required to reimburse the trust from his own property for the amount of any liability for such tax which is incurred by the trust if the trustee acted in a prudent manner and in good faith. No trustee of such a trust shall be required to reimburse the trust from his own property for any amount which he, acting prudently and in good faith, distributes from the trust, believing it to be required to be distributed in order to avoid the liability for such tax, but which later is determined not to have been required to be distributed for that purpose.

15-1-1004. Applicability of sections 15-1-1002 and 15-1-1003. The provisions of sections 15-1-1002 and 15-1-1003 shall not apply to any trust to the extent that a court of competent jurisdiction shall determine that such application would be contrary to the terms of the instrument governing such trust and that the terms of such instrument may not properly be changed to conform to such sections.

UNIFORM PRUDENT MANAGEMENT OF INSTITUTIONAL FUNDS ACT

Editor's note: This part 11 was numbered as article 26 of chapter 31, C.R.S. 1963, and was not amended prior to 2008. The substantive provisions of this part 11 were repealed and reenacted in 2008, resulting in the addition, relocation, and elimination of sections as well as subject matter. For the text of this part 11 prior to 2008, consult the 2007 Colorado Revised Statutes. Former C.R.S. section numbers are shown in editor's notes following those sections that were relocated. For a detailed comparison of this part 11, see the comparative tables located in the back of the index.

PREFATORY NOTE

Reasons for Revision. The Uniform Prudent Management of Institutional Funds Act (UPMIFA) replaces the Uniform Management of Institutional Funds Act (UMIFA). The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws approved UMIFA in 1972, and 47 jurisdictions have enacted the act. UMIFA provided guidance and authority to charitable organizations within its scope concerning the management and investment of funds held by those organizations. UMIFA provided endowment spending rules that did not depend on trust accounting principles of income and principal, and UMIFA permitted the release of restrictions on the use or management of funds under certain circumstances. The changes UMIFA made to the law permitted charitable organizations to use modern investment techniques such as total-return investing and to determine endowment fund spending based on spending rates rather than on determinations of "income" and "principal."

UMIFA was drafted almost 35 years ago, and portions of it are now out of date. The prudence standards in UMIFA have provided useful guidance, but prudence norms evolve over time. The new Act provides modern articulations of the prudence standards for the management and investment of charitable funds and for endowment spending. The Uniform Prudent Investor Act (UPIA), an Act promulgated in 1994 and already enacted in 43 jurisdictions, served as a model for many of the revisions. UPIA updates rules on investment decision making for trusts, including charitable trusts, and imposes additional duties on trustees for the protection of beneficiaries. UPMIFA applies these rules and duties to charities organized as nonprofit corporations. UPMIFA does not apply to trusts managed by corporate and other fiduciaries that are not charities, because UPIA provides management and investment standards for those trusts.

In applying principles based on UPIA to charities organized as nonprofit corporations, UPMIFA combines the approaches taken by UPIA and by the Revised Model Nonprofit Corporation Act (RMNCA). UPMIFA reflects the fact that standards for managing and investing institutional funds are and should be the same regardless of whether a charitable organization is organized as a trust, a nonprofit corporation, or some other entity. See Bevis Longstreth, Modern Investment Management and the Prudent Man Rule 7 (1986) (stating "[t]he modern paradigm of prudence applies to all fiduciaries who are subject to some version of the prudent man rule, whether under ERISA, the private foundation provisions of the Code, UMIFA, other state statutes, or the common law."); Harvey P. Dale, Nonprofit Directors and Officers - Duties and Liabilities for Investment Decisions, 1994 N.Y.U. Conf. Tax Plan. 501(c)(3) Org's. Ch. 4.

UPMIFA provides guidance and authority to charitable organizations concerning the management and investment of funds held by those organizations, and UPMIFA imposes additional duties on those who manage and invest charitable funds. These duties provide additional protections for charities and also protect the interests of donors who want to see their contributions used wisely.

UPMIFA modernizes the rules governing expenditures from endowment funds, both to provide stricter guidelines on spending from endowment funds and to give institutions the ability to cope more easily with fluctuations in the value of the endowment.

Finally, UPMIFA updates the provisions governing the release and modification of restrictions on charitable funds to permit more efficient management of these funds. These provisions derive from the approach taken in the Uniform Trust Code (UTC) for modifying charitable trusts. Like the UTC provisions, UPMIFA's modification rules preserve the historic position of the attorneys general in most states as the overseers of charities.

As under UMIFA, the new Act applies to charities organized as charitable trusts, as non-profit corporations, or in some other manner, but the rules do not apply to funds managed by trustees that are not charities. Thus, the Act does not apply to trusts managed by corporate or individual trustees, but the Act does apply to trusts managed by charities.

Prudent Management and Investment. UMIFA applied the 1972 prudence standard to investment decision making. In contrast, UPMIFA will give charities updated and more useful guidance by incorporating language from UPIA, modified to fit the special needs of charities. The revised Act spells out more of the factors a charity should consider in making investment decisions, thereby imposing a modern, well accepted, prudence standard based on UPIA.

Among the expressly enumerated prudence factors in UPMIFA is "the preservation of the endowment fund," a standard not articulated in UMIFA.

In addition to identifying factors that a charity must consider in making management and investment decisions, UPMIFA requires a charity and those who manage and invest its funds to:

1. Give primary consideration to donor intent as expressed in a gift instrument,
2. Act in good faith, with the care an ordinarily prudent person would exercise,
3. Incur only reasonable costs in investing and managing charitable funds,
4. Make a reasonable effort to verify relevant facts,
5. Make decisions about each asset in the context of the portfolio of investments, as part of an overall investment strategy,
6. Diversify investments unless due to special circumstances, the purposes of the fund are better served without diversification,
7. Dispose of unsuitable assets, and
8. In general, develop an investment strategy appropriate for the fund and the charity.

UMIFA did not articulate these requirements.

Thus, UPMIFA strengthens the rules governing management and investment decision making by charities and provides more guidance for those who manage and invest the funds.

Donor Intent with Respect to Endowments. UPMIFA improves the protection of donor intent with respect to expenditures from endowments. When a donor expresses intent clearly in a written gift instrument, the Act requires that the charity follow the donor's instructions.

When a donor's intent is not so expressed, UPMIFA directs the charity to spend an amount that is prudent, consistent with the purposes of the fund, relevant economic factors, and the donor's intent that the fund continue in perpetuity. This approach allows the charity to give effect to donor intent, protect its endowment, assure generational equity, and use the endowment to support the purposes for which the endowment was created.

Retroactivity. Like UMIFA, UPIA, the Uniform Principal and Income Act of 1961, and the Uniform Principal and Income Act of 1997, UPMIFA applies retroactively to institutional funds created before and prospectively to institutional funds created after enactment of the statute. Regarding the considerations motivating this treatment of the issues, see the comment to Section 4.

Endowment Spending. UPMIFA improves the endowment spending rule by eliminating the concept of historic dollar value and providing better guidance regarding the operation of the prudence standard. Under UMIFA a charity can spend amounts above historic dollar value that the charity determines to be prudent. The Act directs the charity to focus on the purposes and needs of the charity rather than on the purposes and perpetual nature of the fund. Amounts below historic dollar value cannot be spent. The Drafting Committee concluded that this endowment spending rule created numerous problems and that restructuring the rule would benefit charities, their donors, and the public. The problems include:

1. Historic dollar value fixes valuation at a moment in time, and that moment is arbitrary. If a donor provides for a gift in the donor's will, the date of valuation for the gift will likely be the donor's date of death. (UMIFA left uncertain what the appropriate date for valuing a testamentary gift was.) The determination of historic dollar value can vary significantly depending upon when in the market cycle the donor dies. In addition, the fund may be below historic dollar value at the time the charity receives the gift if the value of the asset declines between the date of the donor's death and the date the asset is actually distributed to the charity from the estate.
2. After a fund has been in existence for a number of years, historic dollar value may become meaningless. Assuming reasonable long term investment success, the value of the typical fund will be well above historic dollar value, and historic dollar value will no longer represent the purchasing power of the original gift. Without better guidance on spending the increase in value of the fund, historic dollar value does not provide adequate protection for the fund. If a charity views the restriction on spending simply as a direction to preserve historic dollar value, the charity may spend more than it should.

3. The Act does not provide clear answers to questions a charity faces when the value of an endowment fund drops below historic dollar value. A fund that is so encumbered is commonly called an “underwater” fund. Conflicting advice regarding whether an organization could spend from an underwater fund has led to difficulties for those managing charities. If a charity concluded that it could continue to spend trust accounting income until a fund regained its historic dollar value, the charity might invest for income rather than on a total-return basis. Thus, the historic dollar value rule can cause inappropriate distortions in investment policy and can ultimately lead to a decline in a fund’s real value. If, instead, a charity with an underwater fund continues to invest for growth, the charity may be unable to spend anything from an underwater endowment fund for several years. The inability of a charity to spend anything from an endowment is likely to be contrary to donor intent, which is to provide current benefits to the charity.

The Drafting Committee concluded that providing clearly articulated guidance on the prudence rule for spending from an endowment fund, with emphasis on the permanent nature of the fund, would provide the best protection of the purchasing power of endowment funds.

Presumption of Imprudence. UPMIFA includes as an optional provision a presumption of imprudence if a charity spends more than seven percent of an endowment fund in any one year. The presumption is meant to protect against spending an endowment too quickly. Although the Drafting Committee believes that the prudence standard of UPMIFA provides appropriate and adequate protection for endowments, the Committee provided the option for states that want to include a mechanical guideline in the statute. A major drawback to any statutory percentage is that it is unresponsive to changes in the rate of inflation or deflation.

Modification of Restrictions on Charitable Funds. UPMIFA clarifies that the doctrines of cy pres and deviation apply to funds held by nonprofit corporations as well as to funds held by charitable trusts. Courts have applied trust law rules to nonprofit corporations in the past, but the Drafting Committee believed that statutory authority for applying these principles to nonprofit corporations would be helpful. UMIFA permitted release of restrictions but left the application of cy pres uncertain. Under UPMIFA, as under trust law, the court will determine whether and how to apply cy pres or deviation and the attorney general will receive notice and have the opportunity to participate in the proceeding. The one addition to existing law is that UPMIFA gives a charity the authority to modify a restriction on a fund that is both old and small. For these funds, the expense of a trip to court will often be prohibitive. By permitting a charity to make an appropriate modification, money is saved for the charitable purposes of the charity. Even with respect to small, old funds, however, the charity must notify the attorney general of the charity’s intended action. Of course, if the attorney general has concerns, he or she can seek the agreement of the charity to change or abandon the modification, and if that fails, can commence a court action to enjoin it. Thus, in all types of modification the attorney general continues to be the protector both of the donor’s intent and of the public’s interest in charitable funds.

Other Organizational Law. For matters not governed by UPMIFA, a charitable organization will continue to be governed by rules applicable to charitable trusts, if it is organized as a trust, or rules applicable to nonprofit corporations, if it is organized as a nonprofit corporation.

Relation to Trust Law. Although UPMIFA applies a number of rules from trust law to institutions organized as nonprofit corporations, in two respects UPMIFA creates rules that do not exist under the common law applicable to trusts. The endowment spending rule of Section 4 and the provision for modifying a small, old fund in subsection (d) of Section 6 have no counterparts in the common law or the UTC. The Drafting Committee believes that these rules could be useful to charities organized as trusts, and the Committee recommends conforming amendments to the UTC and the Principal and Income Act to incorporate these changes into trust law.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Subsection (1). Charitable Purpose. The definition of charitable purpose follows that of UTC § 405 and Restatement (Third) of Trusts § 28 (2003). This long-familiar standard derives from the English Statute of Charitable Uses, enacted in 1601.

Some 17 states have created statutory definitions of charitable purpose for various purposes. See, e.g., 10 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 162.3 (2005) (defining charitable purpose within the Solicitation of Funds for Charitable Purposes Act to include “humane,” “patriotic,” “social welfare and advocacy,” and “civic” purposes). The definition in subsection (1) applies for purposes of this Act and does not affect other definitions of charitable purpose.

Subsection (2). Endowment Fund. An endowment fund is an institutional fund or a part of an institutional fund that is not wholly expendable by the institution on a current basis. A restriction that makes a fund an endowment fund arises from the terms of a gift instrument. If an institution has more than one endowment fund, under Section 3 the institution can manage and invest some or all endowment funds together. Section 4 and Section 6 must be applied to individual funds and cannot be applied to a group of funds that may be managed collectively for investment purposes.

Board-designated funds are institutional funds but not endowment funds. The rules on expenditures and modification of restrictions in this Act do not apply to restrictions that an institution places on an otherwise unrestricted fund that the institution holds for its own benefit. The institution may be able to change these restrictions itself, subject to internal rules and to the fiduciary duties that apply to those that manage the institution.

If an institution transfers assets to another institution, subject to the restriction that the other institution hold the assets as an endowment, then the second institution will hold the assets as an endowment fund.

Subsection (3). Gift Instrument. The term gift instrument refers to the records that establish the terms of a gift and may consist of more than one document. The definition clarifies that the only legally binding restrictions on a gift are the terms set forth in writing.

As used in this definition, "record" is an expansive concept and means a writing in any form, including electronic. The term includes a will, deed, grant, conveyance, agreement, or memorandum, and also includes writings that do not have a donative purpose. For example, under some circumstances the bylaws of the institution, minutes of the board of directors, or canceled checks could be a gift instrument or be one of several records constituting a gift instrument. Although the term can include any of these records, a record will only become a gift instrument if both the donor and the institution were or should have been aware of its terms when the donor made the gift. For example, if a donor sends a contribution to an institution for its general purposes, then the articles of incorporation may be used to clarify those purposes. If, in contrast, the donor sends a letter explaining that the institution should use the contribution for its "educational projects concerning teenage depression," then any funds received in response must be used for that purpose and not for broader purposes otherwise permissible under the articles of incorporation.

Solicitation materials may constitute a gift instrument. For example, a solicitation that suggests in writing that any gifts received pursuant to the solicitation will be held as an endowment may be integrated with other writings and may be considered part of the gift instrument. Whether the terms of the solicitation become part of the gift instrument will depend upon the circumstances, including whether a subsequent writing superseded the terms of the solicitation. Each gift received in response to a solicitation will be subject to any restrictions indicated in the gift instrument pertaining to that gift. For example, if an initial gift establishes an endowment fund, and the charity then solicits additional gifts "to be held as part of the Charity X Endowment Fund," those additional gifts will each be subject to the restriction that the gifts be held as part of that endowment fund.

The term gift instrument includes matching funds provided by an employer or some other person. Whether matching funds are treated as part of the endowment fund or otherwise will depend on the terms of the matching gift.

The term gift instrument also includes an appropriation by a legislature or other public or governmental body for the benefit of an institution.

Subsection (4). Institution. The Act applies generally to institutions organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes. The term includes charitable organizations created as non-profit corporations, unincorporated associations, governmental subdivisions or agencies, or any form of entity, however organized, that is organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes. The term includes a trust organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes, but only if a charity acts as trustee. This approach leaves unchanged the coverage of UMIFA. The exclusion of "individual" from the definition of institution is not intended to exclude a corporation sole.

Although UPMIFA does not apply to all charitable trusts, many of UPMIFA's provisions derive from trust law. Prudent investor standards apply to trustees of charitable trusts in states that have adopted UPIA. Trustees of charitable trusts can use the doctrines of cy pres and deviation to modify trust provisions, and the UTC includes a number of modification provisions. The Uniform Principal and Income Act permits allocation between principal and income to facilitate total-return investing. Charitable trusts not included in UPMIFA, primarily those managed by corporate trustees and individuals, will lose the benefits of UPMIFA's endowment spending rule and the provision permitting a charity to apply cy pres, without court supervision, for modifications to a small, old fund. Enacting jurisdictions may choose to incorporate these rules into existing trust statutes to provide the benefits to charitable funds managed by corporate trustees.

The definition of institution includes governmental organizations that hold funds exclusively for the purposes listed in the definition. A governmental entity created by state law may fall outside the definition on account of the form of organization under which the state created it. Because state arrangements are so varied, creating a definition that encompasses all charitable entities created by states is not feasible. States should consider applying the core principles of UPMIFA to such governmental institutions. For example, the control over a state university may be held by a State Board of Regents. In that situation, the state may have created a governing structure by statute or in the state constitution so that the university is, in effect, privately chartered. The Drafting Committee does not intend to exclude these universities from the definition of institution, but additional state legislation may be necessary to address particular situations.

Subsection (5). Institutional Fund. The term institutional fund includes any fund held by an institution for charitable purposes, whether the fund is expendable currently or subject to restrictions. The term does not include a fund held by a trustee that is not an institution.

Some institutions combine assets from multiple funds for investment purposes, and some institutions invest funds from different institutions in a common fund. Typically each fund is assigned units representing the share value of the individual fund. The assets are invested collectively, permitting more efficient investment and improved diversification of the overall portfolio. The collective fund makes annual distributions to the individual funds based on the units held by each fund. For purposes of Section 3 [and Section 5], the collective fund is considered one institutional fund. Section 4 and Section 6 apply to each fund individually and not to the collective fund.

Assets held by an institution primarily for program-related purposes rather than exclusively for investment are not subject to UPMIFA. For example, a university may purchase land adjacent to its campus for future development. The purchase might not meet prudent investor standards for commercial real estate, but the purchase may be appropriate because the university needs to build a new dormitory. The classroom buildings, administration buildings, and dormitories held by the university all have value as property, but the university does not hold those buildings as financial assets for investment purposes. The Act excludes from the prudent investor norms those assets that a charity uses to conduct its charitable activities, but does not exclude assets that have a tangential tie to the charitable purpose of the institution but are held primarily for investment purposes.

A fund held by an institution is not an institutional fund if any beneficiary of the fund is not an institution. For example, a charitable remainder trust held by a charity as trustee for the benefit of the donor during the donor's lifetime, with the remainder interest held by the charity, is not an institutional fund. However, this subsection treats as an institution a charitable remainder trust that continues to operate for charitable purposes after the termination of the noncharitable interests. The Act will have only a limited effect on a charitable remainder trust that terminates after the noncharitable interest ends. During the period required to complete the distribution of the trust's property, the prudence norm will apply to the actions of the trustee, but the short timeframe will affect investment decision making.

Subsection (6). Person. The Act uses as the definition of person the definition approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. The definition of institution uses the term person, but to be an institution a person must be organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes. A person with a commercial purpose cannot be an institution. Thus, although the definition of person includes "business trust" and "any other . . . commercial entity," the Act does not apply to an entity organized for business purposes and not exclusively for charitable purposes. Further, the definition of person includes trusts, but only trusts managed by charities can be institutional funds. UPMIFA does not apply to trusts managed by corporate trustees or by individual trustees.

If a governing instrument provides that a fund will revert to the donor if, and only if, the institution ceases to exist or the purposes of the fund fail, then the fund will be considered an institutional fund until such contingency occurs.

Subsection (7). Program-Related Asset. Although UPMIFA does not apply to program-related assets, if program-related assets serve, in part, as investments for an institution, then the institution should identify categories for reporting those investments and should establish investment criteria for the investments that are reasonably related to achieving the institution's charitable purposes. For example, a program providing below-market loans to inner-city businesses may be "primarily to accomplish a charitable purpose of the institution" but also can be considered, in part, an investment. The institution should create reasonable credit standards and other guidelines for the program to increase the likelihood that the loans will be repaid.

Subsection (8). Record. This definition was added to clarify that the definition of instrument includes electronic records as defined in Section 2(8) of the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (1999).

15-1-1103. Standard of conduct in managing and investing institutional fund.

(a) Subject to the intent of a donor expressed in a gift instrument, an institution, in managing and investing an institutional fund, shall consider the charitable purposes of the institution and the purposes of the institutional fund.

(b) In addition to complying with the duty of loyalty imposed by law other than this part 11, each person responsible for managing and investing an institutional fund shall manage and invest the institutional fund in good faith and with the care an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would exercise under similar circumstances.

(c) In managing and investing an institutional fund, an institution:

(1) May incur only costs that are appropriate and reasonable in relation to the assets, the purposes of the institution, and the skills available to the institution; and

(2) Shall make a reasonable effort to verify facts relevant to the management and investment of the institutional fund.

(d) An institution may pool two or more institutional funds for purposes of management and investment.

(e) Except as otherwise provided by a gift instrument, the following rules apply:

(1) In managing and investing an institutional fund, the following factors, if relevant, must be considered:

(A) General economic conditions;

(B) The possible effect of inflation or deflation;

(C) The expected tax consequences, if any, of investment decisions or strategies;

(D) The role that each investment or course of action plays within the overall investment portfolio of the institutional fund;

(E) The expected total return from income and the appreciation of investments;

(F) Other resources of the institution;

(G) The needs of the institution and the institutional fund to make distributions and to preserve capital; and

(H) An asset's special relationship or special value, if any, to the charitable purposes of the institution.

(2) Management and investment decisions about an individual asset must be made not in isolation but rather in the context of the institutional fund's portfolio of investments as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the institutional fund and to the institution.

(3) Except as otherwise provided by law other than this part 11, an institution may invest in any kind of property or type of investment consistent with this section.

(4) An institution shall diversify the investments of an institutional fund unless the institution reasonably determines that, because of special circumstances, the purposes of the institutional fund are better served without diversification.

(5) Within a reasonable time after receiving property, an institution shall make and carry out decisions concerning the retention or disposition of the property or to rebalance a portfolio, in order to bring the institutional fund into compliance with the purposes, terms, and distribution requirements of the institution as necessary to meet other circumstances of the institution and the requirements of this part 11.

(6) A person that has special skills or expertise, or is selected in reliance upon the person's representation that the person has special skills or expertise, has a duty to use those skills or that expertise in managing and investing institutional funds.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section adopts the prudence standard for investment decision making. The section directs directors or others responsible for managing and investing the funds of an institution to act as a prudent investor would, using a portfolio approach in making investments and considering the risk and return objectives of the fund. The section lists the factors that commonly bear on decisions in fiduciary investing and incorporates the duty to diversify investments absent a conclusion that special circumstances make a decision not to diversify reasonable. Thus, the section follows modern portfolio theory for investment decision making. Section 3 applies to all funds held by an institution, regardless of whether the institution obtained the funds by gift or otherwise and regardless of whether the funds are restricted.

The Drafting Committee discussed extensively the standard that should govern nonprofit managers. UMIFA states the standard as "ordinary business care and prudence under the facts and circumstances prevailing at the time of the action or decision." Since the decision in Stern v. Lucy Webb Hayes National Training School for Deaconesses, 381 F. Supp. 1003 (1974), the trend has been to hold directors of nonprofit corporations to a standard nominally similar to the corporate standard but with the recognition that the facts and circumstances considered include the fact that the entity is a charity and not a business corporation.

The language of the prudence standard adopted in UPMIFA is derived from the RMNCA and from the prudent investor rule of UPIA. The standard is consistent with the business judgment standard under corporate law, as applied to charitable institutions. That is, a manager operating a charitable organization under the business judgment rule would look to the same factors as those identified by the prudent investor rule. The standard for prudent investment set forth in Section 3 first states the duty of care as articulated in the RMNCA, but provides more specific guidance for those managing and investing institutional funds by incorporating language from UPIA. The criteria derived from UPIA are consistent with good practice under current law applicable to nonprofit corporations.

Trust law norms already inform managers of nonprofit corporations. The Preamble to UPIA explains: "Although the Uniform Prudent Investor Act by its terms applies to trusts and not to charitable corporations, the standards of the Act can be expected to inform the investment responsibilities of directors and officers of charitable corporations." See also, Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule § 379, Comment b, at 190 (1992) (stating that "absent a contrary statute or other provision, the prudent investor rule applies to investment of funds held for charitable corporations."). Trust precedents have routinely been found to be helpful but not binding authority in corporate cases.

The Drafting Committee decided that by adopting language from both the RMNCA and UPIA, UPMIFA could clarify that common standards of prudent investing apply to all charitable institutions. Although the principal trust authorities, UPIA § (2)(a), Restatement (Third) of Trusts § 337, UTC § 804, and Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 174 (prudent administration) use the phrase "care, skill and caution," the Drafting Committee decided to use the more familiar corporate formulation as found in RMNCA. The standard also appears in Sections 3, 4 and 5 of UPMIFA. The Drafting Committee does not intend any substantive change to the UPIA standard and believes that "reasonable care, skill, and caution" are implicit in the term "care" as used in the RMNCA. The Drafting Committee included the detailed provisions from UPIA, because the Committee believed that the greater precision of the prudence norms of the Restatement and UPIA, as compared with UMIFA, could helpfully inform managers of charitable institutions. For an explanation of the Prudent Investor Act, see John H. Langbein, The Uniform Prudent Investor Act and the Future of Trust Investing, 81 Iowa L. Rev. 641 (1996), and for a discussion of the effect UPIA has had on investment decision making, see Max M. Schanzenbach & Robert H. Sitkoff, Did Reform of Prudent Trust Investment Laws Change Trust Portfolio Allocation?, 50 J. L. & Econ. (forthcoming 2007).

Section 3 has incorporated the provisions of UPIA with only a few exceptions. UPIA applies to private trusts and is entirely default law. The settlor of a private trust has complete control over virtually all trust provisions. See UTC § 105. Because UPMIFA applies to charitable organizations, UPMIFA makes the duty of care, the duty to minimize costs, and the duty to investigate mandatory. The duty of loyalty is mandatory under applicable organization law, corporate or trust. Other than these duties, the provisions of Section 3 are default rules. A gift instrument or the governing instruments of an institution can modify these duties, but the charitable purpose doctrine limits the extent to which an institution or a donor can restrict these duties. In addition, subsection (a) of Section 3 reminds the decision maker that the intent of a donor expressed in a gift instrument will control decision making. Further, the decision maker must consider the charitable purposes of the institution and the purposes of the institutional fund for which decisions are being made. These factors are specific to charitable organizations; UPIA § 2(a) states the duty to consider similar factors in the private trust context.

UPMIFA does not include the duty of impartiality, stated in UPIA § 6, because nonprofit corporations do not confront the multiple beneficiaries problem to which the duty is addressed. Under UPIA, a trustee must treat the current beneficiaries and the remainder beneficiaries with due regard to their respective interests, subject to alternative direction from the trust document. A nonprofit corporation typically creates one charity. The institution may serve multiple beneficiaries, but those beneficiaries do not have enforceable rights in the institution in the same way that beneficiaries of a private trust do. Of course, if a charitable trust is created to benefit more than one charity, rather than being created to carry out a charitable purpose, then UPIA will apply the duty of impartiality to that trust.

In other respects, the Drafting Committee made changes to language from UPIA only where necessary to adapt the language for charitable institutions. No material differences are intended. Subsection (e)(1)(D) of Section 3 of UPMIFA does not include a clause that appears at the end of UPIA § 2(c)(4) ("which may include financial assets, interest in closely held enterprises, tangible and intangible personal property, and real property."). The Drafting Committee deemed this clause unnecessary for charitable institutions. The language of subsection (e)(1)(G) reflects a modification of the language of UPIA § (2)(c)(7). Other minor modifications to the UPIA provisions make the language more appropriate for charitable institutions.

The duties imposed by this section apply to those who govern an institution, including directors and trustees, and to those to whom the directors or managers delegate responsibility for investment and management of institutional funds. The standard applies to officers and employees of an institution and to agents who invest and manage institutional funds. Volunteers who work with an institution will be subject to the duties imposed here, but state and federal statutes may provide reduced liability for persons who act without compensation. UPMIFA does not affect the application of those shield statutes.

Subsection (a). Donor Intent and Charitable Purposes. Subsection (a) states the overarching duty to comply with donor intent as expressed in the terms of the gift instrument. The emphasis in the Act on giving effect to donor intent does not mean that the donor can or should control the management of the institution. The other fundamental duty is the duty to consider the charitable purposes of the institution and of the institutional fund in making management and investment decisions. UPIA § 2(a) states a similar duty to consider the purposes of a trust in investing and managing assets of a trust.

Subsection (b). Duty of Loyalty. Subsection (b) reminds those managing and investing institutional funds that the duty of loyalty will apply to their actions, but Section 3 does not state the loyalty standard that applies. The Drafting Committee was concerned, at least nominally, that different standards of loyalty may apply to directors of nonprofit corporations and to trustees of charitable trusts. The RMNCA provides that under the duty of loyalty a director of a nonprofit corporation should act “in a manner the director reasonably believes to be in the best interests of the corporation.” RMNCA § 8.30. The trust law articulation of the loyalty standard uses “sole interests” rather than “best interests.” As the Restatement of Trusts explains, “[t]he trustee is under a duty to the beneficiary to administer the trust solely in the interest of the beneficiary.” Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 170 (1). Although the standards for loyalty, like the standard of care, are merging, see Evelyn Brody, Charitable Governance: What’s Trust Law Got to do With It? Chi.-Kent L. Rev. (2005); John H. Langbein, Questioning the Trust Law Duty of Loyalty: Sole Interest or Best Interest, 114 Yale L.J. 929 (2005), the Drafting Committee concluded that formulating a duty of loyalty provision for UPMIFA was unnecessary. Thus the duty of loyalty under nonprofit corporation law will apply to charities organized as nonprofit corporations, and the duty of loyalty under trust law will apply to charitable trusts.

Subsection (b). Duty of Care. Subsection (b) also applies the duty of care to performance of investment duties. The language derives from § 8.30 of the RMNCA. This subsection states the duty to act in good faith, “with the care an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would exercise under similar circumstances.” Although the language in the RMNCA and in UPMIFA is similar to that of § 8.30 of the Model Business Corporation Act (3d ed. 2002), the standard as applied to persons making decisions for charities is informed by the fact that the institution is a charity and not a business corporation. Thus, in UPMIFA the references to “like position” and “similar circumstances” mean that the charitable nature of the institution affects the decision making of a prudent person acting under the standard set forth in subsection (b). The duty of care involves considering the factors set forth in subsection (e)(1).

Subsection (c)(1). Duty to Minimize Costs. Subsection (c)(1) tracks the language of UPIA § 7 and requires an institution to minimize costs. An institution may prudently incur costs by hiring an investment advisor, but the costs incurred should be appropriate under the circumstances. See UPIA § 7 cmt; Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, cmt. M, at 58 (1992); Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 188 (1959). The duty is consistent with the duty to act prudently under § 8.30 of the RMNCA.

Subsection (c)(2). Duty to Investigate. This subsection incorporates the traditional fiduciary duty to investigate, using language from UPIA § 2(d). The subsection requires persons who make investment and management decisions to investigate the accuracy of the information used in making decisions.

Subsection (d). Pooling Funds. An institution holding more than one institutional fund may find that pooling its funds for investment and management purposes will be economically beneficial. The Act permits pooling for these purposes. The prohibition against commingling no longer prevents pooling funds for investment and management purposes. See UPIA § 3, cmt. (duty to diversify aided by pooling); UPIA § 7, cmt. (pooling to minimize costs); Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Duty to Segregate and Identify Trust Property § 84 (T.D. No. 4 2005). Funds will be considered individually for other purposes of the Act, including for the spending rule for endowment funds of Section 4 and the modification rules of Section 6.

Subsection (e)(1). Prudent Decision Making. Subsection (e)(1) takes much of its language from UPIA § 2(c). In making decisions about whether to acquire or retain an asset, the institution should consider the institution’s mission, its current programs, and the desire to cultivate additional donations from a donor, in addition to factors related more directly to the asset’s potential as an investment.

Subsection (e)(1)(C) reflects the fact that some organizations will invest in taxable investments that may generate unrelated business taxable income for income tax purposes.

Assets held primarily for program-related purposes are not subject to UPMIFA. The management of those assets will continue to be governed by other laws applicable to the institution. Other assets may not be held primarily for program-related purposes but may have both investment purposes and program-related purposes. Subsections (a) and (e)(1)(H) indicate that a prudent decision maker can take into consideration the relationship between an investment and the purposes of the institution and of the institutional fund in making an investment that may have a program-related purpose but not be primarily program-related. The degree to which an institution uses an asset to accomplish a charitable purpose will affect the weight given that factor in a decision to acquire or retain the asset.

Subsection (e)(2). Portfolio Approach. This subsection reflects the use of portfolio theory in modern investment practice. The language comes from UPIA § 2(b), which follows the articulation of the prudent investor standard in Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule § 227(a) (1992).

Subsection (e)(3). Broad Investment Authority. Consistent with the portfolio theory of investment, this subsection permits a broad range of investments. The language derives from UPIA § 2(e).

Section 4 of UMIFA indicated that an institution could invest "without restriction to investments a fiduciary may make." The committee removed this language from subsection (e)(3) as unnecessary, because states no longer have legal lists restricting fiduciary investing to the specific types of investments identified in statutory lists.

Subsection (e)(3) also provides that other law may limit the authority under this subsection. In addition, all of subsection (e) is subject to contrary provisions in a gift instrument, and a gift instrument may restrict the ability to invest in particular assets. For example, the gift instrument for a particular institutional fund might preclude the institution from investing the assets of the fund in companies that produce tobacco products.

In her book, Governing Nonprofit Organizations: Federal and State Law and Regulation 434 (Harv. Univ. Press 2004), Marion R. Fremont-Smith reports that some large charities pledge their endowment funds as security for loans. Subsection (e)(3) permits this sort of debt financing, subject to the guidelines of subsection (e)(1).

Subsection (e)(4). Duty to Diversify. This subsection assumes that prudence requires diversification but permits an institution to determine that nondiversification is appropriate under exceptional circumstances. A decision not to diversify must be based on the needs of the charity and not solely for the benefit of a donor. A decision to retain property in the hope of obtaining additional contributions from the same donor may be considered made for the benefit of the charity, but the appropriateness of that decision will depend on the circumstances. This subsection derives its language from UPIA § 3. See UPIA § 3 cmt. (discussing the rationale for diversification); Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule § 227 (1992).

Subsection (e)(5). Disposing of Unsuitable Assets. This subsection imposes a duty on an institution to review the suitability of retaining property contributed to the institution within a reasonable period of time after the institution receives the property. Subsection (e)(5) requires the institution to make a decision but does not require a particular outcome. The institution may consider a variety of factors in making its decision, and a decision to retain the property either for a period of time or indefinitely may be a prudent decision.

Section 4(2) of UMIFA specifically authorized an institution to retain property contributed by a donor. The comment explained that an institution might retain property in the hope of obtaining additional contributions from the donor. Under UPMIFA the potential for developing additional contributions by retaining property contributed to the institution would be among the "other circumstances" that the institution might consider in deciding whether to retain or dispose of the property. The institution must weigh the potential for obtaining additional contributions with all other factors that affect the suitability of retaining the property in the investment portfolio.

The language of subsection (e)(5) comes from UPIA § 4, which restates Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule § 229 (1992), which adopted language from Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 231 (1959). See UPIA § 4 cmt.

Subsection (e)(6). Special Skills or Expertise. Subsection (e)(6) states the rule provided in UPIA § 2(f) requiring a trustee to use the trustee's own skills and expertise in carrying out the trustee's fiduciary duties. The comment to RMNCA § 8.30 describes the existence of a similar rule under the law of nonprofit corporations. Section 8.30(a)(2) provides that in discharging duties a director must act "with the care an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would exercise under similar circumstances. . . ." The comment explains that "[t]he concept of under similar circumstances' relates not only to the circumstances of the corporation but to the special background, qualifications, and management experience of the individual director and the role the director plays in the corporation." After describing directors chosen for their ability to raise money, the comment notes that “[n]o special skill or expertise should be expected from such directors unless their background or knowledge evidences some special ability.”

The intent of subsection (e)(6) is that a person managing or investing institutional funds must use the person’s own judgment and experience, including any particular skills or expertise, in carrying out the management or investment duties. For example, if a charity names a person as a director in part because the person is a lawyer, the lawyer’s background may allow the lawyer to recognize legal issues in connection with funds held by the charity. The lawyer should identify the issues for the board, but the lawyer is not expected to provide legal advice. A lawyer is not expected to be able to recognize every legal issue, particularly issues outside the lawyer’s area of expertise, simply because the board member is lawyer. See ALI Principles of the Law of Nonprofit Organizations, Preliminary Draft No. 3 (May 12, 2005) § 315 (Duty of Care), cmt. c.

UMIFA contained two provisions that authorized investments in pooled or common investment funds. UMIFA §§ 4(3), 4(4). The Drafting Committee concluded that Section 3(e)(3) of UPMIFA authorizes these investments. The decision not to include the two provisions in UPMIFA implies no disapproval of such investments.

15-1-1104. Appropriation for expenditure of accumulation of endowment fund - rules of construction. (a) Subject to the intent of a donor expressed in the gift instrument, an institution may appropriate for expenditure or accumulate so much of an endowment fund as the institution determines is prudent for the uses, benefits, purposes, and duration for which the endowment fund is established. Unless stated otherwise in the gift instrument, the assets in an endowment fund are donor-restricted assets until appropriated for expenditure by the institution. In making a determination to appropriate or accumulate, the institution shall act in good faith, with the care that an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would exercise under similar circumstances, and shall consider, if relevant, the following factors:

- (1) The duration and preservation of the endowment fund;
  - (2) The purposes of the institution and the endowment fund;
  - (3) General economic conditions;
  - (4) The possible effect of inflation or deflation;
  - (5) The expected total return from income and the appreciation of investments;
  - (6) Other resources of the institution; and
  - (7) The investment policy of the institution.
- (b) To limit the authority to appropriate for expenditure or accumulate under subsection (a) of this section, a gift instrument must specifically state the limitation.
- (c) Terms in a gift instrument designating a gift as an endowment, or a direction or authorization in the gift instrument to use only “income”, “interest”, “dividends”, or “rents, issues, or profits”, or “to preserve the principal intact”, or words of similar import:
- (1) Create an endowment fund of permanent duration unless other language in the gift instrument limits the duration or purpose of the endowment fund; and
  - (2) Do not otherwise limit the authority to appropriate for expenditure or accumulate under subsection (a) of this section.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section revises the provision in UMIFA that permitted the expenditure of appreciation of an endowment fund to the extent the fund had appreciated in value above the fund’s historic dollar value. UMIFA defined historic dollar value to mean all contributions to the fund, valued at the time of contribution. Instead of using historic dollar value as a limitation, UPMIFA applies a more carefully articulated prudence standard to the process of making decisions about expenditures from an endowment fund. The expenditure rule of Section 4 applies only to the extent that a donor and an institution have not reached some other agreement about spending from an endowment. If a gift instrument sets forth specific requirements for spending, then the charity must comply with those requirements. However, if the gift instrument uses more general language, for example directing the charity to "hold the fund as an endowment" or "retain principal and spend income," then Section 4 provides a rule of construction to guide the charity.

Prior to the promulgation of UMIFA, "income" for trust accounting purposes meant interest and dividends but not capital gains, whether or not realized. Many institutions assumed that trust accounting principles applied to charities organized as nonprofit corporations, and the rules limited the institutions' ability to invest their endowment funds effectively. UMIFA addressed this problem by construing "income" in gift instruments to include a prudent amount of capital gains, both realized and unrealized. Under UMIFA an institution could spend appreciation in addition to spending income determined under trust accounting rules. This rule of construction likely carried out the intent of the donor better than a rule limiting spending to trust accounting income, while permitting the charity to invest in a manner that could generate better returns for the fund.

UPMIFA also applies a rule of construction to terms like "income" or "endowment." The assumption in the Act is that a donor who uses one of these terms intends to create a fund that will generate sufficient gains to be able to make ongoing distributions from the fund while at the same time preserving the purchasing power of the fund. Because historic dollar value under UMIFA was a number fixed in time, the use of that approach may not have adequately captured the intent of a donor who wanted the endowment fund to continue to maintain its value in current dollars. UPMIFA takes a different approach, directing the institution to determine spending based on the total assets of the endowment fund rather than determining spending by adding a prudent amount of appreciation to trust accounting income.

UPMIFA requires the persons making spending decisions for an endowment fund to focus on the purposes of the endowment fund as opposed to the purposes of the institution more generally, as was the case under UMIFA. When the institution considers the purposes and duration of the fund, the institution will give priority to the donor's general intent that the fund be maintained permanently. Although the Act does not require that a specific amount be set aside as "principal," the Act assumes that the charity will act to preserve "principal" (i.e., to maintain the purchasing power of the amounts contributed to the fund) while spending "income" (i.e. making a distribution each year that represents a reasonable spending rate, given investment performance and general economic conditions). Thus, an institution should monitor principal in an accounting sense, identifying the original value of the fund (the historic dollar value) and the increases in value necessary to maintain the purchasing power of the fund.

Subsection (a). Expenditure of Endowment Funds. Subsection (a) uses the RMNCA articulation of the standard of care for decision making under Section 4. The change in language does not reflect a substantive change. The comment to Section 3 more fully describes that standard of care.

Section 4 permits expenditures from an endowment fund to the extent the institution determines that the expenditures are prudent after considering the factors listed in subsection (a). These factors emphasize the importance of the intent of the donor, as expressed in a gift instrument. Section 4 looks to written documents as evidence of donor's intent and does not require an institution to rely on oral expressions of intent. By requiring written evidence of intent, the Act protects reliance by the donor and the institution on the written terms of a donative agreement. Informal conversations may be misremembered and may be subject to multiple interpretations. Of course, oral expressions of intent may guide an institution in further carrying out a donor's wishes and in understanding a donor's intent.

The factors in subsection (a) require attention to the purposes of the institution and the endowment fund, economic conditions, and present and reasonably anticipated resources of the institution. As under UMIFA, determinations under Section 4 do not depend on the characterization of assets as income or principal and are not limited to the amount of income and unrealized appreciation. The authority in Section 4 is permissive, however, and an institution organized as a trust may continue to make spending decisions under trust accounting principles so long as doing so is prudent.

Institutions have operated effectively under UMIFA and have operated more conservatively than the historic dollar value rule would have permitted. Institutions have little incentive to maximize allowable spending. Good practice has been to provide for modest expenditures while maintaining the purchasing power of a fund. Institutions have followed this practice even though UMIFA (1) does not require an institution to maintain a fund's purchasing power and (2) does allow an institution to spend any amounts in a fund above historic dollar value, subject to the prudence standard. The Drafting Committee concluded that eliminating historic dollar value and providing institutions with more discretion would not lead to depletion of endowment funds. Instead, UPMIFA should encourage institutions to establish a spending policy that will be responsive to short-term fluctuations in the value of the fund. Section 4 allows an institution to maintain appropriate levels of expenditures in times of economic downturn or economic strength. In some years, accumulation rather than spending will be prudent, and in other years an institution may appropriately make expenditures even if a fund has not generated investment return that year.

Several levels of safeguard exist to prevent an institution from depleting an endowment fund or diverting assets from the purposes for which the fund was created. In comparison with UMIFA, UPMIFA provides greater direction to the institution with respect to making a prudent determination about spending from an endowment. UMIFA told the decision maker to consider "long and short term needs of the institution in carrying out its educational, religious, charitable, or other eleemosynary purposes, its present and anticipated financial requirements, expected total return on its investments, price level trends, and general economic conditions." UPMIFA clarifies that in making spending decisions the institution should attempt to ensure that the value of the fund endures while still providing that some amounts be spent for the purposes of the endowment fund. In UPMIFA prudent decision making emphasizes the endowment aspect of the fund, rather than the overall purposes or needs of the institution.

In addition to the guidance provided by Section 4, other safeguards exist. Donors can restrict gifts and can provide specific instructions to donee institutions regarding appropriate uses for assets contributed. Within institutions, fiduciary duties govern the persons making decisions on expenditures. Those persons must operate both with the best interests of the institution in mind and in keeping with the intent of donors. If an institution diverts an institutional fund from the charitable purposes of the institution, the state attorney general can enforce the charitable interests of the public. By relying on these safeguards while providing institutions with adequate discretion to make appropriate expenditures, the Act creates a standard that takes into consideration the diversity of the charitable sector. The committee expects that accumulated experience with such spending formulas will continue to inform institutional practice under the Act.

Distinguishing Legal and Accounting Standards. Deleting historic dollar value does not transform any portion of an endowment fund into unrestricted assets from a legal standpoint. An endowment fund is restricted because of the donor's intent that the fund be restricted by the prudent spending rule, that the fund not be spent in the current year, and that the fund continue to maintain its value for a long time. Regardless of the treatment of endowment fund from an accounting standpoint, legally an endowment fund should not be considered unrestricted. Subsection (a) states that endowment funds will be legally restricted until the institution appropriates funds for expenditure. The UMIFA statutes in Utah and Maine contain similar language. 13 Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 13 § 4106 (West 2005); Utah Code Ann. 1953 § 13-29-3 (2005). See, also, advisory published by Mass. Attorney General, "The Attorney General's Position on FASB Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 117, paragraph 22 and Related G.L.C. 180A Issues" (January 2004) <http://www.ago.state.ma.us/filelibrary/fasb.pdf> (last visited May 22, 2006) (concerning the treatment of endowments as legally restricted assets).

The term "endowment fund" includes funds that may last in perpetuity but also funds that are created to last for a fixed term of years or until the institution achieves a specified objective. Section 4 requires the institution to consider the intended duration of the fund in making determinations about spending. For example, if a donor directs that a fund be spent over 20 years, Section 4 will guide the institution in making distribution decisions. The institution would amortize the fund over 20 years rather than try to maintain the fund in perpetuity. For an endowment fund of limited duration, spending at a rate higher than rates typically used for endowment spending will be both necessary and prudent.

Subsection (c). Rule of Construction. Donor's intent must be respected in the process of making decisions to expend endowment funds. Section 4 does not allow an institution to convert an endowment fund into a non-endowment fund nor does the section allow the institution to ignore a donor's intent that a fund be maintained as an endowment. Rather, subsection (c) provides rules of construction to assist institutions in interpreting donor's intent. Subsection (c) assumes that if a donor wants an institution to spend "only the income" from a fund, the donor intends that the fund both support current expenditures and be preserved permanently. The donor is unlikely to be concerned about designation of particular returns as "income" or "principal" under accounting principles. Rather the donor is more likely to assume that the institution will use modern total-return investing techniques to generate enough funds to distribute while maintaining the long-term viability of the fund. Subsection (c) is an intent effectuating provision that provides default rules to construe donor's intent.

As subsection (b) explains, a donor who wants to specify particular spending guidelines can do so. For example, a donor might require that a charity spend between three and five percent of an endowed gift each year, regardless of investment performance or other factors. Because the charity agrees to the restriction in accepting the gift, the restriction will govern spending decisions by the charity. Another donor might want to limit expenditures to trust accounting income and not want the institution to be able to expend appreciation. An instruction to "pay only the income" will not be specific enough, but an instruction to "pay only interest and dividend income earned by the fund and not to make other distributions of the kind authorized by Section 4 of UPMIFA" should be sufficient. If a donor indicates that the rules on investing or expenditures under Section 4 do not apply to a particular fund, then as a practical matter the institution will probably invest the fund separately. Thus, a decision by a donor to require fund specific expenditure rules will likely also have consequences in the way the institution invests the fund.

Retroactive Application of the Rule of Construction. A constructional rule resolves an ambiguity, in this case, because donors use words like endowment or income without specific directions regarding the intended meaning. Changing a statutory constructional rule does not change the underlying intent, and instead changes the way an ambiguity is resolved, in an attempt to increase the likelihood of giving effect to the intent of most donors.

If a donor has stated in a gift instrument specific directions as to spending, then the institution must respect those wishes, but many donors do not give precise instructions about how to spend endowment funds. In Section 4 UPMIFA provides guidance for giving effect to a donor's intent when the donor has not been specific. Like Section 3 of UMIFA, Section 4 of UPMIFA is a rule of construction, so it does not violate either donor intent or the Constitution.

The issue of whether to apply a rule of construction retroactively was considered in connection with UMIFA. When the New Hampshire legislature considered UMIFA, the Senate asked the New Hampshire Supreme Court for an opinion regarding whether UMIFA, if adopted, would violate a provision of the state constitution prohibiting retrospective laws, and also whether the statute would encroach on the functions of the judicial branch. The opinion answered no to both questions. Opinion of the Justices, Request of the Senate No. 6667, 113 N.H. 287, 306 A.2d 55 (1973).

More recently the Colorado Supreme Court considered the retroactive application of another constructional statute, one that deems the designation of a spouse as the beneficiary of a life insurance policy to be revoked in a case in which the marriage was dissolved after the naming of the spouse as beneficiary. In re Estate of DeWitt, 54 P. 3d 849 (Colo. 2002). In holding that retroactive application of the statute did not violate the Contracts Clause, the court cited approvingly from a statement prepared by the Joint Editorial Board for Uniform Trusts and Estates Acts (JEB). JEB Statement Regarding the Constitutionality of Changes in Default Rules as Applied to PreExisting Documents, 17 Am. Coll. Tr. & Est. Couns. Notes 184 app. II (1991).

The JEB Statement explains that the purpose of the anti-retroactivity norm is to protect a transferor who relies on existing rules of law. By definition, however, rules of construction apply only in situations in which a transferor did not spell out his or her intent and hence did not rely on the then-current rule of construction. See also In re Gardner's Trust, 266 Minn. 127, 132, 123 N.W. 2d 69, 73 (1963) ("[I]t is doubtful whether the testatrix had any clear intention in mind at the time the will was executed. It is equally plausible that if she had thought about it at all she would have desired to have the dividends go where the law required them to go at the time they were received by the trustee.") (Uniform Principal and Income Act).

Non-retroactivity would produce serious practical problems: If the Act were not retroactive, a charity would need to keep two sets of books for each endowment fund created before the enactment of UPMIFA, if new funds were added after the enactment. The burden that such a rule would impose is out of proportion to the benefit sought.

Subsection (d). Rebuttable Presumption of Imprudence. The Drafting Committee debated at length whether to include a presumption of imprudence for spending above a fixed percentage of the value of the fund. The Drafting Committee decided to include a presumption in the Act in brackets, as an option for states to consider, and to include in these Comments a discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of including a presumption in the Act. (Colorado did not adopt the provisions contained in subsection (d).)

Some who commented on the Act viewed the presumption as linked to the retroactive application of the rule of construction of subsection (c). A donor who contributed to an endowment fund under UMIFA may have assumed that the historic dollar value of the gift would be subject to a no-spending rule under the statute. Because UPMIFA removes the concept of historic dollar value, the bracketed presumption of imprudence would assure the donor that spending from an endowment fund will be so limited.

Those in favor of the presumption of imprudence argued that the presumption would curb the temptation that a charity might have to spend endowment assets too rapidly. Although the presumption would be rebuttable, and spending above the identified percentage might, in some years and for some charities, be prudent, institutions would likely be reluctant to authorize spending above seven percent. In addition, the presumption would give the attorney general a benchmark of sorts.

A variety of considerations cut against including a presumption of imprudence in the statute. A fixed percentage in the statute might be perceived as a safe harbor that could lead institutions to spend more than is prudent. Although the provision should not be read to imply that spending below seven percent will be considered prudent, some charities might interpret the statute in that way. Decision makers might be pressured to spend up to the percentage, and in doing so spend more than is prudent, without adequate review of the prudence factors as required under the Act.

Perhaps the biggest problem with including a presumption in the statute is the difficulty of picking a number that will be appropriate in view of the range of institutions and charitable purposes and the fact that economic conditions will change over time. Under recent economic conditions, a spending rate of seven percent is too high for most funds, but in a period of high inflation, seven percent might be too low. In making a prudent decision regarding how much to spend from an endowment fund, each institution must consider a variety of factors, including the particular purposes of the fund, the wishes of the donors, changing economic factors, and whether the fund will receive future donations.

Whether or not a statute includes the presumption, institutions must remember that prudence controls decision making. Each institution must make decisions on expenditures based on the circumstances of the particular charity.

Application of Presumption. For a state wishing to adopt a presumption of imprudence, subsection (d) provides language. Under subsection (d), a rebuttable presumption of imprudence will arise if expenditures in one year exceed seven percent of the assets of an endowment fund. The subsection applies a rolling average of three or more years in determining the value of the fund for purposes of calculating the seven-percent amount. An institution can rebut the presumption of imprudence if circumstances in a particular year make expenditures above that amount prudent. The concept and the language for the presumption of imprudence comes from Mass. Gen. L. ch. 180A, § 2 (2004). Massachusetts enacted this rule in 1975 as part of its UMIFA statute. New Mexico adopted the same presumption in 1978. N.M.S.A. § 46-9-2 (C) (2004). New Hampshire has a similar provision. N.H. Rev. Stat. § 292-B:6.

The period that a charity uses to calculate the presumption (three or more years) and the frequency of valuation (at least quarterly) will be binding in any determination of whether the presumption applies. For example, if a charity values an endowment fund on a quarterly basis and averages the quarterly values over three years to determine the fair market value of the fund for purposes calculating seven percent of the fund, the charity's choices of three years as a smoothing period and quarterly as a valuation period cannot be challenged. If the charity makes an appropriation that is less than seven percent of this value, then the presumption of imprudence does not arise even if the appropriation would exceed seven percent of the value of the fund calculated based on monthly valuations averaged over five years.

If sufficient evidence establishes, by the preponderance of the evidence, the facts necessary to raise the presumption of imprudence, then the institution will have to carry the burden of production of (i.e., the burden of going forward with) other evidence that would tend to demonstrate that its decision was prudent. The existence of the presumption does not shift the burden of persuasion to the charity.

Expenditures from an endowment fund may include distributions for charitable purposes and amounts used for the management and administration of the fund, including annual charges for fundraising. The value of a fund, as calculated for purposes of determining the seven percent amount, will reflect increases due to contributions and investment gains and decreases due to distributions and investment losses. The seven percent figure includes charges for fundraising and administrative expenses other than investment management expenses. All costs or fees associated with an endowment fund are factors that prudent decision makers consider. High costs or fees of investment management could be considered imprudent regardless of whether spending exceeds seven percent of the fund's value.

The presumption of imprudence does not create an automatic safe harbor. Expenditures at six percent might well be imprudently high. See James P. Garland, The Fecundity of Endowments and Long-Duration Trusts, The Journal of Portfolio Management (2005). Evidence reviewed by the Drafting Committee suggests that at present few funds can sustain spending at a rate above five percent. See Roger G. Ibbotson & Rex A. Sinquefeld, Stocks, Bonds, Bills, and Inflation: Historical Returns (1926-1987) (Research Foundation of the Institute of Chartered Financial Analysts, 1989). Indeed, under current conditions five percent can be too high. See Joel C. Dobris, Why Five? The Strange, Magnetic, and Mesmerizing Affect of the Five Percent Unitrust and Spending Rate on Settlers, Their Advisers, and Retirees, 40 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 39 (2005). Further, spending at a lower rate, particularly in the early years of an endowment, may result in greater distributions over time. See DeMarche Associates, Inc., Spending Policies and Investment Planning for Foundations: A Structure for Determining a Foundation's Asset Mix (Council on Foundations: 3d ed. 1999). A presumption of imprudence can serve as a reminder that spending at too high a rate will jeopardize the long-term nature of an endowment fund. If an endowment fund is intended to continue permanently, the institution should take special care to limit annual spending to a level that protects the purchasing power of the fund.

Subsection (d) provides that the terms of the gift instrument can provide additional spending authority. For example, if a gift instrument directs that an institution expend a fund over a ten-year period, exhausting the fund after ten years, spending at a rate higher than seven percent will be necessary.

Subsection (d) does not require an institution to spend a minimum amount each year. The prudence standard and the needs of the institution will supply sufficient guidance regarding whether to accumulate rather than to spend in a particular year.

Spending above seven percent in any one year will not necessarily be imprudent. For some endowment funds fluctuating spending rates may be appropriate. Although the Act does not apply the percentage for the presumption on a rolling basis (e.g., 21 percent over three years), some endowment funds may prudently spend little or nothing in some years and more than seven percent in other years. For example, a charity planning a construction project might decide to spend nothing from an endowment for three years and then in the fourth year might spend 20 percent of the value of the fund for construction costs. The decision to accumulate in years one through three and then to spend 20 percent in the fourth year might be prudent for the charity, depending on the other factors. The charity should maintain adequate records during the accumulation period and should document the decision-making process in the fourth year to be able to meet the burden of production associated with the presumption. Another charity might prudently spend 20 percent in year one and nothing for the following three years. That charity would also need to document the decision-making process through which the decision to spend occurred and maintain records explaining why the decision was prudent under the circumstances.

A charity might establish a "capital replacement fund" designed to provide funds to the institution for repair or replacement of major items of equipment. Disbursements from such a fund will likely fluctuate, with limited expenditures in some years and big expenditures in others. The fund would not exhibit a uniform spending rate. Indeed, an advantage of a capital replacement fund is the ability to absorb a significant capital expenditure in a single year without a negative impact on the operating budget of the institution. Disbursements might average five percent per year but would vary, with spending in some years more and in some years less. Even if this fund is an endowment fund subject to Section 4, spending above seven percent in a particular year could well be prudent. Subsection (d) does not preclude spending above seven percent.

A charity creating a capital replacement fund or a building fund might choose to adopt spending rules for the fund that would not be subject to UPMIFA. Specific donor intent can supersede the rules of UPMIFA. If the charity creates a gift instrument that establishes appropriate rules on spending for the fund, and if donors agree to those restrictions, then the UPMIFA rules on spending, including the bracketed presumption, will not apply.

Institutions with Limited Investment and Spending Experience. Several attorneys general and other charity officials raised concerns about whether small institutions would be able to adjust to a spending rule based solely on prudence, without the bright-line guidance of historic dollar value. Some charity regulators who spoke with the Drafting Committee noted that large institutions have sophisticated investment strategies, access to good investment advisors, and experience with spending rules that maintain purchasing power for endowment funds. For these institutions, the rules of UPMIFA should work well. For smaller institutions, however, the state regulators thought that additional guidance could be helpful. After discussing strategies to address this concern, the Drafting Committee decided to include in these comments an additional optional provision that a state could choose to include in its UPMIFA statute.

The optional provision focuses on institutions with endowment funds valued, in the aggregate, at less than $2,000,000. The number is in brackets to indicate that it could be set higher or lower. The number was chosen to address the concern of the state regulators that some small charities might be more likely to spend imprudently than large charities. The Drafting Committee selected $2,000,000 as the value that might include most unsophisticated institutions but would not be overinclusive.

The optional provision creates a notification requirement for an institution with a small endowment that plans to spend below historic dollar value. If an institution subject to the provision decides to appropriate an amount that would cause the value of its endowment funds to drop below the aggregate historic dollar value for all of its endowment funds, then the institution will have to notify the attorney general before proceeding with the expenditure. The provision does not require that the institution obtain the approval of the attorney general before making the distribution. Rather, the notification requirement gives the attorney general the opportunity to take a closer look at the institution and its spending decision, to educate the institution on prudent decision making for endowment funds, and to intervene if the attorney general determines that the spending would be imprudent for the institution. Although the Drafting Committee thinks that the prudence standard in UPMIFA provides adequate guidance to all institutions within the scope of the Act, if a state chooses to adopt a notification provision for institutions with small endowments, the Drafting Committee recommends the following language:

(-) If an institution has endowment funds with an aggregate value of less than [$2,000,000], the institution shall notify the [Attorney General] at least [60 days] prior to an appropriation for expenditure of an amount that would cause the value of the institution's endowment funds to fall below the aggregate historic dollar value of the institution's endowment funds, unless the expenditure is permitted or required under law other than this [act] or in the gift instrument. For purposes of this subsection, "historic dollar value" means the aggregate value in dollars of (i) each endowment fund at the time it became an endowment fund, (ii) each subsequent donation to the fund at the time the donation is made, and (iii) each accumulation made pursuant to a direction in the applicable gift instrument at the time the accumulation is added to the fund. The institution's determination of historic dollar value made in good faith is conclusive.

15-1-1105. Delegation of management and investment functions. (a) Subject to any specific limitation set forth in a gift instrument or in law other than this part 11, an institution may delegate to an external agent the management and investment of an institutional fund to the extent that an institution could prudently delegate under the circumstances. An institution shall act in good faith, with the care that an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would exercise under similar circumstances, in:

- (1) Selecting an agent;
  - (2) Establishing the scope and terms of the delegation, consistent with the purposes of the institution and the institutional fund; and
  - (3) Periodically reviewing the agent's actions in order to monitor the agent's performance and compliance with the scope and terms of the delegation.
- (b) In performing a delegated function, an agent owes a duty to the institution to exercise reasonable care to comply with the scope and terms of the delegation.
- (c) An institution that complies with subsection (a) of this section is not liable for the decisions or actions of an agent to which the function was delegated.
- (d) By accepting delegation of a management or investment function from an institution that is subject to the laws of this state, an agent submits to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state in all proceedings arising from or related to the delegation or the performance of the delegated function.
- (e) An institution may delegate management and investment functions to its committees, officers, or employees as authorized by law of this state other than this part 11.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The prudent investor standard in Section 4 presupposes the power to delegate. For some types of investment, prudence requires diversification, and diversification may best be accomplished through the use of pooled investment vehicles that entail delegation. The Drafting Committee decided to put Section 5 in brackets because many states already provide sufficient authority to delegate authority through other statutes. If such authority exists, then an enacting state should enact UPMIFA without Section 5. Enacting delegation rules that duplicate existing rules could be confusing and might create conflicts. For charitable trusts, UPIA provides the same delegation rules as those in Section 5. For nonprofit corporations, nonprofit corporation statutes often provide comparable rules. A state enacting UPMIFA must be certain that its laws authorize delegation, either through other statutes or by enacting Section 5.

Section 5 incorporates the delegation rule found in UPIA § 9, updating the delegation rules in UMIFA § 5. Section 5 permits the decision makers in an institution to delegate management and investment functions to external agents if the decision makers exercise reasonable skill, care, and caution in selecting the agent, defining the scope of the delegation and reviewing the performance of the agent. In some circumstances, the scope of the delegation may include redelegation. For example, an institution may select an investment manager to assist with investment decisions. The delegation may include the authority to redelegate to investment managers with expertise in particular investment areas. All decisions to delegate require the exercise of reasonable care, skill, and caution in selecting, instructing, and monitoring agents. Further, decision makers cannot delegate the authority to make decisions concerning expenditures and can only delegate management and investment functions. Subsection (c) protects decision makers who comply with the requirement for proper delegation from liability for actions or decisions of the agents. In making decisions concerning delegation, the institution must be mindful of Section 3(c)(1) of UPMIFA, the provision that directs the institution to incur only reasonable costs in managing and investing an institutional fund.

Section 5 does not address issues of internal delegation and potential liability for internal delegation, and subsection (c) does not affect laws that govern personal liability of directors or trustees for matters outside the scope of Section 5. Directors will look to nonprofit corporation laws for these rules, while trustees will look to trust law. See, e.g., RMNCA, § 8.30(b) (permitting directors to rely on information prepared by an officer or employee of the institution if the director reasonably believes the officer or employee to be reliable and competent in the matters presented).

The language of subsection (c) is similar to that of UPIA § 9(c) and RMNCA § 8.30(d). The decision not to include the terms “beneficiaries” or “members” in subsection (c) does not indicate a decision that this section does not create immunity from claims brought by beneficiaries or members. Instead, a decision maker who complies with section 5 will be protected from any liability resulting from actions or decisions made by an external agent.

Subsection (d) creates personal jurisdiction over the agent. This subsection is not a choice of law rule.

Subsection (e) notes that law other than this Act governs internal delegation. Section 5 of UMIFA included internal delegation as well as external delegation, due to a concern at that time that trust law concepts might govern internal delegation in nonprofit corporations. With the widespread adoption of nonprofit corporation statutes, that concern no longer exists. The decision not to address internal delegation in UPMIFA does not suggest that a governing board of a nonprofit corporation cannot delegate to committees, officers, or employees. Rather, a nonprofit corporation must look to other law, typically a nonprofit corporation statute, for the rules governing internal delegation.

15-1-1106. Release or modification of restrictions on management, investment, or purpose. (a) If the donor consents in a record, an institution may release or modify, in whole or in part, a restriction contained in a gift instrument on the management, investment, or purpose of an institutional fund. A release or modification may not allow an institutional fund to be used for a purpose other than a charitable purpose of the institution.

(b) The court, upon application of an institution, may modify a restriction contained in a gift instrument regarding the management or investment of an institutional fund if the restriction has become impracticable or wasteful, if it impairs the management or investment of the institutional fund, or if, because of circumstances not anticipated by the donor, a modification of a restriction will further the purposes of the institutional fund. The institution shall notify the attorney general of the application, and the attorney general must be given an opportunity to be heard. To the extent practicable, any modification must be made in accordance with the donor’s probable intention.

(c) If a particular charitable purpose or a restriction contained in a gift instrument on the use of an institutional fund becomes unlawful, impracticable, impossible to achieve, or wasteful, the court, upon application of an institution, may modify the purpose of the institutional fund or the restriction on the use of the institutional fund in a manner consistent with the charitable purposes expressed in the gift instrument. The institution shall notify the attorney general of the application, and the attorney general must be given an opportunity to be heard.

(d) If an institution determines that a restriction contained in a gift instrument on the management, investment, or purpose of an institutional fund is unlawful, impracticable, impossible to achieve, or wasteful, the institution, sixty days after notification to the attorney general, may release or modify the restriction, in whole or part, if:

(1) The institutional fund, subject to the restriction, has a total value of less than one hundred thousand dollars; except that the dollar limit established in this paragraph (1) shall be adjusted for inflation in accordance with the annual percentage change in the United States department of labor, bureau of labor statistics, consumer price index for Denver-Boulder-Greeley, all items, all urban consumers, or its successor index. On or before January 1, 2010, and each even-numbered year thereafter, the attorney general shall calculate the adjusted dollar amount for the next two-year cycle using inflation for the prior two calendar years as of the date of the calculation. The adjusted exemption shall be rounded upward to the nearest one hundred dollar increment. The attorney general shall certify the amount of the adjustment for the next two-year cycle and shall publish the amount on the attorney general's web site.

(2) More than twenty years have elapsed since the institutional fund was established; and

(3) The institution uses the property in a manner consistent with the charitable purposes expressed in the gift instrument.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Section 6 expands the rules on releasing or modifying restrictions that are found in Section 7 of UMIFA. Subsection (a) restates the rule from UMIFA allowing the release of a restriction with donor consent. Subsections (b) and (c) make clear that an institution can always ask a court to apply equitable deviation or cy pres to modify or release a restriction, under appropriate circumstances. Subsection (d), a new provision, permits an institution to apply cy pres on its own for small funds that have existed for a substantial period of time, after giving notice to the state attorney general.

Although UMIFA stated that it did not "limit the application of the doctrine of cy pres", UMIFA § 7(d), what that statement meant under the Act was unclear. UMIFA itself appeared to permit only a release of a restriction and not a modification. That all-or-nothing approach did not adequately protect donor intent. See Yale Univ. v. Blumenthal, 621 A.2d 1304 (Conn. 1993). By expressly including deviation and cy pres, UPMIFA requires an institution to seek modifications that are "in accordance with the donor's probable intention" for deviation and "in a manner consistent with the charitable purposes expressed in the gift instrument" for cy pres.

Individual Funds. The rules on modification require that the institution, or a court applying a court-ordered doctrine, review each institutional fund separately. Although an institution may manage institutional funds collectively, for purposes of this Section each fund must be considered individually.

Subsection (a). Donor Release. Subsection (a) permits the release of a restriction if the donor consents. A release with donor consent cannot change the charitable beneficiary of the fund. Although the donor has the power to consent to a release of a restriction, this section does not create a power in the donor that will cause a federal tax problem for the donor. The gift to the institution is a completed gift for tax purposes, the property cannot be diverted from the charitable beneficiary, and the donor cannot redirect the property to another use by the charity. The donor has no retained interest in the fund.

Subsection (b). Equitable Deviation. Subsection (b) applies the rule of equitable deviation, adapting the language of UTC § 412 to this section. See also Restatement (Third) of Trusts § 66 (2003). Under the deviation doctrine, a court may modify restrictions on the way an institution manages or administers a fund in a manner that furthers the purposes of the fund. Deviation implements the donor's intent. A donor commonly has a predominating purpose for a gift and, secondarily, an intent that the purpose be carried out in a particular manner. Deviation does not alter the purpose but rather modifies the means in order to carry out the purpose.

Sometimes deviation is needed on account of circumstances unanticipated when the donor created the restriction. In other situations the restriction may impair the management or investment of the fund. Modification of the restriction may permit the institution to carry out the donor's purposes in a more effective manner. A court applying deviation should attempt to follow the donor's probable intention in deciding how to modify the restriction. Consistent with the doctrine of equitable deviation in trust law, subsection (b) does not require an institution to notify donors of the proposed modification. Good practice dictates notifying any donors who are alive and can be located with a reasonable expenditure of time and money. Consistent with the doctrine of deviation under trust law, the institution must notify the attorney general who may choose to participate in the court proceeding. The attorney general protects donor intent as well as the public's interest in charitable assets. Attorney general is in brackets in the Act because in some states another official enforces the law of charities.

Subsection (c). Cy Pres. Subsection (c) applies the rule of cy pres from trust law, authorizing the court to modify the purpose of an institutional fund. The term "modify" encompasses the release of a restriction as well as an alteration of a restriction and also permits a court to order that the fund be paid to another institution. A court can apply the doctrine of cy pres only if the restriction in question has become unlawful, impracticable, impossible to achieve, or wasteful. This standard, which comes from UTC § 413, updates the circumstances under which cy pres may be applied by adding “wasteful” to the usual common law articulation of the doctrine. Any change must be made in a manner consistent with the charitable purposes expressed in the gift instrument. See also Restatement (Third) of Trusts § 67 (2003). Consistent with the doctrine of cy pres, subsection (c) does not require an institution seeking cy pres to notify donors. Good practice will be to notify donors whenever possible. As with deviation, the institution must notify the attorney general who must have the opportunity to be heard in the proceeding.

Subsection (d). Modification of Small, Old Funds. Subsection (d) permits an institution to release or modify a restriction according to cy pres principles but without court approval if the amount of the institutional fund involved is small and if the institutional fund has been in existence for more than 20 years. The rationale is that under some circumstances a restriction may no longer make sense but the cost of a judicial cy pres proceeding will be too great to warrant a change in the restriction. The Drafting Committee discussed at length the parameters for allowing an institution to apply cy pres without court supervision. The Committee drafted subsection (d) to balance the needs of an institution to serve its charitable purposes efficiently with the policy of enforcing donor intent. The Committee concluded that an institutional fund with a value of $25,000 or less is sufficiently small that the cost of a judicial proceeding will be out of proportion to its protective purpose. The Committee included a requirement that the institutional fund be in existence at least 20 years, as a further safeguard for fidelity to donor intent. The 20-year period begins to run from the date of inception of the fund and not from the date of each gift to the fund. The amount and the number of years have been placed in brackets to signal to an enacting jurisdiction that it may wish to designate a higher or lower figure. Because the amount should reflect the cost of a judicial proceeding to obtain a modification, the number may be higher in some states and lower in others.

As under judicial cy pres, an institution acting under subsection (d) must change the restriction in a manner that is in keeping with the intent of the donor and the purpose of the fund. For example, if the value of a fund is too small to justify the cost of administration of the fund as a separate fund, the term “wasteful” would allow the institution to combine the fund with another fund with similar purposes. If a fund has been created for nursing scholarships and the institution closes its nursing school, the institution might appropriately decide to use the fund for other scholarships at the institution. In using the authority granted under subsection (d), the institution must determine which alternative use for the fund reasonably approximates the original intent of the donor. The institution cannot divert the fund to an entirely different use. For example, the fund for nursing scholarships could not be used to build a football stadium.

An institution seeking to modify a provision under subsection (d) must notify the attorney general of the planned modification. The institution must wait 60 days before proceeding; the attorney general may take action if the proposed modification appears inappropriate.

Notice to Donors. The Drafting Committee decided not to require notification of donors under subsections (b), (c), and (d). The trust law rules of equitable deviation and cy pres do not require donor notification and instead depend on the court and the attorney general to protect donor intent and the public’s interest in charitable assets.

With regard to subsection (d), the Drafting Committee concluded that an institution should not be required to give notice to donors. Subsection (d) can only be used for an old and small fund. Locating a donor who contributed to the fund more than 20 years earlier may be difficult and expensive. If multiple donors each gave a small amount to create a fund 20 years earlier, the task of locating all of those donors would be harder still. The Drafting Committee concluded that an institution’s concern for donor relations would serve as a sufficient incentive for notifying donors when donors can be located.

RESTRICTIONS ON EXERCISE OF CERTAIN FIDUCIARY POWERS

15-1-1401. Restrictions on exercise of certain fiduciary powers. (1) (a) Due to the inherent conflict of interest that exists between a trustee who is a beneficiary of a trust and other beneficiaries of the trust, any of the following powers conferred upon a trustee shall not be exercised by such trustee:

(I) To make or cause to be made discretionary distributions of either principal or income to or for the direct or indirect benefit of such trustee; except that such a power may be exercised by such trustee to the extent that it may be exercised to provide for that trustee's health, education, maintenance, or support as described under sections 2041 and 2514 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", as amended;

(II) To make discretionary distributions of either principal or income to satisfy any legal obligations of such trustee; or

(III) To make or cause to be made discretionary distributions of either principal or income to or for the direct or indirect benefit of any person who has the right to remove or replace such trustee; except that such a power may be exercised by such trustee to the extent that it may be exercised to provide for such person's health, education, maintenance, or support as described under sections 2041 and 2514 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", as amended.

(b) Any of the powers prescribed in paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) that are conferred upon two or more trustees may be exercised by the trustees who are not so disqualified. If there is no trustee qualified to exercise such powers, any party in interest, as described in subsection (3) of this section, may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to appoint an independent trustee, and such powers may be exercised by the independent trustee appointed by the court. Subparagraph (I) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) shall not prohibit a trustee from making payments, including reimbursement of and compensation of such trustee, for the protection of the trust, or the assets thereof, and for all expenses, losses, and liabilities incurred in or by the collection, care, administration, or protection of the trust or the assets thereof.

(2) This section applies to every trust unless the terms of the trust as it may be amended in accordance with its terms provide expressly to the contrary and either specifically refer to this section or otherwise clearly demonstrate the intent that this rule not apply or unless, if the trust is irrevocable, all parties in interest, as described in subsection (3) of this section, elect affirmatively, in the manner prescribed in subsection (4) of this section, not to be subject to the application of this section. Such election shall be made on or before July 1, 1999, or three years after the date on which the trust becomes irrevocable, whichever occurs later.

(3) For the purpose of subsection (1) or subsection (2) of this section:

(a) If the trust is revocable or amendable and the settlor is not incapacitated, the party in interest is the settlor.

(b) If the trust is revocable or amendable and the settlor is incapacitated, the party in interest is the settlor's legal representative under applicable law or the settlor's agent under a durable power of attorney that is sufficient to grant such authority.

- (c) If the trust is not revocable or amendable, the parties in interest are:
  - (I) Each trustee then serving;
  - (II) Each income beneficiary then in existence or, if any such beneficiary has not attained majority or is otherwise incapacitated, the beneficiary’s legal representative under applicable law or the beneficiary’s agent under a durable power of attorney that is sufficient to grant such authority; and
  - (III) Each remainder beneficiary then in existence or, if any such remainder beneficiary has not attained majority or is otherwise incapacitated, the beneficiary’s legal representative under applicable law or the beneficiary’s agent under a durable power of attorney that is sufficient to grant such authority.
- (4) The affirmative election required under subsection (2) of this section shall be made:
  - (a) If the settlor is not incapacitated and the trust is revocable or amendable, through a revocation of or an amendment to the trust;
  - (b) If the settlor is incapacitated and the trust is revocable or amendable, through a written declaration executed in the manner prescribed for the acknowledgment of deeds in this state and delivered to the trustee; or
  - (c) If the trust is not revocable or amendable, through a written declaration executed in the manner prescribed for the acknowledgment of deeds in this state and delivered to the trustee.
- (5) A person who has the right to remove or to replace a trustee does not possess nor may that person be deemed to possess, by virtue of having that right, the powers proscribed in subparagraphs (I), (II), and (III) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section of the trustee that is subject to removal or to replacement.
- (6) (a) Subparagraphs (I) and (II) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section shall not apply to a trustee with respect to trust property and the income from such property where such property would, upon the death of such trustee, be included in the gross estate of such trustee for federal estate tax purposes for any reason other than the powers proscribed by subparagraphs (I) and (II) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section.
(b) Subparagraph (I) of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section shall not apply to a trustee that may be appointed or removed by a person for whose benefit the proscribed powers may be exercised to distribute trust property or the income from such property where such property would, upon the death of such person, be included in the gross estate of such person for federal estate tax purposes for any reason other than such powers to appoint or remove such trustee.
- (7) The provisions of this section neither create a new cause of action nor impair any existing cause of action that, in either case, relates to any power proscribed by subsection (1) of this section that was exercised before July 1, 1996.

ARTICLE 1.1 - UNIFORM PRUDENT INVESTOR ACT PREFATORY NOTE

Over the quarter century from the late 1960's the investment practices of fiduciaries experienced significant change. The Uniform Prudent Investor Act (UPIA) undertakes to update trust investment law in recognition of the alterations that have occurred in investment practice. These changes have occurred under the influence of a large and broadly accepted body of empirical and theoretical knowledge about the behavior of capital markets, often described as "modern portfolio theory."

This Act draws upon the revised standards for prudent trust investment promulgated by the American Law Institute in its Restatement (Third) of Trusts: Prudent Investor Rule (1992) [hereafter Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule; also referred to as 1992 Restatement].

Objectives of the Act.

UPIA makes five fundamental alterations in the former criteria for prudent investing. All are to be found in the Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule.

(1) The standard of prudence is applied to any investment as part of the total portfolio, rather than to individual investments. In the trust setting the term "portfolio" embraces all the trust's assets. UPIA § 2(b).

(2) The tradeoff in all investing between risk and return is identified as the fiduciary's central consideration. UPIA § 2(b).

(3) All categorical restrictions on types of investments have been abrogated; the trustee can invest in anything that plays an appropriate role in achieving the risk/return objectives of the trust and that meets the other requirements of prudent investing. UPIA § 2(e).

(4) The long familiar requirement that fiduciaries diversify their investments has been integrated into the definition of prudent investing. UPIA § 3.

(5) The much criticized former rule of trust law forbidding the trustee to delegate investment and management functions has been reversed. Delegation is now permitted, subject to safeguards. UPIA § 9.

Literature.

These changes in trust investment law have been presaged in an extensive body of practical and scholarly writing. See especially the discussion and reporter's notes by Edward C. Halbach,

Jr., in Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule (1992); see also Edward C. Halbach, Jr., Trust Investment Law in the Third Restatement, 27 Real Property, Probate & Trust J. 407 (1992); Bevis Longstreth, Modern Investment Management and the Prudent Man Rule (1986); Jeffrey N. Gordon, The Puzzling Persistence of the Constrained Prudent Man Rule, 62 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 52 (1987); John H. Langbein & Richard A. Posner, The Revolution in Trust Investment Law, 62 A.B.A.J. 887 (1976); Note, the Regulation of Risky Investments, 83 Harvard L. Rev. 603 (1970). A succinct account of the main findings of modern portfolio theory, written for lawyers, is Jonathan R. Macey, An Introduction to Modern Financial Theory (1991) (American College of Trust & Estate Counsel Foundation). A leading introductory text on modern portfolio theory is R.A. Brealey, An Introduction to Risk and Return from Common Stocks (2d ed. 1983). Legislation.

Most states have legislation governing trust-investment law. This Act promotes uniformity of state law on the basis of the new consensus reflected in the Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule. Some states have already acted. California, Delaware, Georgia, Minnesota, Tennessee, and Washington revised their prudent investor legislation to emphasize the total-portfolio standard of care in advance of the 1992 Restatement. These statutes are extracted and discussed in Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, reporter's note, at 60-66 (1992).

Drafters in Illinois in 1991 worked from the April 1990 "Proposed Final Draft" of the Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule and enacted legislation that is closely modeled on the new Restatement. 760 ILCS § 5/5 (prudent investing); and § 5/5.1 (delegation) (1992). As the Comments to this Uniform Prudent Investor Act reflect, the Act draws upon the Illinois statute in several sections. Virginia revised its prudent investor act in a similar vein in 1992. Virginia Code § 26-45.1 (prudent investing) (1992). Florida revised its statute in 1993. Florida Laws, ch. 93-257, amending Florida Statutes § 518.11 (prudent investing) and creating § 518.112 (delegation). New York legislation drawing on the new Restatement and on a preliminary version of this Uniform Prudent Investor Act was enacted in 1994. N.Y. Assembly Bill 11683-B, Ch. 609 (1994), adding Estates, Powers and Trusts Law § 11-2.3 (Prudent Investor Act).

Remedies.

This Act does not undertake to address issues of remedy law or the computation of damages in trust matters. Remedies are the subject of a reasonably distinct body of doctrine. See generally Restatement (Second) of Trusts §§ 197-226A (1959) [hereinafter cited as Restatement of Trusts 2d; also referred to as 1959 Restatement].

Implications for charitable and pension trusts.

This Act is centrally concerned with the investment responsibilities arising under the private gratuitous trust, which is the common vehicle for conditioned wealth transfer within the family. Nevertheless, the prudent investor rule also bears on charitable and pension trusts, among others. "In making investments of trust funds the trustee of a charitable trust is under a duty similar to that of the trustee of a private trust." Restatement of Trusts 2d § 389 (1959). The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), the federal regulatory scheme for pension trusts enacted in 1974, absorbs trust-investment law through the prudence standard of ERISA § 404(a)(1)(B), 29 U.S.C. § 1104(a). The Supreme Court has said: "ERISA's legislative history confirms that the Act's fiduciary responsibility provisions 'codif[y] and mak[e] applicable to [ERISA] fiduciaries certain principles developed in the evolution of the law of trusts.'" Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Bruch, 489 U.S. 101, 110-11 (1989) (footnote omitted). Other fiduciary relationships.

The Uniform Prudent Investor Act regulates the investment responsibilities of trustees. Other fiduciaries — such as executors, conservators, and guardians of the property — sometimes have responsibilities over assets that are governed by the standards of prudent investment. It will often be appropriate for states to adapt the law governing investment by trustees under this Act to these other fiduciary regimes, taking account of such changed circumstances as the relatively short duration of most executorships and the intensity of court supervision of conservators and guardians in some jurisdictions. The present Act does not undertake to adjust trust-investment law to the special circumstances of the state schemes for administering decedents' estates or conducting the affairs of protected persons.

Although the Uniform Prudent Investor Act by its terms applies to trusts and not to charitable corporations, the standards of the Act can be expected to inform the investment responsibilities of directors and officers of charitable corporations. As the 1992 Restatement observes, "the duties of the members of the governing board of a charitable corporation are generally similar to the duties of the trustee of a charitable trust." Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 379, Comment b, at 190 (1992). See also id. § 389, Comment b, at 190-91 (absent contrary statute or other provision, prudent investor rule applies to investment of funds held for charitable corporations).

15-1.1-101. Prudent investor rule. (a) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) of this section, a trustee who invests and manages trust assets owes a duty to the beneficiaries of the trust to comply with the prudent investor rule set forth in this article.

(b) The prudent investor rule, a default rule, may be expanded, restricted, eliminated, or otherwise altered by the provisions of a trust. A trustee is not liable to a beneficiary to the extent that the trustee acted in reasonable reliance on the provisions of the trust.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section imposes the obligation of prudence in the conduct of investment functions and identifies further sections of the Act that specify the attributes of prudent conduct.

Origins. The prudence standard for trust investing traces back to Harvard College v. Amory, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 446 (1830). Trustees should "observe how men of prudence, discretion and intelligence manage their own affairs, not in regard to speculation, but in regard to the permanent disposition of their funds, considering the probable income, as well as the probable safety of the capital to be invested." Id. at 461.

Prior legislation. The Model Prudent Man Rule Statute (1942), sponsored by the American Bankers Association, undertook to codify the language of the Amory case. See Mayo A. Shattuck, The Development of the Prudent Man Rule for Fiduciary Investment in the United States in the Twentieth Century, 12 Ohio State L.J. 491, at 501 (1951); for the text of the model act, which inspired many state statutes, see id. at 508-09. Another prominent codification of the Amory standard is Uniform Probate Code § 7-302 (1969), which provides that "the trustee shall observe the standards in dealing with the trust assets that would be observed by a prudent man dealing with the property of another . . . .”

Congress has imposed a comparable prudence standard for the administration of pension and employee benefit trusts in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), enacted in 1974. ERISA § 404(a)(1)(B), 29 U.S.C. § 1104(a), provides that “a fiduciary shall discharge his duties with respect to a plan solely in the interest of the participants and beneficiaries and . . . with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing that a prudent man acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of like character and with like aims . . . .”

Prior Restatement. The Restatement of Trusts 2d (1959) also tracked the language of the Amory case: “In making investments of trust funds the trustee is under a duty to the beneficiary . . . to make such investments and only such investments as a prudent man would make of his own property having in view the preservation of the estate and the amount and regularity of the income to be derived . . . .” Restatement of Trusts 2d § 227 (1959).

Objective standard. The concept of prudence in the judicial opinions and legislation is essentially relational or comparative. It resembles in this respect the “reasonable person” rule of tort law. A prudent trustee behaves as other trustees similarly situated would behave. The standard is, therefore, objective rather than subjective. Sections 2 through 9 of this Act identify the main factors that bear on prudent investment behavior.

Variation. Almost all of the rules of trust law are default rules, that is, rules that the settlor may alter or abrogate. Subsection (b) carries forward this traditional attribute of trust law. Traditional trust law also allows the beneficiaries of the trust to excuse its performance, when they are all capable and not misinformed. Restatement of Trusts 2d § 216 (1959).

ANNOTATION

The Colorado Uniform Prudent Investor Act provides a legal standard of care, not an independent cause of action. The general assembly considered the issue of remedies and chose not to include an independent right of action in the act. Micale v. Bank One, N.A., 382 F. Supp. 2d 1207 (D. Colo. 2005).

15-1.1-102. Standard of care - portfolio strategy - risk and return objectives.

(a) A trustee shall invest and manage trust assets as a prudent investor would, by considering the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust. In satisfying this standard, the trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution.

(b) A trustee’s investment and management decisions respecting individual assets must be evaluated not in isolation but in the context of the trust portfolio as a whole and as a part of an overall investment strategy having risk and return objectives reasonably suited to the trust.

(c) Among circumstances that a trustee shall consider in investing and managing trust assets are such of the following as are relevant to the trust or its beneficiaries:

- (1) General economic conditions;
- (2) The possible effect of inflation or deflation;
- (3) The expected tax consequences of investment decisions or strategies;
- (4) The role that each investment or course of action plays within the overall trust portfolio, which may include financial assets, interests in closely held enterprises, tangible and intangible personal property, and real property;
- (5) The expected total return from income and the appreciation of capital;
- (6) Other resources of the beneficiaries;
- (7) Needs for liquidity, regularity of income, and preservation or appreciation of capital; and

(8) An asset’s special relationship or special value, if any, to the purposes of the trust or to one or more of the beneficiaries.

(d) A trustee shall make a reasonable effort to verify facts relevant to the investment and management of trust assets.

(e) A trustee may invest in any kind of property or type of investment consistent with the standards of this article.

(f) A trustee who has special skills or expertise, or is named trustee in reliance upon the trustee’s representation that the trustee has special skills or expertise, has a duty to use those special skills or expertise.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Section 2 is the heart of the Act. Subsections (a), (b), and (c) are patterned loosely on the language of the Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227 (1992), and on the 1991 Illinois statute, 760 § ILCS 5/5a (1992). Subsection (f) is derived from Uniform Probate Code § 7-302 (1969).

Objective standard. Subsection (a) of this Act carries forward the relational and objective standard made familiar in the Amory case, in earlier prudent investor legislation, and in the Restatements. Early formulations of the prudent person rule were sometimes troubled by the effort to distinguish between the standard of a prudent person investing for another and investing on his or her own account. The language of subsection (a), by relating the trustee's duty to "the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust," should put such questions to rest. The standard is the standard of the prudent investor similarly situated.

Portfolio standard. Subsection (b) emphasizes the consolidated portfolio standard for evaluating investment decisions. An investment that might be imprudent standing alone can become prudent if undertaken in sensible relation to other trust assets, or to other nontrust assets. In the trust setting the term "portfolio" embraces the entire trust estate.

Risk and return. Subsection (b) also sounds the main theme of modern investment practice, sensitivity to the risk/return curve. See generally the works cited in the Prefatory Note to this Act, under "Literature." Returns correlate strongly with risk, but tolerance for risk varies greatly with the financial and other circumstances of the investor, or in the case of a trust, with the purposes of the trust and the relevant circumstances of the beneficiaries. A trust whose main purpose is to support an elderly widow of modest means will have a lower risk tolerance than a trust to accumulate for a young scion of great wealth.

Subsection (b) of this Act follows Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227(a), which provides that the standard of prudent investing "requires the exercise of reasonable care, skill, and caution, and is to be applied to investments not in isolation but in the context of the trust portfolio and as a part of an overall investment strategy, which should incorporate risk and return objectives reasonably suitable to the trust."

Factors affecting investment. Subsection (c) points to certain of the factors that commonly bear on risk/return preferences in fiduciary investing. This listing is nonexclusive. Tax considerations, such as preserving the stepped up basis on death under Internal Revenue Code § 1014 for low-basis assets, have traditionally been exceptionally important in estate planning for affluent persons. Under the present recognition rules of the federal income tax, taxable investors, including trust beneficiaries, are in general best served by an investment strategy that minimizes the taxation incident to portfolio turnover. See generally Robert H. Jeffrey & Robert D. Arnott, Is Your Alpha Big Enough to Cover Its Taxes?, Journal of Portfolio Management 15 (Spring 1993).

Another familiar example of how tax considerations bear upon trust investing: In a regime of pass-through taxation, it may be prudent for the trust to buy lower yielding tax-exempt securities for high-bracket taxpayers, whereas it would ordinarily be imprudent for the trustees of a charitable trust, whose income is tax exempt, to accept the lowered yields associated with tax-exempt securities.

When tax considerations affect beneficiaries differently, the trustee's duty of impartiality requires attention to the competing interests of each of them.

Subsection (c)(8), allowing the trustee to take into account any preferences of the beneficiaries respecting heirlooms or other prized assets, derives from the Illinois act, 760 ILCS § 5/5(a)(4) (1992).

Duty to monitor. Subsections (a) through (d) apply both to investing and managing trust assets. "Managing" embraces monitoring, that is, the trustee's continuing responsibility for oversight of the suitability of investments already made as well as the trustee's decisions respecting new investments.

Duty to investigate. Subsection (d) carries forward the traditional responsibility of the fiduciary investor to examine information likely to bear importantly on the value or the security of an investment — for example, audit reports or records of title. E.g., Estate of Collins, 72 Cal. App. 3d 663, 139 Cal. Rptr. 644 (1977) (trustees lent on a junior mortgage on unimproved real estate, failed to have land appraised, and accepted an unaudited financial statement; held liable for losses).

Abrogating categorical restrictions. Subsection 2(e) clarifies that no particular kind of property or type of investment is inherently imprudent. Traditional trust law was encumbered with a variety of categorical exclusions, such as prohibitions on junior mortgages or new ventures. In some states legislation created so-called "legal lists" of approved trust investments. The universe of investment products changes incessantly. Investments that were at one time thought too risky, such as equities, or more recently, futures, are now used in fiduciary portfolios. By contrast, the investment that was at one time thought ideal for trusts, the long-term bond, has been discovered to import a level of risk and volatility — in this case, inflation risk — that had not been anticipated. Accordingly, section 2(e) of this Act follows Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule in abrogating categoric restrictions. The Restatement says: “Specific investments or techniques are not per se prudent or imprudent. The riskiness of a specific property, and thus the propriety of its inclusion in the trust estate, is not judged in the abstract but in terms of its anticipated effect on the particular trust’s portfolio.” Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, Comment f, at 24 (1992). The premise of subsection 2(e) is that trust beneficiaries are better protected by the Act’s emphasis on close attention to risk/return objectives as prescribed in subsection 2(b) than in attempts to identify categories of investment that are per se prudent or imprudent.

The Act impliedly disavows the emphasis in older law on avoiding “speculative” or “risky” investments. Low levels of risk may be appropriate in some trust settings but inappropriate in others. It is the trustee’s task to invest at a risk level that is suitable to the purposes of the trust.

The abolition of categoric restrictions against types of investment in no way alters the trustee’s conventional duty of loyalty, which is reiterated for the purposes of this Act in Section 5. For example, were the trustee to invest in a second mortgage on a piece of real property owned by the trustee, the investment would be wrongful on account of the trustee’s breach of the duty to abstain from self-dealing, even though the investment would no longer automatically offend the former categoric restriction against fiduciary investments in junior mortgages.

Professional fiduciaries. The distinction taken in subsection (f) between amateur and professional trustees is familiar law. The prudent investor standard applies to a range of fiduciaries, from the most sophisticated professional investment management firms and corporate fiduciaries, to family members of minimal experience. Because the standard of prudence is relational, it follows that the standard for professional trustees is the standard of prudent professionals; for amateurs, it is the standard of prudent amateurs. Restatement of Trusts 2d § 174 (1959) provides: “The trustee is under a duty to the beneficiary in administering the trust to exercise such care and skill as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in dealing with his own property; and if the trustee has or procures his appointment as trustee by representing that he has greater skill than that of a man of ordinary prudence, he is under a duty to exercise such skill.” Case law strongly supports the concept of the higher standard of care for the trustee representing itself to be expert or professional. See Annot., Standard of Care Required of Trustee Representing Itself to Have Expert Knowledge or Skill, 91 A.L.R. 3d 904 (1979) & 1992 Supp. at 48-49.

The Drafting Committee declined the suggestion that the Act should create an exception to the prudent investor rule (or to the diversification requirement of Section 3) in the case of smaller trusts. The Committee believes that subsections (b) and (c) of the Act emphasize factors that are sensitive to the traits of small trusts; and that subsection (f) adjusts helpfully for the distinction between professional and amateur trusteeship. Furthermore, it is always open to the settlor of a trust under Section 1(b) of the Act to reduce the trustee’s standard of care if the settlor deems such a step appropriate. The official comments to the 1992 Restatement observe that pooled investments, such as mutual funds and bank common trust funds, are especially suitable for small trusts. Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, Comments h, m, at 28, 51; reporter’s note to Comment g, id. at 83.

Matters of proof. Although virtually all express trusts are created by written instrument, oral trusts are known, and accordingly, this Act presupposes no formal requirement that trust terms be in writing. When there is a written trust instrument, modern authority strongly favors allowing evidence extrinsic to the instrument to be consulted for the purpose of ascertaining the settlor’s intent. See Uniform Probate Code § 2-601 (1990), Comment; Restatement (Third) of Property: Donative Transfers (Preliminary Draft No. 2, ch. 11, Sept. 11, 1992).

15-1.1-103. Diversification. A trustee shall diversify the investments of the trust unless the trustee reasonably determines that, because of special circumstances, the purposes of the trust are better served without diversifying.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The language of this section derives from Restatement of Trusts 2d § 228 (1959). ERISA insists upon a comparable rule for pension trusts. ERISA § 404(a)(1)(C), 29 U.S.C.

§ 1104(a)(1)(C). Case law overwhelmingly supports the duty to diversify. See Annot., Duty of Trustee to Diversify Investments, and Liability for Failure to Do So, 24 A.L.R. 3d 730 (1969) & 1992 Supp. at 78-79.

The 1992 Restatement of Trusts takes the significant step of integrating the diversification requirement into the concept of prudent investing. Section 227(b) of the 1992 Restatement treats diversification as one of the fundamental elements of prudent investing, replacing the separate section 228 of the Restatement of Trusts 2d. The message of the 1992 Restatement, carried forward in Section 3 of this Act, is that prudent investing ordinarily requires diversification.

Circumstances can however, overcome the duty to diversify. For example, if a tax-sensitive trust owns an underdiversified block of low-basis securities, the tax costs of recognizing the gain may outweigh the advantages of diversifying the holding. The wish to retain a family business is another situation in which the purposes of the trust sometimes override the conventional duty to diversify.

Rationale for diversification. "Diversification reduces risk . . . [because] stock price movements are not uniform. They are imperfectly correlated. This means that if one holds a well diversified portfolio, the gains in one investment will cancel out the losses in another." Jonathan R. Macey, An Introduction to Modern Financial Theory 20 (American College of Trust and Estate Counsel Foundation, 1991). For example, during the Arab oil embargo of 1973, international oil stocks suffered declines, but the shares of domestic oil producers and coal companies benefitted. Holding a broad enough portfolio allowed the investor to set off, to some extent, the losses associated with the embargo.

Modern portfolio theory divides risk into the categories of "compensated" and "uncompensated" risk. The risk of owning shares in a mature and well-managed company in a settled industry is less than the risk of owning shares in a start-up high-technology venture. The investor requires a higher expected return to induce the investor to bear the greater risk of disappointment associated with the start-up firm. This is compensated risk — the firm pays the investor for bearing the risk. By contrast, nobody pays the investor for owning too few stocks. The investor who owned only international oils in 1973 was running a risk that could have been reduced by having configured the portfolio differently — to include investments in different industries. This is uncompensated risk — nobody pays the investor for owning shares in too few industries and too few companies. Risk that can be eliminated by adding different stocks (or bonds) is uncompensated risk. The object of diversification is to minimize this uncompensated risk of having too few investments. "As long as stock prices do not move exactly together, the risk of a diversified portfolio will be less than the average risk of the separate holdings." R.A. Brealey, An Introduction to Risk and Return from Common Stocks 103 (2d ed. 1983).

There is no automatic rule for identifying how much diversification is enough. The 1992 Restatement says: "Significant diversification advantages can be achieved with a small number of well-selected securities representing different industries . . . . Broader diversification is usually to be preferred in trust investing," and pooled investment vehicles "make thorough diversification practical for most trustees." Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, General Note on Comments e-h, at 77 (1992). See also Macey, supra, at 23-24; Brealey, supra, at 111-13.

Diversifying by pooling. It is difficult for a small trust fund to diversify thoroughly by constructing its own portfolio of individually selected investments. Transaction costs such as the round-lot (100 share) trading economies make it relatively expensive for a small investor to assemble a broad enough portfolio to minimize uncompensated risk. For this reason, pooled investment vehicles have become the main mechanism for facilitating diversification for the investment needs of smaller trusts.

Most states have legislation authorizing common trust funds; see 3 Austin W. Scott & William F. Fratcher, The Law of Trusts § 227.9, at 463-65 n.26 (4th ed. 1988) (collecting citations to state statutes). As of 1992, 35 states and the District of Columbia had enacted the Uniform Common Trust Fund Act (UCTFA) (1938), overcoming the rule against commingling trust assets and expressly enabling banks and trust companies to establish common trust funds. 7 Uniform Laws Ann. 1992 Supp. at 130 (schedule of adopting states). The Prefatory Note to the UCTFA explains: "The purposes of such a common or joint investment fund are to diversify the investment of the several trusts and thus spread the risk of loss, and to make it easy to invest any amount of trust funds quickly and with a small amount of trouble." 7 Uniform Laws Ann. 402 (1985).

Fiduciary investing in mutual funds. Trusts can also achieve diversification by investing in mutual funds. See Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule, § 227, Comment m, at 99-100 (1992) (endorsing trust investment in mutual funds). ERISA § 401(b)(1), 29 U.S.C. § 1101(b)(1), expressly authorizes pension trusts to invest in mutual funds, identified as securities "issued by an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940 . . . ."

15-1.1-104. Duties at inception of trusteeship. Within a reasonable time after accepting a trusteeship or receiving trust assets, a trustee shall review the trust assets and make and implement decisions concerning the retention and disposition of assets, in order to bring the trust portfolio into compliance with the purposes, terms, distribution requirements, and other circumstances of the trust, and with the requirements of this article.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Section 4, requiring the trustee to dispose of unsuitable assets within a reasonable time, is old law, codified in Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 229 (1992), lightly revising Restatement of Trusts 2d § 230 (1959). The duty extends as well to investments that were proper when purchased but subsequently become improper. Restatement of Trusts 2d § 231 (1959). The same standards apply to successor trustees, see Restatement of Trusts 2d § 196 (1959).

The question of what period of time is reasonable turns on the totality of factors affecting the asset and the trust. The 1959 Restatement took the view that “[o]rdinarily any time within a year is reasonable, but under some circumstances a year may be too long a time and under other circumstances a trustee is not liable although he fails to effect the conversion for more than a year.” Restatement of Trusts 2d § 230, comment b (1959). The 1992 Restatement retreated from this rule of thumb, saying, “No positive rule can be stated with respect to what constitutes a reasonable time for the sale or exchange of securities.” Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 229, comment b (1992).

The criteria and circumstances identified in Section 2 of this Act as bearing upon the prudence of decisions to invest and manage trust assets also pertain to the prudence of decisions to retain or dispose of inception assets under this section.

15-1.1-105. Loyalty. A trustee shall invest and manage the trust assets solely in the interest of the beneficiaries.

Source: L. 95: Entire article added, p. 311, § 1, effective July 1.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The duty of loyalty is perhaps the most characteristic rule of trust law, requiring the trustee to act exclusively for the beneficiaries, as opposed to acting for the trustee’s own interest or that of third parties. The language of Section 4 of this Act derives from Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 170 (1992), which makes minute changes in Restatement of Trusts 2d § 170 (1959).

The concept that the duty of prudence in trust administration, especially in investing and managing trust assets, entails adherence to the duty of loyalty is familiar. ERISA § 404(a)(1)(B), 29 U.S.C. § 1104(a)(1)(B), extracted in the Comment to Section 1 of this Act, effectively merges the requirements of prudence and loyalty. A fiduciary cannot be prudent in the conduct of investment functions if the fiduciary is sacrificing the interests of the beneficiaries.

The duty of loyalty is not limited to settings entailing self-dealing or conflict of interest in which the trustee would benefit personally from the trust. “The trustee is under a duty to the beneficiary in administering the trust not to be guided by the interest of any third person. Thus, it is improper for the trustee to sell trust property to a third person for the purpose of benefitting the third person rather than the trust.” Restatement of Trusts 2d § 170, comment q, at 371 (1959).

No form of so-called “social investing” is consistent with the duty of loyalty if the investment activity entails sacrificing the interests of trust beneficiaries — for example, by accepting below-market returns — in favor of the interests of the persons supposedly benefitted by pursuing the particular social cause. See, e.g., John H. Langbein & Richard Posner, Social Investing and the Law of Trusts, 79 Michigan L. Rev. 72, 96-97 (1980) (collecting authority). For pension trust assets, see generally Ian D. Lanoff, The Social Investment of Private Pension Plan Assets: May it Be Done Lawfully under ERISA?, 31 Labor L.J. 387 (1980). Commentators supporting social investing tend to concede the overriding force of the duty of loyalty. They argue instead that particular schemes of social investing may not result in below-market returns. See, e.g., Marcia O’Brien Hylton, “Socially Responsible” Investing: Doing Good Versus Doing Well in an Inefficient Market, 42 American U.L. Rev. 1 (1992). In 1994 the Department of Labor issued an Interpretive Bulletin reviewing its prior analysis of social investing questions and reiterating that pension trust fiduciaries may invest only in conformity with the prudence and loyalty standards of ERISA §§ 403-404. Interpretive Bulletin 94-1, 59 Fed.

Regis. 32606 (Jun. 22, 1994), to be codified as 29 CFR § 2509.94-1. The Bulletin reminds fiduciary investors that they are prohibited from "subordinat[ing] the interests of participants and beneficiaries in their retirement income to unrelated objectives."

15-1.1-106. Impartiality. If a trust has two or more beneficiaries, the trustee shall act impartially in investing and managing the trust assets, taking into account any differing interests of the beneficiaries.

Source: L. 95: Entire article added, p. 311, § 1, effective July 1.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

The duty of impartiality derives from the duty of loyalty. When the trustee owes duties to more than one beneficiary, loyalty requires the trustee to respect the interests of all the beneficiaries. Prudence in investing and administration requires the trustee to take account of the interests of all the beneficiaries for whom the trustee is acting, especially the conflicts between the interests of beneficiaries interested in income and those interested in principal.

The language of Section 6 derives from Restatement of Trusts 2d § 183 (1959); see also id., § 232. Multiple beneficiaries may be beneficiaries in succession (such as life and remainder interests) or beneficiaries with simultaneous interests (as when the income interest in a trust is being divided among several beneficiaries).

The trustee's duty of impartiality commonly affects the conduct of investment and management functions in the sphere of principal and income allocations. This Act prescribes no regime for allocating receipts and expenses. The details of such allocations are commonly handled under specialized legislation, such as the Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act (1962) (which is presently under study by the Uniform Law Commission with a view toward further revision).

15-1.1-107. Investment costs. In investing and managing trust assets, a trustee may only incur costs that are appropriate and reasonable in relation to the assets, the purposes of the trust, and the skills of the trustee.

Source: L. 95: Entire article added, p. 311, § 1, effective July 1.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Wasting beneficiaries' money is imprudent. In devising and implementing strategies for the investment and management of trust assets, trustees are obliged to minimize costs.

The language of Section 7 derives from Restatement of Trusts 2d § 188 (1959). The Restatement of Trusts 3d says: "Concerns over compensation and other charges are not an obstacle to a reasonable course of action using mutual funds and other pooling arrangements, but they do require special attention by a trustee. . . . [I]t is important for trustees to make careful cost comparisons, particularly among similar products of a specific type being considered for a trust portfolio." Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, comment m, at 58 (1992).

15-1.1-108. Reviewing compliance. Compliance with the prudent investor rule is determined in light of the facts and circumstances existing at the time of a trustee's decision or action and not by hindsight.

Source: L. 95: Entire article added, p. 311, § 1, effective July 1.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section derives from the 1991 Illinois act, 760 ILCS 5/5(a)(2) (1992), which draws upon Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227, comment b, at 11 (1992). Trustees are not insurers. Not every investment or management decision will turn out in the light of hindsight to have been successful. Hindsight is not the relevant standard. In the language of law and economics, the standard is ex ante, not ex post.

15-1.1-109. Delegation of investment and management functions. (a) A trustee may delegate investment and management functions that a prudent trustee of comparable skills could properly delegate under the circumstances. The trustee shall exercise reasonable care, skill, and caution in:

(1) Selecting an agent;

(2) Establishing the scope and terms of the delegation, consistent with the purposes and terms of the trust; and

(3) Periodically reviewing the agent's actions in order to monitor the agent's performance and compliance with the terms of the delegation.

(b) In performing a delegated function, an agent owes a duty to the trust to exercise reasonable care to comply with the terms of the delegation.

(c) A trustee who complies with the requirements of subsection (a) of this section is not liable to the beneficiaries or to the trust for the decisions or actions of the agent to whom the function was delegated.

(d) By accepting the delegation of a trust function from the trustee of a trust that is subject to the law of this State, an agent submits to the jurisdiction of the courts of this State.

Source: L. 95: Entire article added, p. 311, § 1, effective July 1.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section of the Act reverses the much-criticized rule that forbade trustees to delegate investment and management functions. The language of this section is derived from Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 171 (1992), discussed infra, and from the 1991 Illinois act, 760 ILCS § 5/5.1(b), (c) (1992).

Former law. The former nondelegation rule survived into the 1959 Restatement: "The trustee is under a duty to the beneficiary not to delegate to others the doing of acts which the trustee can reasonably be required personally to perform." The rule put a premium on the frequently arbitrary task of distinguishing discretionary functions that were thought to be nondelegable from supposedly ministerial functions that the trustee was allowed to delegate. Restatement of Trusts 2d § 171 (1959).

The Restatement of Trusts 2d admitted in a comment that "There is not a clear-cut line dividing the acts which a trustee can properly delegate from those which he cannot properly delegate." Instead, the comment directed attention to a list of factors that "may be of importance: (1) the amount of discretion involved; (2) the value and character of the property involved; (3) whether the property is principal or income; (4) the proximity or remoteness of the subject matter of the trust; (5) the character of the act as one involving professional skill or facilities possessed or not possessed by the trustee himself." Restatement of Trusts 2d § 171, comment d (1959). The 1959 Restatement further said: "A trustee cannot properly delegate to another power to select investments." Restatement of Trusts 2d § 171, comment h (1959).

For discussion and criticism of the former rule see William L. Cary & Craig B. Bright, The Delegation of Investment Responsibility for Endowment Funds, 74 Columbia L. Rev. 207 (1974); John H. Langbein & Richard A. Posner, Market Funds and Trust-Investment Law, 1976 American Bar Foundation Research J. 1, 18-24.

The modern trend to favor delegation. The trend of subsequent legislation, culminating in the Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule, has been strongly hostile to the nondelegation rule. See John H. Langbein, Reversing the Nondelegation Rule of Trust-Investment Law, 59 Missouri L. Rev. 105 (1994).

The delegation rule of the Uniform Trustee Powers Act. The Uniform Trustee Powers Act (1964) effectively abrogates the nondelegation rule. It authorizes trustees "to employ persons, including attorneys, auditors, investment advisors, or agents, even if they are associated with the trustee, to advise or assist the trustee in the performance of his administrative duties; to act without independent investigation upon their recommendations; and instead of acting personally, to employ one or more agents to perform any act of administration, whether or not discretionary . . . ." Uniform Trustee Powers Act § 3(24), 7B Uniform Laws Ann. 743 (1985). The Act has been enacted in 16 states, see "Record of Passage of Uniform and Model Acts as of September 30, 1993," 1993-94 Reference Book of Uniform Law Commissioners (unpaginated, following page 111) (1993).

UMIFA's delegation rule. The Uniform Management of Institutional Funds Act (1972)

(UMIFA), authorizes the governing boards of eleemosynary institutions, who are trustee-like fiduciaries, to delegate investment matters either to a committee of the board or to outside investment advisors, investment counsel, managers, banks, or trust companies. UMIFA § 5, 7A Uniform Laws Ann. 705 (1985). UMIFA has been enacted in 38 states, see "Record of Passage of Uniform and Model Acts as of September 30, 1993," 1993-94 Reference Book of Uniform Law Commissioners (unpaginated, following page 111) (1993).

ERISA's delegation rule. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, the federal statute that prescribes fiduciary standards for investing the assets of pension and employee benefit plans, allows a pension or employee benefit plan to provide that "authority to manage, acquire or dispose of assets of the plan is delegated to one or more investment managers . . . ." ERISA § 403(a)(2), 29 U.S.C. § 1103(a)(2). Commentators have explained the rationale for ERISA's encouragement of delegation:

ERISA . . . invites the dissolution of unitary trusteeship. . . . ERISA's fractionation of traditional trusteeship reflects the complexity of the modern pension trust. Because millions, even billions of dollars can be involved, great care is required in investing and safekeeping plan assets. Administering such plans—computing and honoring benefit entitlements across decades of employment and retirement—is also a complex business. . . . Since, however, neither the sponsor nor any other single entity has a comparative advantage in performing all these functions, the tendency has been for pension plans to use a variety of specialized providers. A consulting actuary, a plan administration firm, or an insurance company may oversee the design of a plan and arrange for processing benefit claims. Investment industry professionals manage the portfolio (the largest plans spread their pension investments among dozens of money management firms).

John H. Langbein & Bruce A. Wolk, Pension and Employee Benefit Law 496 (1990).

The delegation rule of the 1992 Restatement. The Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule (1992) repeals the nondelegation rule of Restatement of Trusts 2d § 171 (1959), extracted supra, and replaces it with substitute text that reads:

§ 171. Duty with Respect to Delegation. A trustee has a duty personally to perform the responsibilities of trusteeship except as a prudent person might delegate those responsibilities to others. In deciding whether, to whom, and in what manner to delegate fiduciary authority in the administration of a trust, and thereafter in supervising agents, the trustee is under a duty to the beneficiaries to exercise fiduciary discretion and to act as a prudent person would act in similar circumstances.

Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 171 (1992). The 1992 Restatement integrates this delegation standard into the prudent investor rule of section 227, providing that "the trustee must . . . deciding whether and how to delegate to others . . ." Restatement of Trusts 3d: Prudent Investor Rule § 227(c) (1992).

Protecting the beneficiary against unreasonable delegation. There is an intrinsic tension in trust law between granting trustees broad powers that facilitate flexible and efficient trust administration, on the one hand, and protecting trust beneficiaries from the misuse of such powers on the other hand. A broad set of trustees' powers, such as those found in most lawyer-drafted instruments and exemplified in the Uniform Trustees' Powers Act, permits the trustee to act vigorously and expeditiously to maximize the interests of the beneficiaries in a variety of transactions and administrative settings. Trust law relies upon the duties of loyalty and prudent administration, and upon procedural safeguards such as periodic accounting and the availability of judicial oversight, to prevent the misuse of these powers. Delegation, which is a species of trustee power, raises the same tension. If the trustee delegates effectively, the beneficiaries obtain the advantage of the agent's specialized investment skills or whatever other attributes induced the trustee to delegate. But if the trustee delegates to a knave or an incompetent, the delegation can work harm upon the beneficiaries.

Section 9 of the Uniform Prudent Investor Act is designed to strike the appropriate balance between the advantages and the hazards of delegation. Section 9 authorizes delegation under the limitations of subsections (a) and (b). Section 9(a) imposes duties of care, skill, and caution on the trustee in selecting the agent, in establishing the terms of the delegation, and in reviewing the agent's compliance.

The trustee's duties of care, skill, and caution in framing the terms of the delegation should protect the beneficiary against overbroad delegation. For example, a trustee could not prudently agree to an investment management agreement containing an exculpation clause that leaves the trust without recourse against reckless mismanagement. Leaving one's beneficiaries remediless against willful wrongdoing is inconsistent with the duty to use care and caution in formulating the terms of the delegation. This sense that it is imprudent to expose beneficiaries to broad exculpation clauses underlies both federal and state legislation restricting exculpation clauses, e.g., ERISA §§ 404(a)(1)(D), 410(a), 29 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(1)(D), 1110(a); New York Est. Powers Trusts Law § 11-1.7 (McKinney 1967).

Although subsection (c) of the Act exonerates the trustee from personal responsibility for the agent's conduct when the delegation satisfies the standards of subsection 9(a), subsection 9(b) makes the agent responsible to the trust. The beneficiaries of the trust can, therefore, rely upon the trustee to enforce the terms of the delegation.

Costs. The duty to minimize costs that is articulated in Section 7 of this Act applies to delegation as well as to other aspects of fiduciary investing. In deciding whether to delegate, the trustee must balance the projected benefits against the likely costs. Similarly, in deciding how to delegate, the trustee must take costs into account. The trustee must be alert to protect the beneficiary from "double dipping." If, for example, the trustee's regular compensation schedule presupposes that the trustee will conduct the investment management function, it should ordinarily follow that the trustee will lower its fee when delegating the investment function to an outside manager.

15-1.1-110. Language invoking standard of article. The following terms or comparable language in the provisions of a trust, unless otherwise limited or modified, authorizes any investment or strategy permitted under this article: "investments permissible by law for investment of trust funds," "legal investments," "authorized investments," "using the judgment and care under the circumstances then prevailing that persons of prudence, discretion, and intelligence exercise in the management of their own affairs, not in regard to speculation but in regard to the permanent disposition of their funds, considering the probable income as well as the probable safety of their capital," "prudent man rule," "prudent trustee rule," "prudent person rule," and "prudent investor rule."

OFFICIAL COMMENT

ARTICLE 1.5 - UNIFORM CUSTODIAL TRUST ACT
PREFATORY NOTE

This Uniform Act provides for the creation of a statutory custodial trust for adults to be governed by the provisions of the Act whenever property is delivered to another "as custodial trustee under the (Enacting state) Uniform Custodial Trust Act." The provisions of this Act are based on trust analogies to concepts developed and used in establishing custodianships for minors under the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act (UTMA). The Custodial Trust Act is designed to provide a statutory standby inter vivos trust for individuals who typically are not very affluent or sophisticated, and possibly represented by attorneys engaged in general rather than specialized estate practice. The most frequent use of this trust would be in response to the commonly occurring need of elderly individuals to provide for the future management of assets in the event of incapacity. The statute will also be available for accomplishing distribution of funds by judgment debtors and others to incapacitated persons for whom a conservator has not been appointed. Since this Act allows any person, competent to transfer property, to create custodial trusts for the benefit of themselves or others, with the beneficial interest in custodial trust property in the beneficiary and not in the custodial trustee, its potential for use is extensive. Although the most frequent use probably will be by elderly persons, it is also available for a parent to establish a custodial trust for an adult child who may be incapacitated; for adult persons in the military, or those leaving the country temporarily, to place their property with another for management without relinquishing beneficial ownership of their property; or for young people who have received property under the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act to continue a custodial trust as adults in order to obtain the benefit and convenience of management services performed by the custodial trustee.

This Act follows the approach taken by the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act and allows any kind of property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, to be made the subject of a transfer to a custodial trustee for the benefit of a beneficiary. However, the most typical transaction envisioned would involve a person who would transfer intangible property, such as securities or bank accounts, to a custodial trustee but with retention by the transferor of direction over the property. Later, this direction could be relinquished, or it could be lost upon incapacity. The objective of the statute is to provide a simple trust that is uncomplicated in its creation, administration, and termination. The potential for tax problems is minimized by permitting the beneficiary in most instances to retain control while the beneficiary has capacity to manage the assets effectively. The statute contains an asset specific transfer provision that it is believed will be simple to use and will gain the acceptance of the securities and financial industry. A simple transfer document, examples of which are set forth in the Act, and a receipt from the custodian, also in the Act, would provide for identification of beneficiaries or distributees upon death of the beneficiary. Protection is extended to third parties dealing with the custodian. Although the Act is patterned on the Uniform Transfers to Minors Act and meshes into the Uniform Probate Code, it is appropriate for enactment as well in states which have not adopted either UTMA or the UPC.

An adult beneficiary, who is not incapacitated, may: (1) terminate the custodial trust on demand (section 15-1.5-102 (5)); (2) receive so much of the income or custodial property as he or she may request from time to time (section 15-1.5-109 (1)); and (3) give the custodial trustee binding instructions for investment or management (section 15-1.5-107 (2)). In the absence of direction by the beneficiary, who is not incapacitated, the custodial trustee manages the property subject to the standard of care that would be observed by a prudent person dealing with the property of another and is not limited by other statutory restrictions on investments by fiduciaries. (section 15-1.5-107).

A principal feature of the Custodial Trust under this Act is designed to protect the beneficiary and his or her dependents against the perils of the beneficiary's possible future incapacity without the necessity of a conservatorship. Under section 15-1.5-110, the incapacity of the beneficiary does not terminate (1) the custodial trust, (2) the designation of a successor custodial trustee, (3) any power or authority of the custodial trustee, or (4) the immunities of third persons relying on actions of the custodial trustee. The custodial trustee continues to manage the property as a discretionary trust under the prudent person standard for the benefit of the incapacitated beneficiary.

Means of monitoring and enforcing the custodial trust include provisions requiring the custodial trustee to keep the beneficiary informed, requiring accounting by the custodial trustee (section 15-1.5-115), providing for removal of the custodial trustee (section 15-1.5-113), and the distribution of the assets on termination of the custodial trust (section 15-1.5-117). The custodial trustee is protected in section 15-1.5-116 by the statutes of limitation on proceedings against the custodial trustee.

Transactions with the custodial trustee should be executed readily and quickly by third parties because their rights and protections are determined by the Act and a third party acting in good faith has no need to determine the custodial trustee's authority to bind the beneficiary with respect to property and investment matters. (section 15-1.5-111). The Act generally limits the claims of third parties to recourse against the custodial property, with the beneficiary insulated against personal liability unless he or she is personally at fault and the custodial trustee is similarly insulated unless the custodial trustee is personally at fault or failed to disclose the custodial capacity when entering into a contract (section 15-1.5-112).

As a consequence of the mobility of our population, particularly the mature persons who are most likely to utilize this Act, uniformity of the laws governing custodial trusts is highly desirable, and the Act is designed to avoid conflict of laws problems. A custodial trust created under this Act remains subject to this Act despite a subsequent change in the residence of the transferor, the beneficiary, or the custodial trustee or the removal of the custodial trust property from the state of original location. (section 15-1.5-119).

15-1.5-101. Definitions. As used in this article:

(3) "Conservator" means a person appointed or qualified by a court to manage the estate of an individual or a person legally authorized to perform substantially the same functions.

(4) "Court" means the district courts of this state, except in the city and county of Denver, where it means the probate court.

(5) "Custodial trust property" means an interest in property transferred to or held under a declaration of trust by a custodial trustee under this article and the income from and proceeds of that interest.

(6) "Custodial trustee" means a person designated as trustee of a custodial trust under this article or a substitute or successor to the person designated.

(7) "Guardian" means a person appointed or qualified by a court as a guardian of an individual, including a limited guardian, but not a person who is only a guardian ad litem.

(8) "Incapacitated" means lacking the ability to manage property and business affairs effectively by reason of mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness or disability, chronic use of drugs, chronic intoxication, confinement, detention by a foreign power, disappearance, minority, or other disabling cause.

(9) "Legal representative" means a personal representative or conservator.

(10) "Member of the beneficiary's family" means a beneficiary's spouse, descendant, stepchild, parent, stepparent, grandparent, brother, sister, uncle, or aunt, whether related by whole or half blood or by adoption.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

(1) "Adult" is a person 18 years of age for the purpose of custodial trusts. The result of this is that a person 18 years of age will be eligible to be a custodial trustee under this Act, although he or she may not be eligible under UTMA since minor custodianships under UTMA may run to age 21 and the minor could in some cases be older than the custodian. As the Comments under Section 1 of UTMA explain, the age of 21 was retained under that Act because the Internal Revenue Code continues to permit a "minority trust" under Section 2053(c), to continue in effect until age 21 and because it was believed that most transferors creating trusts or custodianships for minors would prefer to retain the property under management for the benefit of the young person as long as possible. The difference has little or no practical consequence and serves the purpose of each Act.

(3) "Conservator" is defined broadly to permit identification of a person functioning as a conservator.

(5 and 6) The terms, "custodial trust property" and "custodial trustee," are used throughout to identify clearly the statutory trust property and trustee under this Act. The statutory trust concept is used throughout the Act.

(7) A definition of guardian has been included and is based on the Uniform Probate Code Section 5-103(6).

(8) A definition of incapacitated has been included, for the purpose of this Act, because incapacity of the beneficiary converts the trust from a revocable trust to a discretionary trust. The definition is taken from the Uniform Probate Code Section 5-401(c) relating to the person who is unable to manage property. Compare Uniform Probate Code Section 5-103(7). Note that section 15-1.5-110(1)(b) permits a transferor to direct that the trust shall be administered as one for an incapacitated person. Section 15-1.5-110 deals specifically with the determination of incapacity.

(10) The beneficiary's family is broadly defined to identify persons who may have standing to seek judicial intervention or accounting (sections 15-1.5-113 and 15-1.5-115).

(11) The definition of a person is taken from the Uniform Probate Code Section 1-201(29).

(12) Personal representative is broadly defined and the definition reflects that in the Uniform Probate Code Section 1-201(30).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Age Requirements in Colorado: A Guide for Estate Planners", see 34 Colo. Law. 87 (August 2005).

15-1.5-102. Custodial trust - general. (1) A person may create a custodial trust of property by a written transfer of the property to another person, evidenced by registration or by other instrument of transfer, executed in any lawful manner, naming as beneficiary an individual who may be the transferor, in which the transferee is designated, in substance, as custodial trustee under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act".

(2) A person may create a custodial trust of property by a written declaration, evidenced by registration of the property or by other instrument of declaration executed in any lawful manner, describing the property and naming as beneficiary an individual other than the declarant, in which the declarant as titleholder is designated, in substance, as custodial trustee under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act". A registration or other declaration of trust for the sole benefit of the declarant is not a custodial trust under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act".

(3) Title to custodial trust property is in the custodial trustee and the beneficial interest is in the beneficiary.

(4) Except as provided in subsection (5) of this section, a transferor may not terminate a custodial trust.

(5) The beneficiary, if not incapacitated, or the conservator of an incapacitated beneficiary, may terminate a custodial trust by delivering to the custodial trustee a writing signed by the beneficiary or conservator declaring the termination. If not previously terminated, the custodial trust terminates on the death of the beneficiary.

(6) Any person may augment existing custodial trust property by the addition of other property pursuant to this article.

(7) The transferor may designate, or authorize the designation of, a successor custodial trustee in the trust instrument.

(8) This article does not displace or restrict other means of creating trusts. A trust whose terms do not conform to this article may be enforceable according to its terms under other law.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Section 15-1.5-102 is the principal provision authorizing the creation of a custodial trust and utilizes the concept of incorporation by reference when the transferee or titleholder of property is designated as custodial trustee under the Act. Section 15-1.5-102 sets forth the general effect of such a transfer. Section 15-1.5-118 provides forms which satisfy the requirements of this section and identifies customary methods of transferring assets to create a custodial trust.

Section 15-1.5-102(1) provides that a trust may be created by transfer to another for the benefit of the transferor or another. This is expected to be the most common way in which a custodial trust would be created. However, a custodial trust may also be created by declaration of trust by the owner of property to hold it for the benefit of another as is provided in section 15-1.5-102(2). A declaration in trust by the owner of property for the sole benefit of the owner is not contemplated by this Act because such an attempt may be considered ineffective as a trust due to the total identity of the trustee and beneficiary. However, the doctrine of merger would not preclude an effective transfer under this Act for the benefit of the transferor and one or more other beneficiaries. See section 15-1.5-106.

A custodial trust could be created by the exercise of a valid power of attorney or power of appointment given by the owner of property as one of the transfers "consistent with law."

These alternatives permit the major uses of the custodial trust to be accomplished expeditiously. For example, an older person, wishing to be relieved of management of property may transfer property to another for benefit of the transferor or of the transferor's spouse or child. The declaration may be used to establish a trust of which the owner is trustee to continue management of the property for benefit of another, such as a spouse or child. The trust may include a provision for distribution of assets remaining at the beneficiary's death directly to a named distributee.

This Act does not preclude the creation of trusts under other existing law, statutory or non-statutory, but is designed to facilitate the creation of simple trusts incorporating the provisions of this Act. The written transfer or declaration "consistent with law" requires that the formalities of the transfer of particular property necessary under other law will be observed, e.g., if land is involved, the requirements of a proper deed and recording must be satisfied.

Section 15-1.5-102 (3) provides for the retention of the beneficial interest in the custodial trust property in the beneficiary and, of course, not in the custodial trustee. The extensive control and benefit in the beneficiary who is not incapacitated maintains the simplicity of the trust and avoids tax complexity. The custodial trustee is given the title to the property and authority to act with regard to the property only as is authorized by the statute. The custodial trustee's powers are enumerated in section 15-1.5-108.

Section 15-1.5-102 (5) gives the adult beneficiary, who is not incapacitated, the power to terminate the custodial trust at any time during his or her lifetime. This power of termination exists in any beneficiary who is not incapacitated whether the beneficiary was or was not the transferor. A beneficiary may be determined to be incapacitated or the transferor may designate that the trust is to be administered as a trust for an incapacitated beneficiary under section 15-1.5-110, in which event the beneficiary does not have the power to terminate. However, the designation of incapacity by the transferor can be modified by the trustee or the court by reason of changed circumstances pursuant to section 15-1.5-110. The Act precludes termination by exercise of a durable power of attorney if the beneficiary is incompetent (section 15-1.5-107(6)). If the donor prefers not to permit the beneficiary the power to terminate or to designate the beneficiary as incapacitated under section 15-1.5-110, an individually drafted trust outside the scope of this Act would seem appropriate.

Upon termination of a custodial trust, the custodial trust property must be distributed as provided in section 15-1.5-117.

A transfer under this Act is irrevocable except to the extent the beneficiary may terminate it. Hence, a transfer to a trustee for benefit of a person other than the transferor is not revocable by the transferor. If a power of revocation were retained by the transferor, that would be a trust outside the scope of this Act and enforceable under general law pursuant to subsection 15-1.5-102 (8).

This Act does not provide for protection of the custodial trust assets from the claims of creditors of the beneficiary, whether those are general or governmental creditors. Other laws of the state remain unaffected. In this regard, unusual problems of handicapped persons and the coordination of resources and state or federal services call for special provision and planning outside the scope of this Act.

15-1.5-103. Custodial trustee for future payment or transfer. (1) A person having the right to designate the recipient of property payable or transferable upon a future event may create a custodial trust upon the occurrence of the future event by designating in writing the recipient, followed in substance by "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"".

(2) Persons may be designated as substitute or successor custodial trustees to whom the property must be paid or transferred in the order named if the first designated custodial trustee is unable or unwilling to serve.

(3) A designation under this section may be made in a will, a trust, a deed, a multiple-party account, an insurance policy, an instrument exercising a power of appointment, or a writing designating a beneficiary of contractual rights. Otherwise, to be effective, the designation must be registered with or delivered to the fiduciary, payor, issuer, or obligor of the future right.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1213, § 1, effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section permits a future custodial trustee to be designated to receive property for the beneficiary of a custodial trust to be effective upon the occurrence of a future event or transfer. To accommodate changes in circumstances during the passage of time, one or more successors or substitute custodial trustees can also be designated. The designation of the future custodial trustee and the beneficiary can be made in an instrument which is revocable or irrevocable depending upon the nature of the transaction or transfer. Any person designated as a future custodial trustee may decline to serve before the transfer occurs or may resign under section 15-1.5-113 after the transfer.

The source of this section is Section 3 of UTMA. The enacting state's rule against perpetuities may limit or affect the creation of a custodial trust upon the occurrence of a future event, but because the use of a custodial trust usually contemplates dispositions for the benefit of living persons, perpetuity problems should rarely arise.

15-1.5-104. Form and effect of receipt and acceptance by custodial trustee - jurisdiction. (1) Obligations of a custodial trustee, including the obligation to follow upon directions of the beneficiary, arise under this article upon the custodial trustee's acceptance, express or implied, of the custodial trust property.

(2) The custodial trustee's acceptance may be evidenced by a writing stating in substance:

CUSTODIAL TRUSTEE'S RECEIPT AND ACCEPTANCE

I, _____ (name of custodial trustee) acknowledge receipt of the custodial trust property described below or in the attached instrument and accept the custodial trust as custodial trustee for _____ (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act". I undertake to administer and distribute the custodial trust property pursuant to the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act". My obligations as custodial trustee are subject to the directions of the beneficiary unless the beneficiary is designated as, is, or becomes incapacitated. The custodial trust property consists of _____.
Dated: _____

(Signature of Custodial Trustee)

(3) Upon accepting custodial trust property, a person designated as custodial trustee under this article is subject to personal jurisdiction of the court with respect to any matter relating to the custodial trust.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1214, § 1, effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Although a custodial trust is created by a transfer that satisfies section 15-1.5-102 of the Act, the responsibility and obligations upon the trustee do not arise until the trustee has accepted the transfer. This detailed section is included to call the attention of the parties to the effective receipt and acceptance by the custodial trustee. Once a custodial trustee accepts the transfer of the custodial trust property, the custodial trustee assumes the obligation of a custodial trustee under this Act. The acceptance can be expressed or implied, but it is recommended that the written acceptance provided for in section 15-1.5-104 (2) be utilized. By the acceptance the custodial trustee submits to the personal jurisdiction of the courts of the enacting state for the purpose of the custodial trust, despite subsequent relocation of the parties or of the custodial trust property. The principal sources of these provisions are Sections 8 and 9 of UTMA and the analogous provisions under the Uniform Probate Code, Sections 3-602, 5-208, 5-307, 7-103.

15-1.5-105. Transfer to custodial trustee by fiduciary or obligor - facility of payment. (1) Unless otherwise directed by an instrument designating a custodial trustee pursuant to section 15-1.5-103, a person, including a fiduciary other than a custodial trustee, who holds property of or owes a debt to an incapacitated individual not having a conservator may make a transfer to an adult member of the beneficiary's family or to a trust company as custodial trustee for the use and benefit of the incapacitated individual. If the value of the property or the debt exceeds thirty thousand dollars, the transfer is not effective unless authorized by the court.

(2) A written acknowledgment of delivery, signed by a custodial trustee, is a sufficient receipt and discharge for property transferred to the custodial trustee pursuant to this section.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1214, § 1, effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is in the nature of a facility-of-payment provision that permits persons owing money to an incapacitated individual to discharge a fixed obligation by a payment to a custodial trustee under this Act. The section does not authorize the custodial trustee to settle claims for disputed amounts but only to acknowledge an effective receipt of property paid or delivered. It is based primarily on Sections 6 and 7 of UTMA and includes the protections of Section 8 of UTMA as well. It permits a custodial trust to be established as a substitute for a conservatorship to receive payments due an incapacitated individual. Also, see section 15-1.5-111, which protects transferors and other third parties dealing with the custodial trustee.

15-1.5-106. Multiple beneficiaries - separate custodial trusts - survivorship.

(1) Beneficial interests in a custodial trust created for multiple beneficiaries are deemed to be separate custodial trusts of equal undivided interests for each beneficiary. Except in a transfer or declaration for use and benefit of husband and wife, for whom survivorship is presumed, a right of survivorship does not exist unless the instrument creating the custodial trust specifically provides for survivorship.

(2) Custodial trust property held under this article by the same custodial trustee for the use and benefit of the same beneficiary may be administered as a single custodial trust.

(3) A custodial trustee of custodial trust property held for more than one beneficiary shall separately account to each beneficiary pursuant to sections 15-1.5-107 and 15-1.5-115 for the administration of the custodial trust.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1214, § 1, effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This Act, unlike UTMA, does not preclude a custodial trust for more than one beneficiary. Adult persons creating custodial trusts are likely to set up custodial trusts in various forms, e.g., parents may wish to set up a custodial trust for their children or for themselves, then for a spouse, etc. However, the interests of each beneficiary are separate and the custodial trustee is obligated under subsection (3) to account separately to each beneficiary for administration of the beneficiary's interest in the custodial trust.

Subsection (2) allows a custodial trustee who is administering multiple custodial trusts for the same beneficiary to administer the custodial trusts as a single custodial trust. For example, if multiple trusts are created for an incapacitated beneficiary, the custodial trustee can administer them as a single custodial trust.

15-1.5-107. General duties of custodial trustee. (1) If appropriate, a custodial trustee shall register or record the instrument vesting title to custodial trust property.

(2) If the beneficiary is not incapacitated, a custodial trustee shall follow the directions of the beneficiary in the management, control, investment, or retention of the custodial trust property. In the absence of effective contrary direction by the beneficiary while not incapacitated, or if the beneficiary is incapacitated, the custodial trustee shall observe the standard of care that would be observed by a prudent person dealing with property of another and shall comply with the provisions of the "Colorado Uniform Prudent Investor Act". However, a custodial trustee, in the custodial trustee's discretion, may retain any custodial trust property received from the transferor.

(3) Subject to subsection (2) of this section, a custodial trustee shall take control of and collect, hold, manage, invest, and reinvest custodial trust property.

(4) A custodial trustee at all times shall keep custodial trust property of which the custodial trustee has control, separate from all other property in a manner sufficient to identify it clearly as custodial trust property of the beneficiary. Custodial trust property, the title to which is subject to recordation, is so identified if an appropriate instrument so identifying the property is recorded, and custodial trust property subject to registration is so identified if it is registered, or held in an account in the name of the custodial trustee, designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"".

(5) A custodial trustee shall keep records of all transactions with respect to custodial trust property, including information necessary for the preparation of tax returns, and shall make the records and information available at reasonable times to the beneficiary or legal representative of the beneficiary.

(6) The exercise of a durable power of attorney for an incapacitated beneficiary is not effective to terminate or direct the administration or distribution of a custodial trust.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1215, § 1, effective August 4.

Editor's note: Colorado modified the model act by directing that the custodial trustee shall also comply with the provisions of the "Colorado Uniform Prudent Investor Act".

OFFICIAL COMMENT

Subsection (2) restates and confirms the control by the beneficiary who is not incapacitated. However, the trustee has a reasonable obligation to act when the beneficiary has not directed him. Under sections 15-1.5-109 and 15-1.5-110, when a beneficiary becomes incapacitated, the custodial trust becomes a discretionary trust and the trustee is subject to the control of the statute and not the beneficiary's direction. The custodial trustee is subject to the usual trustee's standard as taken from Section 7-302 of the Uniform

Probate Code. The statute also imposes a slightly higher standard on professional fiduciaries acting under the statute. Otherwise, much of this section is taken from Section 12 of UTMA. Whenever recordable assets, such as land, are in the custodial trust, the trustee would be expected to record title to the asset. The section is entitled "general duties" because there are additional specific duties identified in other sections such as Section 15-1.5-109.

15-1.5-108. General powers of custodial trustee. (1) A custodial trustee, acting in a fiduciary capacity, has all the rights and powers over custodial trust property which an unmarried adult owner has over individually owned property, but a custodial trustee may exercise those rights and powers in a fiduciary capacity only.

(2) This section does not relieve a custodial trustee from liability for a violation of section 15-1.5-107.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is taken from Section 13 of UTMA. It grants the trustee very broad powers over the property, subject, however, to the Prudent Person Rule and to the obligations set out in the Act. An alternative approach to subsection (1) that might be taken by an enacting state is to refer to the existing statutes granting powers to a trustee, such as the Uniform Trustee's Powers Act. For example: [A custodial trustee has the powers of a trustee under the Uniform Trustee's Powers Act.]

15-1.5-109. Use of custodial trust property. (1) A custodial trustee shall pay to the beneficiary or expend for the beneficiary's use and benefit so much or all of the custodial trust property as the beneficiary while not incapacitated may direct from time to time.

(2) If the beneficiary is incapacitated, the custodial trustee shall expend so much or all of the custodial trust property as the custodial trustee considers advisable for the use and benefit of the beneficiary and individuals who were supported by the beneficiary when the beneficiary became incapacitated or who are legally entitled to support by the beneficiary. Expenditures may be made in the manner, when, and to the extent that the custodial trustee determines suitable and proper, without court order and without regard to other support, income, or property of the beneficiary.

(3) A custodial trustee may establish checking, savings, or other similar accounts of reasonable amounts under which either the custodial trustee or the beneficiary may withdraw funds from, or draw checks against, the accounts. Funds withdrawn from, or checks written against, the account by the beneficiary are distributions of custodial trust property by the custodial trustee to the beneficiary.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section provides that the custodial trustee is obligated to follow the directions of the beneficiary who is not incapacitated in paying over or expending custodial trust property. If the beneficiary is incapacitated, this section imposes duties on the custodial trustee to apply funds for the beneficiary similar to those imposed on custodians for minors under Section 14 of UTMA. In addition, however, subsection (2) authorizes a custodial trustee to pay over or expend custodial trust property for the use and benefit of the incapacitated beneficiary's dependents who were supported by the beneficiary at the time the beneficiary became incapacitated or for whom there is a legal obligation to support.

The use-and-benefits standard for the expenditure of custodial property is intended to avoid any implication that the custodial trust property can be used only for the required support of the incapacitated beneficiary.

Subsection (3) allows a custodial trustee to maintain a bank account, of an amount reasonable under the circumstances, with the beneficiary whereby both the beneficiary and the custodial trustee may write checks on the account. This may be used as one method of making money available for the beneficiary's personal needs. Many incapacitated persons, unable to manage business affairs, are still competent to pay personal expenses. This type of arrangement would be important to them. A custodial trustee should maintain, of course, a separate bank account for use in managing the custodial trust property and investments.

An alternative approach might be taken to this section that refers to the distributive powers of a conservator under the laws of the enacting state, in the event that state should prefer that incorporation by reference. For example: [The custodial trustee has the distributive powers of a conservator under the Uniform Probate Code.]

15-1.5-110. Determination of incapacity - effect. (1) The custodial trustee shall administer the custodial trust as for an incapacitated beneficiary if:

- (a) The custodial trust was created under section 15-1.5-105;
  - (b) The transferor has so directed in the instrument creating the custodial trust; or
  - (c) The custodial trustee has determined that the beneficiary is incapacitated.
- (2) A custodial trustee may determine that the beneficiary is incapacitated in reliance upon:

(a) Previous direction or authority given by the beneficiary while not incapacitated, including direction or authority pursuant to a durable power of attorney;

- (b) The certificate of the beneficiary's physician; or
- (c) Other persuasive evidence.

(3) If a custodial trustee for an incapacitated beneficiary reasonably concludes that the beneficiary's incapacity has ceased, or that circumstances concerning the beneficiary's ability to manage property and business affairs have changed since the creation of a custodial trust directing administration as for an incapacitated beneficiary, the custodial trustee may administer the trust as for a beneficiary who is not incapacitated.

(4) On petition of the beneficiary, the custodial trustee, or other person interested in the custodial trust property or the welfare of the beneficiary, the court shall determine whether the beneficiary is incapacitated.

(5) Absent determination of incapacity of the beneficiary under subsection (2) or (4) of this section, a custodial trustee who has reason to believe that the beneficiary is incapacitated shall administer the custodial trust in accordance with the provisions of this article applicable to an incapacitated beneficiary.

(6) Incapacity of a beneficiary does not terminate:

- (a) The custodial trust;
- (b) Any designation of a successor custodial trustee;
- (c) Rights or powers of the custodial trustee; or
- (d) Any immunities of third persons acting on instructions of the custodial trustee.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This is one of the more important sections of the Act under which the custodial trustee may determine that the beneficiary is incapacitated so the trust will change from one subject to the control of the beneficiary to a discretionary trust for the beneficiary. Subsection (2) allows the custodial trustee to determine that the beneficiary is incapacitated provided the determination is based upon the certificate of the beneficiary's physician, the prior direction or authority of the beneficiary, or other reasonable evidence. That authority could be evidenced, for example, by a durable power of attorney executed by the beneficiary prior to becoming incapacitated even though that power of attorney is not otherwise effective to control management or termination of the custodial trust. Such a durable power of attorney could be given to a child, spouse, friend, or other trusted individual. In addition, specific authority is provided in subsection (4) for the beneficiary, the custodial trustee, or other interested person to seek a declaration from the court as to the capacity of the beneficiary for the purposes of this Act. This is important to the custodial trustee, as his duties and responsibilities change on the event of the beneficiary's incapacity.

This section is not a proceeding for the appointment of a conservator, and it is not contemplated that such a declaration would lead to court appointment of a conservator or guardian unless other factors would warrant such appointment. The existence of a comprehensive and well-managed custodial trust would be one factor that would tend to avoid the necessity for the appointment of a conservator or guardian of the estate.

This section also does not provide a proceeding to attack the legal competence of a transferor in setting up a trust under section 15-1.5-102. Rather, section 15-1.5-110 relates to a management matter in a validly established custodial trust.

Subsection (6) provides that the incapacity of the beneficiary does not terminate the custodial trust. If the beneficiary becomes incapacitated, the authority of the custodial trustee continues and the custodial trustee must follow the statutory provisions of the Act relating to managing custodial trusts for incapacitated individuals.

15-1.5-111. Exemption of third persons from liability. (1) A third person in good faith and without a court order may act on instructions of, or otherwise deal with, a person purporting to make a transfer as, or purporting to act in the capacity of, a custodial trustee. In the absence of knowledge to the contrary, the third person is not responsible for determining:

- (a) The validity of the purported custodial trustee's designation;
- (b) The propriety of, or the authority under this article for, any action of the purported custodial trustee;
- (c) The validity or propriety of an instrument executed or instruction given pursuant to this article either by the person purporting to make a transfer or declaration or by the purported custodial trustee; or
- (d) The propriety of the application of property vested in the purported custodial trustee.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1217, § 1, effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is based upon Section 16 of the UTMA and protects third persons who deal in good faith with the custodial trustee.

15-1.5-112. Liability to third persons. (1) A claim based on a contract entered into by a custodial trustee acting in a fiduciary capacity, an obligation arising from the ownership or control of custodial trust property, or a tort committed in the course of administering the custodial trust may be asserted by a third person against the custodial trust property by proceeding against the custodial trustee in a fiduciary capacity, whether or not the custodial trustee or the beneficiary is personally liable.

(2) A custodial trustee is not personally liable to a third person:

(a) On a contract properly entered into in a fiduciary capacity unless the custodial trustee fails to reveal that capacity or to identify the custodial trust in the contract; or

(b) For an obligation arising from control of custodial trust property or for a tort committed in the course of the administration of the custodial trust unless the custodial trustee is personally at fault.

(3) A beneficiary is not personally liable to a third person for an obligation arising from beneficial ownership of custodial trust property or for a tort committed in the course of administration of the custodial trust unless the beneficiary is personally in possession of the custodial trust property giving rise to the liability or is personally at fault.

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) of this section do not preclude actions or proceedings to establish liability of the custodial trustee or beneficiary to the extent the person sued is protected as the insured by liability insurance.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1218, § 1 effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section is patterned after Section 17 of the UTMA and that section in turn was based upon Sections 5-428 and 7-306 of the Uniform Probate Code limiting the liability of conservators and trustees. See also Restatement of Trusts, 2d Sections 265 and 277. The effect of this section is to limit the claims of third parties to recourse against custodial trust property as both the custodial trustee and the beneficiary are protected from personal liability absent personal fault on their part. This section does not alter the obligations between the custodial trustee and the beneficiary arising out of the administration of the estate and the accounting for that administration.

There may be cases in which a custodial trustee or beneficiary may have a right to possession of custodial trust property and may insure against liability arising out of possession or control of the property as a named insured, e.g., under homeowner's or automobile liability insurance. In such a case, the beneficiary should be permitted as a party defendant under subsection (4) but only to the extent of the protection of the liability insurance.

15-1.5-113. Declination, resignation, incapacity, death, or removal of custodial trustee - designation of successor custodial trustee. (1) Before accepting the custodial trust property, a person designated as custodial trustee may decline to serve by notifying the person who made the designation, the transferor, or the transferor's legal representative. If an event giving rise to a transfer has not occurred, the substitute custodial trustee designated under section 15-1.5-103 becomes the custodial trustee, or, if a substitute custodial trustee has not been designated, the person who made the designation may designate a substitute custodial trustee pursuant to section 15-1.5-103. In other cases, the transferor or the transferor's legal representative may designate a substitute custodial trustee.

(2) A custodial trustee who has accepted the custodial trust property may resign by:

(a) Delivering written notice to a successor custodial trustee, if any, the beneficiary, and, if the beneficiary is incapacitated, to the beneficiary's conservator, if any; and

(b) Transferring or registering, or recording an appropriate instrument relating to, the custodial trust property, in the name of, and delivering the records to, the successor custodial trustee identified under subsection (3) of this section.

(3) If a custodial trustee or successor custodial trustee is ineligible, resigns, dies, or becomes incapacitated, the successor designated under section 15-1.5-102 (7) or section 15-1.5-103 becomes custodial trustee. If there is no effective provision for a successor, the beneficiary, if not incapacitated, may designate a successor custodial trustee. If the beneficiary is incapacitated, or fails to act within ninety days after the ineligibility, resignation, death, or incapacity of the custodial trustee, the beneficiary's conservator becomes successor custodial trustee. If the beneficiary does not have a conservator or the conservator fails to act, the resigning custodial trustee may designate a successor custodial trustee.

(4) If a successor custodial trustee is not designated pursuant to subsection (3) of this section, the transferor, the legal representative of the transferor or of the custodial trustee, an adult member of the beneficiary's family, the guardian of the beneficiary, a person interested in the custodial trust property, or a person interested in the welfare of the beneficiary may petition the court to designate a successor custodial trustee.

(5) A custodial trustee who declines to serve or resigns, or the legal representative of a deceased or incapacitated custodial trustee, as soon as practicable, shall put the custodial trust property and records in the possession and control of the successor custodial trustee. The successor custodial trustee may enforce the obligation to deliver custodial trust property and records and becomes responsible for each item as received.

(6) A beneficiary, the beneficiary's conservator, an adult member of the beneficiary's family, a guardian of the beneficiary, a person interested in the custodial trust property, or a person interested in the welfare of the beneficiary may petition the court to remove the custodial trustee for cause and designate a successor custodial trustee, to require the custodial trustee to furnish a bond or other security for the faithful performance of fiduciary duties, or for other appropriate relief.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section follows many of the provisions of Section 18 of UTMA with some substantive changes. It is designed to accommodate in a single section the circumstances in which a custodial trustee would be replaced by another custodial trustee. Under subsection (2), if the beneficiary is incapacitated, a custodial trustee who resigns must give written notice to both the beneficiary and the beneficiary's conservator if one exists. Under subsection (3), a beneficiary who is not incapacitated may designate, without limitation, a successor custodial trustee. If, however, the beneficiary fails to act or is incapacitated, the procedure to be followed is very similar to that found in UTMA except that the nonincapacitated beneficiary has 90 days to act and if the beneficiary has no conservator or if the conservator declines to act, the custodial trustee may eventually designate a successor custodial trustee.

Under subsection (6), the beneficiary, whether or not incapacitated, can petition the court to remove the custodial trustee for cause and to designate a successor trustee, or the court may require the custodial trustee to give bond or other appropriate relief.

This section, unlike Section 18 of UTMA, does not give the custodial trustee the general power to designate a successor custodial trustee but rather limits that power to the situation in which the procedure for designating successor custodial trustees by others has been exhausted.

15-1.5-114. Expenses, compensation, and bond of custodial trustee. (1) Except as otherwise provided in the instrument creating the custodial trust, in an agreement with the beneficiary, or by court order, a custodial trustee:

(a) Is entitled to reimbursement from custodial trust property for reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of fiduciary services;

(b) Has a noncumulative election, to be made no later than six months after the end of each calendar year, to charge a reasonable compensation for fiduciary services performed during that year; and

(c) Need not furnish a bond or other security for the faithful performance of fiduciary duties.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1219, § 1, effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section follows the pattern of Section 15 of the UTMA except it does subject the arrangements for payment of expenses, compensation, and bond to provisions in the custodial trust instrument or agreement of the beneficiary or court order.

As in UTMA, the provisions with regard to compensation are designed to avoid imputed compensation to the custodian who waives compenensation and also to avoid the accumulation of claims for compensation until the termination of the custodial trust. Although the ability to control these matters by the trust instrument or agreement of the beneficiary seems to be implied, as was assumed in UTMA, it is here expressly stated because of the possibility of informal arrangements with persons as trustees.

15-1.5-115. Reporting and accounting by custodial trustee - determination of liability of custodial trustee. (1) (a) Upon the acceptance of custodial trust property, the custodial trustee shall provide a written statement describing the custodial trust property and shall thereafter provide a written statement of the administration of the custodial trust property:

(I) Once each year;

(II) Upon request at reasonable times by the beneficiary or the beneficiary's legal representative;

(III) Upon resignation or removal of the custodial trustee; and

(IV) Upon termination of the custodial trust.

(b) The statements must be provided to the beneficiary or to the beneficiary's legal representative, if any. Upon termination of the beneficiary's interest, the custodial trustee shall furnish a current statement to the person to whom the custodial trust property is to be delivered.

(2) A beneficiary, the beneficiary's legal representative, an adult member of the beneficiary's family, a person interested in the custodial trust property, or a person interested in the welfare of the beneficiary may petition the court for an accounting by the custodial trustee or the custodial trustee's legal representative.

(3) A successor custodial trustee may petition the court for an accounting by a predecessor custodial trustee.

(4) In an action or proceeding under this article or in any other proceeding, the court may require or permit the custodial trustee or the custodial trustee's legal representative to account. The custodial trustee or the custodial trustee's legal representative may petition the court for approval of final accounts.

(5) If a custodial trustee is removed, the court shall require an accounting and order delivery of the custodial trust property and records to the successor custodial trustee and the execution of all instruments required for transfer of the custodial trust property.

(6) On petition of the custodial trustee or any person who could petition for an accounting, the court, after notice to interested persons, may issue instructions to the custodial trustee or review the propriety of the acts of a custodial trustee or the reasonableness of compensation determined by the custodial trustee for the services of the custodial trustee or others.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section requires that the custodial trustee inform the beneficiary of the initiation of the trust and provide reasonably current reports of the administration of the custodial trust to the beneficiary or the beneficiary's legal representative. Even though some custodial trustees may act informally, it seems appropriate that both the trustee and the beneficiary be expected to exchange complete information concerning the administration of the trust at least once each year. In some cases, more frequent exchanges of information between the custodial trustee and beneficiary would be expected, e.g., when they use a bank account to which both have access. This is particularly true with regard to necessary information for tax reporting by the parties involved. This section assumes the usual minimum components of an account, i.e., assets and values at the beginning of the accounting period, receipts, and disbursements during the accounting period and assets and their values on hand or available for distribution at the close of the accounting period.

Subsection (1) identifies the necessary reports and accountings for the parties, and subsection (2) identifies a broad group of persons who may petition the court for an accounting by the custodial trustee or the custodial trustee's legal representative. Much of the section is drawn from Section 19 of the UTMA modified to fit the custodial trust. Subsection (6) recognizes the inherent power of the court to instruct trustees and review their actions. This paragraph is patterned after Uniform Probate Code Section 7-205.

15-1.5-116. Limitations of action against custodial trustee. (1) Except as provided in subsection (3) of this section, unless previously barred by adjudication, consent, or limitation, a claim for relief against a custodial trustee for accounting or breach of duty is barred as to a beneficiary, a person to whom custodial trust property is to be paid or delivered, or the legal representative of an incapacitated or deceased beneficiary or payee:

(a) Who has received a final account or statement fully disclosing the matter unless an action or proceeding to assert the claim is commenced within two years after receipt of the final account or statement; or

(b) Who has not received a final account or statement fully disclosing the matter unless an action or proceeding to assert the claim is commenced within three years after the termination of the custodial trust.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (3) of this section, a claim for relief to recover from a custodial trustee for fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment related to the final settlement of the custodial trust or concealment of the existence of the custodial trust is barred unless an action or proceeding to assert the claim is commenced within five years after the termination of the custodial trust.

(3) A claim for relief is not barred by this section if the claimant:

(a) Is a minor, until the earlier of two years after the claimant becomes an adult or dies;

(b) Is an incapacitated adult, until the earliest of two years after the appointment of a conservator, the removal of the incapacity, or the death of the claimant; or

(c) Was an adult, now deceased, who was not incapacitated, until two years after the claimant's death.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

In an effort to provide as comprehensive a statute as possible to inform the parties of substantially all of their obligations and rights, statutes of limitation are provided in this section. The limitations provided in this section are derived from the Uniform Probate Code, Sections 1-106 and 7-307, and from the Missouri Custodial Act.

The nature of the limitations imposed by the section are illustrated by the situation in which a custodial trustee is removed, resigns, or dies. If the former custodial trustee accounts as required under section 15-1.5-113 on removal or resignation, or the deceased custodial trustee's personal representative accounts, the two-year limitation of subsection (1)(a) applies. Should the former custodial trustee or the personal representative fail to account, then, subsection (1)(b) would apply to limit the time in which a proceeding to assert the claim could be commenced. This time would begin to run on the date the trust terminated. Of course, if the claim is one for fraud or concealment, the longer time limitation of subsection (2) would apply. In any event, should the beneficiary become incapacitated or die before the applicable time limitation had expired, the tolling provision of subsection (3) could postpone the time bar until two years after removal of the disability or death.

- 15-1.5-117. Distribution on termination. (1) Upon termination of a custodial trust, the custodial trustee shall transfer the unexpended custodial trust property:
- (a) To the beneficiary, if not incapacitated or deceased;
  - (b) To the conservator or other recipient designated by the court for an incapacitated beneficiary; or
  - (c) Upon the beneficiary's death, in the following order:
    - (I) As last directed in a writing signed by the deceased beneficiary while not incapacitated and received by the custodial trustee during the life of the deceased beneficiary;
    - (II) To the survivor of multiple beneficiaries if survivorship is provided for pursuant to section 15-1.5-106;
    - (III) As designated in the instrument creating the custodial trust; or
    - (IV) To the estate of the deceased beneficiary.
- (2) If, when the custodial trust would otherwise terminate, the distributee is incapacitated, the custodial trust continues for the use and benefit of the distributee as beneficiary until the incapacity is removed or the custodial trust is otherwise terminated.
- (3) Death of a beneficiary does not terminate the power of the custodial trustee to discharge obligations of the custodial trustee or beneficiary incurred before the termination of the custodial trust.

Source: L. 99: Entire article added, p. 1221, § effective August 4.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section controls distribution of the custodial trust property when the custodial trust is terminated under section 15-1.5-102(5). It is designed to provide for efficient and certain distribution without judicial proceedings. Subsection (1)(c) is an important provision for avoiding complications on distribution and provides that distribution may be controlled first, by the direction of the deceased beneficiary or second, by the custodial trust instrument (see sections 15-1.5-102, 15-1.5-106, and 15-1.5-118) and, only if no effective prior designation for the payment or distribution of the property on the death of the beneficiary has been made, shall it pass through the beneficiary's estate.

The direction to the custodial trustee by the beneficiary, who is not incapacitated, for distribution on termination of the custodial trust may be in any written form clearly identifying the distributee. For example, the following direction would be adequate under the statute:

I, _____ (name of beneficiary) hereby direct _____ (name of trustee) as custodial trustee, to transfer and pay the unexpended balance of the custodial trust property of which I am beneficiary to _____ as distributee on the termination of the trust at my death. In the event of the prior death of _____ above named as distributee, I designate _____ as distributee of the custodial trust property.

Receipt Acknowledged (signature) _____ Custodial Trustee
Date _____

- 15-1.5-118. Methods and forms for creating custodial trusts. (1) If a transaction, including a declaration with respect to or a transfer of specific property, otherwise satisfies applicable law, the criteria of section 15-1.5-102 are satisfied by:
- (a) The execution and either delivery to the custodial trustee or recording of an instrument in substantially the following form:

TRANSFER UNDER THE
"COLORADO UNIFORM CUSTODIAL TRUST ACT"

I, _____ (name of transferor or name and representative capacity if a fiduciary), transfer to _____ (name of trustee other than transferor), as custodial trustee for _____ (name of beneficiary) as beneficiary and as distributee on termination of the trust in absence of direction by the beneficiary under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act", the following: (insert a description of the custodial trust property legally sufficient to identify and transfer each item of property).

Dated: _____

(Signature); or

(b) The execution and the recording or giving notice of its execution to the beneficiary of an instrument in substantially the following form:

DECLARATION OF TRUST UNDER THE
"COLORADO UNIFORM CUSTODIAL TRUST ACT"

I, _____ (name of owner of property), declare that henceforth I hold as custodial trustee for _____ (name of beneficiary other than transferor) as beneficiary and as distributee on termination of the trust in absence of direction by the beneficiary under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act", the following: (insert a description of the custodial trust property legally sufficient to identify and transfer each item of property).
Dated: _____

(Signature).

(2) Customary methods of transferring or evidencing ownership of property may be used to create a custodial trust, including any of the following:

(a) Registration of a security in the name of a trust company, an adult other than the transferor, or the transferor if the beneficiary is other than the transferor, designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(b) Delivery of a certificated security, or a document necessary for the transfer of an uncertificated security, together with any necessary endorsement, to an adult other than the transferor or to a trust company as custodial trustee, accompanied by an instrument in substantially the form prescribed in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section;

(c) Payment of money or transfer of a security held in the name of a broker or a financial institution or its nominee to a broker or financial institution for credit to an account in the name of a trust company, an adult other than the transferor, or the transferor if the beneficiary is other than the transferor, designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(d) Registration of ownership of a life or endowment insurance policy or annuity contract with the issuer in the name of a trust company, an adult other than the transferor, or the transferor if the beneficiary is other than the transferor, designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(e) Delivery of a written assignment to an adult other than the transferor or to a trust company whose name in the assignment is designated in substance by the words: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(f) Irrevocable exercise of a power of appointment, pursuant to its terms, in favor of a trust company, an adult other than the donee of the power, or the donee who holds the power if the beneficiary is other than the donee, whose name in the appointment is designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(g) Delivery of a written notification or assignment of a right to future payment under a contract to an obligor which transfers the right under the contract to a trust company, an adult other than the transferor, or the transferor if the beneficiary is other than the transferor, whose name in the notification or assignment is designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(h) Execution, delivery, and recordation of a conveyance of an interest in real property in the name of a trust company, an adult other than the transferor, or the transferor if the beneficiary is other than the transferor, designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the "Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act"";

(i) Issuance of a certificate of title by an agency of a state or of the United States which evidences title to tangible personal property:

(l) Issued in the name of a trust company, an adult other than the transferor, or the transferor if the beneficiary is other than the transferor, designated in substance: "as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the “Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act””; or

(II) Delivered to a trust company or an adult other than the transferor or endorsed by the transferor to that person, designated in substance: “as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the “Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act””; or

(j) Execution and delivery of an instrument of gift to a trust company or an adult other than the transferor, designated in substance: “as custodial trustee for (name of beneficiary) under the “Colorado Uniform Custodial Trust Act””.

OFFICIAL COMMENT

This section largely follows Section 9 of UTMA. It provides instructional detail for forms and methods of transferring assets that satisfy the requirements of the statute. Although many of the customary methods of transferring assets are identified, these methods are not intended to be exclusive since any type of property that can be transferred by any legal means is intended to be within the scope of the statute, provided the requirements of section 15-1.5-102 are met. The method of transfer or conveyance appropriate to the asset should be used, e.g., if land is involved, a deed or conveyance that satisfies the local requirements would be appropriate. In the effort to make the statute as self-contained and as fully explanatory as possible, these provisions for implementation are included in the statute rather than being appended or inserted in the Comments.

15-1.5-119. Applicable law. (1) This article applies to a transfer or declaration creating a custodial trust that refers to this article if, at the time of the transfer or declaration, the transferor, beneficiary, or custodial trustee is a resident of or has its principal place of business in this state or custodial trust property is located in this state. The custodial trust remains subject to this article despite a later change in residence or principal place of business of the transferor, beneficiary, or custodial trustee, or removal of the custodial trust property from this state.

(2) A transfer made pursuant to an act of another state substantially similar to this article is governed by the law of that state and may be enforced in this state.

PART 1

CREATION OF POWERS OF APPOINTMENT

15-2-101. Legislative declaration. It is the policy of the state of Colorado to authorize the creation and reservation of powers of appointment as defined and classified under the provisions of this part 1.

15-2-102. Power of appointment, donor, donee, objects, appointees, takers in default defined. (1) A power of appointment is any power other than a power held in a fiduciary capacity created or reserved by any person, institution, or corporation having property subject to its disposal, enabling itself or another to designate, within such limits as it shall prescribe, the appointees of the property or of any right, interest, or estate therein or the shares in which it shall be received. A power of appointment shall include all powers which are in substance and effect powers of appointment regardless of the language used in creating them.

(2) Repealed.

(3) The donor of a power of appointment is the person, institution, or corporation who or which creates or reserves the power of appointment.

(4) The donee of a power of appointment is the person, institution, or corporation in whom or in which the power of appointment is created or reserved.

ANNOTATION

Vested powers of appointment do not include powers held by fiduciary. Vested powers of appointment, as defined in this section, do not include those powers held by a fiduciary. In re Estate of Colman, 35 Colo. App. 390, 535 P.2d 227 (1975), aff'd, 191 Colo. 242, 552 P.2d 1 (1976).

Valid exercise of power of appointment depends on manner exercised. The question of whether a power of appointment has been validly exercised depends not on the intent of the donee of the power, but on whether the power was exercised in the manner prescribed by the donor. Thompson v. Smith, 41 Colo. App. 366, 585 P.2d 319 (1978).

15-2-103. Powers of appointment classified. (1) A general power of appointment is a power of appointment which is exercisable in favor of the donee, his estate, his creditors, or the creditors of his estate.

(2) A special power of appointment is any power of appointment which is not a general power of appointment.

(3) A power of appointment by will is any power of appointment which, being created or reserved in an individual, may be exercised by the donee only by will or by other instrument which by its terms or by law takes effect only at death.

(4) A power of appointment by deed is any power of appointment which is not a power of appointment by will.

15-2-104. Vested and contingent powers of appointment distinguished. (1) A power of appointment is vested:

(a) When, at or after its creation, the donee has or obtains a present right to exercise such power by deed or by will, which present right may not be divested or defeated by the occurrence or nonoccurrence of any contingency, condition, or event; or

(b) When, at or after its creation, the donee has a present right to exercise such power, which exercise would become effective only after the termination of other rights, interests, or estates in the property subject to such power, and the donee's present right to exercise such power may not thereafter be divested or defeated by the occurrence or nonoccurrence of any contingency, condition, or event.

(2) All powers of appointment not vested are contingent.

ANNOTATION

Because this section provides an adequate legal remedy for plaintiff's claim that her son fraudulently induced her into not contesting her husband's will, the statute of limitations in § 15-12-108 is not subject to equitable tolling. In re Estate of Kubby, 929 P.2d 55 (Colo. App. 1996).

In the city and county of Denver, the jurisdiction for a claim of fraud lies only with the probate court and district court properly determined that it lacked jurisdiction in this matter. Pound v. Fletter, 39 P.3d 1241 (Colo. App. 2001).

15-10-106.5. Petition to determine cause and date of death resulting from disaster - body unidentifiable or missing. (1) If the occurrence of a disaster has been declared by proclamation of the governor under section 24-32-2104, C.R.S., and it appears that a person has died as a direct result, but the remains have not been located or are unidentifiable, the coroner, sheriff, or district attorney for the county in which any part of such disaster occurred, the spouse, next of kin, or public administrator for such county, or, thirty days after the disaster was declared, any other person, may apply to the coroner of such county asking that the coroner determine the cause, manner, and date of death of the alleged decedent.

(4) A certified copy of an order issued pursuant to subsection (7) of this section shall be sufficient when presented to the coroner or other person acting in place of the coroner for the issuance of a certificate of death under this section.

(5) An application for the finding of death under this section shall not be filed later than five years following the initial proclamation of the disaster.

(6) This section shall apply only under the circumstances specified in subsection (1) of this section. In all other cases and if the coroner finds the evidence insufficient to support the issuance of a death certification, the provisions of section 15-10-107 with respect to determination of death and status apply.

(2) If, in any proceeding under this code, the absentee is not found to be deceased and any policy of insurance or any annuity or endowment contract owned by the absentee provides for a surrender value, the conservator, acting for the insured, with court approval and a finding of necessity, may demand the payment of surrender value to the estate of the absentee. The receipt of the conservator for such payment shall be a release to the contract issuer of all claims under the contract.

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions in any annuity or endowment contract or policy of life or accident insurance or in the charter or bylaws of any mutual or fraternal insurance association hereafter executed or adopted, the provisions of this section shall govern the effect to be given to evidence of absence or of death.

(4) When any annuity or endowment contract, any policy of life or accident insurance, or the charter or bylaws of any mutual or fraternal insurance association hereafter executed or adopted contains a provision requiring a beneficiary to bring suit upon a claim of death within a stated period after the death of the insured and the fact of the absence of the insured is relied upon by the beneficiary as evidence of the death, the action may be begun, notwithstanding such provision in the contract, policy, charter, or bylaws, at any time within the statutory period of limitation for actions on contracts in writing dating from the date of death of the absentee, as determined in a formal testacy proceeding under this code.

(II) A person who is reasonably believed to be an heir at law or devisee of the decedent, a person nominated as a personal representative pursuant to the provisions of section 15-12-203 (1) (a), or the agent or attorney of such person for the purpose of determining whether the box contains an instrument that appears to be a will of the decedent, deed to a burial plot, or burial instructions.

(b) If a person described in subparagraph (I) or (II) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) desires access to a safe deposit box but does not possess a key to the box, the custodian shall drill the safe deposit box at the person's expense. In the case of a person described in subparagraph (I) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1), the custodian shall deliver the contents of the box, other than a purported will, deed to a burial plot, and burial instructions, to the person in accordance with section 15-12-1201. In the case of a person described in subparagraph (II) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1), the custodian shall retain, in a secure location at the person's expense, the contents of the box other than a purported will, deed to a burial plot, and burial instructions. A deed to a burial plot and burial instructions that are not part of a purported will may be removed by a person described in subparagraph (I) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) pursuant to paragraph (d) of subsection (2) of this section, and the custodian shall not prevent the removal. Expenses incurred by a custodian pursuant to this section shall be considered an estate administration expense.

(c) A representative of the custodian shall be present during the entry of a safe deposit box pursuant to this section.

(1.3) Nothing in this section affects the rights and responsibilities of a public administrator, as described in sections 15-12-620 and 15-12-621.

(b) "Representative of a custodian" means an authorized officer or employee of a custodian.

(2) (a) If an instrument purporting to be a will is found in a safe deposit box as the result of an entry pursuant to subsection (1) of this section, the purported will shall be removed by the representative of the custodian.

(b) At the request of the person or persons authorized to have access to the safe deposit box under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, the representative of the custodian shall copy each purported will of the decedent, at the expense of the requesting person, and shall deliver the copy of each purported will to the person, or if directed by the person, to the person's agent or attorney. In copying any purported will, the representative of the custodian shall not remove any staples or other fastening devices or disassemble the purported will in any way.

(c) The custodian shall mail the purported will by registered or certified mail or deliver the purported will in person to the clerk of the district or probate court of the county in which the decedent was a resident. If the custodian is unable to determine the county of residence of the decedent, the custodian shall mail the purported will by registered or certified mail or deliver the purported will in person to the office of the clerk of the proper court of the county in which the safe deposit box is located.

(d) If the safe deposit box contains a deed to a burial plot or burial instructions that are not a part of a purported will, the person or persons authorized to have access to the safe deposit box under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section may remove these instruments.

(3) After the appointment of a personal representative or special administrator for the decedent, the personal representative or special administrator shall be permitted to enter the safe deposit box upon the same terms and conditions as the decedent was permitted to enter during his or her lifetime.

15-10-112. Cost of living adjustment of certain dollar amounts. (1) As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "CPI" means the consumer price index (annual average) for all urban consumers (CPI-U): United States city average — all items, reported by the bureau of labor statistics, United States department of labor or its successor agency or, if the index is discontinued, an equivalent index reported by a federal authority. If no such index is reported, the term means the substitute index chosen by the department of revenue; and

(b) "Reference base index" means the CPI for the calendar year 2010.

(2) The dollar amounts stated in sections 15-11-102, 15-11-201 (2), 15-11-403, 15-11-405, and 15-12-1201 apply to the estate of a decedent who died during or after 2010, but for the estate of a decedent who died after 2011, these dollar amounts must be increased or decreased if the CPI for the calendar year immediately preceding the year of death exceeds or is less than the reference base index. The amount of any increase or decrease is computed by multiplying each dollar amount by the percentage by which the CPI for the calendar year immediately preceding the year of death exceeds or is less than the reference base index. If the amount of the increase or decrease produced by the computation is not a multiple of one thousand dollars, then the amount of the increase or decrease is rounded down if it is an increase, or rounded up if it is a decrease, to the next multiple of one thousand dollars, but for the purpose of section 15-11-405, the periodic installment amount is the lump-sum amount divided by twelve. If the CPI for 2010 is changed by the bureau of labor statistics, the reference base index must be revised using the rebasing factor reported by the bureau of labor statistics, or other comparable data if a rebasing factor is not reported.

(3) Before February 1, 2012, and before February 1 of each succeeding year, the department of revenue shall publish a cumulative list, beginning with the dollar amounts effective for the estate of a decedent who died in 2012 of each dollar amount as increased or decreased under this section.

Editor's note: (1) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act adding this section:

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

(2) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsections (1)(b), (2), and (3):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Automatic Adjustments for Inflation.

Added in 2008, Section 1-109 operates in conjunction with the inflation adjustments of the dollar amounts listed in subsection (b) also adopted in 2008. Section 1-109 was added to make it unnecessary in the future for the ULC or individual enacting states to continue to amend the UPC periodically to adjust the dollar amounts for inflation. This section provides for an automatic adjustment of each of the above dollar amounts annually.

In each January, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor reports the CPI (annual average) for the preceding calendar year. The information can be obtained by telephone (202/691-5200) or on the Bureau's website.

Subsection (c) tasks an appropriate state agency, such as the Department of Revenue, to issue an official cumulative list of the adjusted amounts beginning in January of the year after the effective date of the act. This subsection is bracketed because some enacting states might not have a state agency that could appropriately be assigned the task of issuing updated amounts. Such an enacting state might consider tasking the state supreme court to issue a court rule each year making the appropriate adjustment.

(2) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act adding subsections (44.5) and (47.5):

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

(3) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsection (59):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

Recorded option to purchase land at death of decedent is not "claim" against the estate under this section, because it constitutes a demand or dispute regarding title to a specific asset of the estate. Brown v. Brown, 43 Colo. App. 535, 608 P.2d 840 (1980).

Not equitable proceeding to redress breach of contract relating to will. Since an equitable proceeding to redress a breach of contract relating to a will is not in the nature of a demand which would reduce the size of the estate, such an action involves a dispute as to the ownership of the decedent's property and is not a "claim" against the estate. Thus, the nonclaims statute, § 15-12-803, does not determine the time within which the action must be started. Knies v. Gross, 43 Colo. App. 127, 599 P.2d 976 (1979).

Potential right of indemnity under insurance policy deemed "property". A decedent's potential right of indemnity under a liability insurance policy is personal property encompassed within the comprehensive meaning of "property" as defined in subsection (36), justifying the appointment of an administrator and the probate of an estate. Price v. Sommermeyer, 195 Colo. 285, 577 P.2d 752 (1978).

Definition of "claim" is applied in Matter of Estate of Musselman, 784 P.2d 858 (Colo. App. 1989).

Potential devisee is entitled to notice of hearing during which court will determine validity of will. If, at time of hearing, the court had yet to determine the validity of the will, and thus the status of the petitioner as an "interested party", the potential devisee must be given notice in order to have the opportunity to meet her burden to prove decedent's intent and overcome any presumption of revocation. In re Estate of Evarts, 166 P.3d 161 (Colo. App. 2007).

15-10-303. Venue - multiple proceedings - transfer. (1) Where a proceeding under this code could be maintained in more than one place in this state, the court in which the proceeding is first commenced has the exclusive right to proceed.

(2) If proceedings concerning the same estate, protected person, ward, or trust are commenced in more than one court of this state, the court in which the proceeding was first commenced shall continue to hear the matter, and the other courts shall hold the matter in abeyance until the question of venue is decided, and if the ruling court determines that venue is properly in another court, it shall transfer the proceeding to the other court.

(3) If a court finds that in the interest of justice a proceeding or a file should be located in another court of this state, the court making the finding may transfer the proceeding or file to the other court.

Records and certified copies. (1) The clerk of each court shall keep for each decedent, ward, protected person, or trust under the court's jurisdiction a record of any document which may be filed with the court under this code, including petitions and applications, demands for notices or bonds, trust registrations, and of any orders or responses relating thereto by the registrar or court, and establish and maintain a system for indexing, filing, or recording which is sufficient to enable users of the records to obtain adequate information. The same rules of finality apply in probate cases as in other civil cases. An order of the probate court is final if it ends the particular action in which it is entered and leaves nothing further for the court pronouncing it to do in order to completely determine the rights of the parties as to that proceeding. ## PART 4

NOTICE, PARTIES, AND REPRESENTATION IN ESTATE LITIGATION AND OTHER MATTERS

15-10-401. Notice - method and time of giving. (1) If notice of a hearing on any petition is required, and except for specific notice requirements as otherwise provided, the petitioner shall cause notice of the time and place of hearing on any petition to be given to any interested person or to the interested person's attorney of record or the interested person's designee. Notice shall be given:

A party may not obtain a final appealable judgment by filing a new petition under a new case number, where determination of the new petition is inextricably linked to the main probate proceeding and there is no preclusive effect of the probate court's order that dismissed the new petition. In re Estate of Scott, 151 P.3d 642 (Colo. App. 2006).

An order which completely determines the issues of the trustee's indebtedness to and compensation from the estate is a final judgment on those issues. Retainer of jurisdiction by the probate court to later modify the trustee's rate of compensation does not change the order into an interlocutory order. Estate of Binford v. Gibson, 839 P.2d 508 (Colo. App. 1992).

Probate court's order appointing special administrator is final and appealable. In re Estate of Franchs, 722 P.2d 422 (Colo. App. 1986).

Where probate court's order of partial summary judgment adjudicated fewer than all of the parties' claims, it was not a final judgment, and party could not appeal the order without C.R.C.P. 54(b) certification. In re Estate of Scott, 119 P.3d 511 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

(a) By mailing a copy thereof at least fourteen days before the time set for the hearing by certified, registered, or ordinary first-class mail addressed to the person being notified at the post-office address given in any demand for notice, or at the person's office or place of residence, if known; or

(b) By delivering a copy thereof to the person being notified personally at least fourteen days before the time set for the hearing; or

(c) If the address or identity of any person is not known and cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence, by publishing once a week for three consecutive weeks, a copy thereof in a newspaper having general circulation published in the county where the hearing is to be held, the last publication of which is to be at least fourteen days before the time set for the hearing. In case there is no newspaper of general circulation published in the county of appointment, said publication shall be made in such a newspaper in an adjoining county. A motion for court permission to publish the notice of any hearing shall not be required unless otherwise directed by the court.

(2) The court for good cause shown may provide for a different method or time of giving notice for any hearing.

(3) Proof of the giving of notice shall be made on or before the hearing and filed in the proceeding. If notice is given by publication, at the time the party who issued the notice by publication files proof of publication, that party shall also file an affidavit verified by the oath of such party or by someone on his or her behalf stating the facts that warranted the use of publication for service of the notice of the hearing and stating the efforts, if any, that have been made to obtain personal service or service by mail. The affidavit shall also state the address, or last known address, of each person served by publication or shall state that the person's address or identity is unknown and cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence.

(4) "Publication once a week for three consecutive weeks" means publication once during each week of three consecutive calendar weeks with at least twelve days elapsing between the first and last publications.

Law reviews. For article, "Will Contests — Some Procedural Aspects", see 15 Colo. Law. 787 (1986).

15-10-403. Pleadings - when parties bound by others - notice. (1) In formal proceedings involving trusts or estates of decedents, minors, protected persons, or incapacitated persons, and in judicially supervised settlements, the provisions of this section are applicable.

(2) Interests to be affected shall be described in pleadings which give reasonable information to owners by name or class, by reference to the instrument creating the interests, or in other appropriate manner.

(3) Persons are bound by orders binding others in the following cases:

(a) Orders binding the sole holder or all coholders of a power of revocation or a presently exercisable general power of appointment, including one in the form of a power of amendment, bind other persons to the extent their interests (as objects, takers in default, or otherwise) are subject to the power.

(b) To the extent there is no conflict of interest between them or among persons represented, orders binding a conservator bind the person whose estate he controls; orders binding a guardian bind the ward if no conservator of his estate has been appointed; orders binding a trustee bind beneficiaries of the trust in proceedings to probate a will establishing or adding to a trust, to review the acts or accounts of a prior fiduciary and in proceedings involving creditors or other third parties; and orders binding a personal representative bind persons interested in the undistributed assets of a decedent's estate in actions or proceedings by or against the estate.

(c) If there is no conflict of interest and no conservator or guardian has been appointed, a parent may represent his minor child, and where there is such representation orders binding the parent bind the minor child.

(d) An unborn, unascertained, minor, or incapacitated person who is not otherwise represented is bound by an order to the extent his or her interest is adequately represented by another party having a substantially identical interest in the proceeding.

(4) Notice is required as follows:

(a) Notice as prescribed by section 15-10-401 shall be given to each interested person or to one who can bind an interested person as described in subsection (3) of this section. Notice may be given both to a person and to another who may bind him.

(b) Notice is given to unborn, unascertained, minor, or incapacitated persons who are not represented under subsection (3) of this section by giving notice to all known persons whose interests in the proceedings are substantially identical to those of the unborn, unascertained, minor, or incapacitated persons.

(5) At any point in a proceeding, a court may appoint a guardian ad litem to represent the interest of a minor, an incapacitated, protected, unborn, or unascertained person, or a person whose identity or address is unknown, if the court determines that a need for such representation appears. If not precluded by conflict of interests, a guardian ad litem may be appointed to represent several persons or interests. The court shall set out its reasons for appointing a guardian ad litem as a part of the record of the proceeding.

FIDUCIARY OVERSIGHT, REMOVAL, SANCTIONS, AND CONTEMPT

15-10-501. Court powers - definitions - application. (1) Court powers. A court, incident to a court proceeding, possesses and may employ all of the powers and authority expressed in the provisions of this part 5 to maintain the degree of supervision necessary to ensure the timely and proper administration of estates by fiduciaries over whom the court has obtained jurisdiction. Nothing in this part 5 shall be interpreted to limit a court’s powers under Colorado law. The powers of a court as described in this part 5 do not confer jurisdiction over the fiduciaries of nonsupervised trusts, private trusts, agencies created by powers of attorney, and custodial accounts created under the “Colorado Uniform Transfers to Minors Act”, article 50 of title 11, C.R.S., except as provided in paragraph (c) of subsection (2) of this section.

(2) Definitions. As used in this part 5, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) “Court” means a district court of Colorado and the probate court of the city and county of Denver.

(b) “Estate” means the estate of a decedent; a guardianship; a protective proceeding; a trust, including an implied trust; an agency created by a power of attorney; or a custodial account created under the “Colorado Uniform Transfers to Minors Act”, article 50 of title 11, C.R.S.

(c) “Jurisdiction” means, and is restricted to, the personal jurisdiction obtained by a court over a fiduciary as a result of the filing of a proceeding concerning the estate. The filing of a trust registration statement, by itself, shall not constitute a proceeding for the purposes of this part 5.

(3) Application. The provisions of this part 5 shall apply to any fiduciary over whom a court has obtained jurisdiction, including but not limited to a personal representative, special administrator, guardian, conservator, special conservator, trustee, agent under a power of attorney, and custodian, including a custodian of assets or accounts created under the “Colorado Uniform Transfers to Minors Act”, article 50 of title 11, C.R.S.

15-10-502. Initial investigation. (1) If, during the administration of an estate, a court desires to be informed about the current status of the administration, then the court, on its own motion or the request of an interested person, and without the need to state any reason for its actions, may:

(a) Send a letter to the fiduciary of the estate directing the fiduciary to file with the court one or more of the following documents on or before a date to be determined by the court:

- (I) A status report;
  - (II) An inventory of the current assets of the estate;
  - (III) An up-to-date interim accounting; or
  - (IV) A financial report concerning the estate;
- (b) Order the fiduciary to file or appear before the court to submit one or more of the documents described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) on or before a date to be determined by the court.

(2) When a court has directed a fiduciary to file or appear before the court to submit one or more of the documents described in paragraph (a) of this subsection (1), the fiduciary may request that the documents be placed under security pursuant to rule 20 of the Colorado rules of probate procedure.

15-10-503. Power of a court to address the conduct of a fiduciary - emergencies - nonemergencies. (1) Emergency situations - court action without the requirement of prior notice or hearing. If it appears to a court that an emergency exists because a fiduciary's actions or omissions pose an imminent risk of substantial harm to a ward's or protected person's health, safety, or welfare or to the financial interests of an estate, the court may, on its own motion or upon the request of an interested person, without a hearing and without following any of the procedures authorized by section 15-10-502, order the immediate restraint, restriction, or suspension of the powers of the fiduciary; direct the fiduciary to appear before the court; or take such further action as the court deems appropriate to protect the ward or protected person or the assets of the estate. If a court restrains, restricts, or suspends the powers of a fiduciary, the court shall set a hearing and direct that notice be given pursuant to section 15-10-505. The clerk of the court shall immediately note the restraint, restriction, or suspension on the fiduciary's letters, if any. Any action for the removal, surcharge, or sanction of a fiduciary shall be governed by subsection (2) of this section.

(2) Nonemergency situations - court action after notice and hearing. Upon petition by a person who appears to have an interest in an estate, or upon the court's own motion, and after a hearing for which notice to the fiduciary has been provided pursuant to section 15-10-505, a court may order any one or more of the following:

(a) Supervised administration of a decedent's estate, as described in part 5 of article 12 of this title. The degree and extent of the supervision shall be endorsed upon the fiduciary's letters, if any.

(b) A temporary restraint on the fiduciary's performance of specified acts of administration, disbursement, or distribution; a temporary restraint on the fiduciary's exercise of any powers or discharge of any duties of the office of the fiduciary; or any other order to secure proper performance of the fiduciary's duty if it appears to the court that, in the absence of such an order, the fiduciary may take some action that would unreasonably jeopardize the interest of the petitioner or of some other interested person. The court may make persons with whom the fiduciary may transact business parties to any order issued pursuant to this paragraph (b). The restraint shall be endorsed upon the fiduciary's letters, if any.

(c) Additional restrictions on the powers of the fiduciary. The restrictions shall be endorsed upon the fiduciary's letters, if any.

(d) The suspension of the fiduciary if the court determines that the fiduciary has violated his, her, or its fiduciary duties. If a court orders the suspension of a fiduciary pursuant to this paragraph (d), the court shall direct that the suspension be endorsed upon the fiduciary's letters, if any.

(e) The removal of the fiduciary. A court may remove a fiduciary for cause at any time, and the following provisions shall apply:

(I) After a fiduciary receives notice of proceedings for his, her, or its removal, the fiduciary shall not act except to account, to correct maladministration, or to preserve the estate.

(II) If a court orders the removal of a fiduciary, the court shall direct by order the disposition of the assets remaining in the name of, or under the control of, the fiduciary being removed.

(III) Cause for removal of a fiduciary exists when removal would be in the best interests of the estate or if it is shown that the fiduciary or the person seeking the fiduciary's appointment intentionally misrepresented material facts in the proceedings leading to the fiduciary's appointment, or that the fiduciary has disregarded an order of the court, has become incapable of discharging the duties of the office, or has mismanaged the estate or failed to perform any duty pertaining to the office.

(IV) If a court orders the removal of a fiduciary, the court shall direct that the fiduciary's letters, if any, be revoked and such revocation be endorsed upon the fiduciary's letters, if any.

(f) The appointment of a temporary or permanent successor fiduciary;

(g) A review of the fiduciary's conduct. If a court orders a review of the fiduciary's conduct, the court shall specify the scope and duration of the review in the court's order.

(h) A surcharge or sanction of the fiduciary pursuant to section 15-10-504; or

(i) Such further relief as the court deems appropriate to protect the ward or protected person or the assets of the estate.

15-10-504. Surcharge - contempt - sanctions against fiduciaries. (1) Notice. Except as provided in subsection (3) of this section, notice to a fiduciary concerning any matters governed by the provisions of this section shall be provided pursuant to section 15-10-505.

(2) Surcharge. (a) If a court, after a hearing, determines that a breach of fiduciary duty has occurred or an exercise of power by a fiduciary has been improper, the court may surcharge the fiduciary for any damage or loss to the estate, beneficiaries, or interested persons. Such damages may include compensatory damages, interest, and attorney fees and costs.

(b) In awarding attorney fees and costs pursuant to this section, a court may consider the provisions of part 6 of this article.

(3) Contempt proceedings against fiduciary. Nothing in this part 5 shall be interpreted to limit or restrict a court's authority to proceed against a fiduciary for direct contempt as provided in rule 107 of the Colorado rules of civil procedure. In addition, if a fiduciary fails to comply with an order of a court issued pursuant to this part 5, the court may proceed against the fiduciary for indirect contempt as provided in rule 107 of the Colorado rules of civil procedure. A court may initiate indirect contempt proceedings on its own motion or upon the filing of a motion supported by affidavit as described in rule 107 of the Colorado rules of civil procedure.

(4) Sanctions. If a court determines that a breach of fiduciary duty has occurred or an exercise of power by a fiduciary has been improper, the court, after a hearing, may order such other sanctions as the court deems appropriate.

15-10-505. Notice to fiduciary - current address on file. (1) In all actions undertaken pursuant to this part 5, the following provisions shall govern notice to fiduciaries:

(a) In emergency situations. If it appears to a court that an emergency exists because there is an imminent risk of substantial harm to a ward's or protected person's health, safety, or welfare or to the financial interests of an estate, the court may take appropriate action and issue an order with or without prior notice to a fiduciary as the court determines appropriate based upon the nature of the emergency. If a fiduciary of an estate is not present when an emergency order is entered concerning the administration of the estate, the court shall attempt to notify the fiduciary of the court's action and mail a copy of the court's order to the fiduciary at the fiduciary's last address of record on file with the court. Notice of the court's order shall also be served, pursuant to section 15-10-401, upon all interested persons or as the court directs. Notice of all hearings set under section 15-10-503 (1) shall be given pursuant to section 15-10-401.

(b) In nonemergency situations. In nonemergency situations, notice to a fiduciary shall be governed by section 15-10-401.

(c) Contempt. For a hearing to determine possible contempt of a fiduciary, the court shall provide notice to the fiduciary as required by rule 107 of the Colorado rules of civil procedure.

(2) Fiduciary's responsibility to keep current address in court file. Every fiduciary appointed by a court is required to keep his, her, or its current address and telephone number on file with the court. The fiduciary shall promptly notify the court of any change in the fiduciary's address or telephone number.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-083), ch. 101, p. 295, § 1, effective August 10.

15-10-602. Recovery of reasonable compensation and costs. (1) A fiduciary and his or her lawyer are entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered on behalf of an estate.

(2) A lawyer hired by a respondent, ward, or protected person is entitled to reasonable compensation and costs incurred for the legal representation the lawyer provides for the respondent, ward, or protected person.

(3) A third party who performs services at the request of a court is entitled to reasonable compensation.

(4) A person's entitlement to compensation or costs shall not limit or remove a court's inherent authority, discretion, and responsibility to determine the reasonableness of compensation and costs when appropriate.

(5) Except as limited or otherwise restricted by a court order, compensation and costs that may be recovered pursuant to this section may be paid directly or reimbursed without a court order. A court shall order a person who receives excessive compensation or payment for inappropriate costs to make appropriate refunds.

(6) Except as provided in sections 15-10-605 (4), 15-14-318 (4), and 15-14-431 (5), if any fiduciary or person with priority for appointment as personal representative, conservator, guardian, agent, custodian, or trustee defends or prosecutes a proceeding in good faith, whether successful or not, the fiduciary or person is entitled to receive from the estate reimbursement for necessary costs and disbursements, including but not limited to reasonable attorney fees.

(7) (a) Except as otherwise provided in part 5 of this article or in this part 6, a nonfiduciary or his or her lawyer is not entitled to receive compensation from an estate.

(b) If a lawyer or another person not appointed by the court provides services that result in an order beneficial to the estate, respondent, ward, or protected person, the lawyer or other person not appointed by the court may receive costs and reasonable compensation from the estate as provided below:

(I) The lawyer or other person shall file a request for compensation for services or costs alleged to have resulted in the order within fourteen days after the entry of the order or within a greater or lesser time as the court may direct. Any objection thereto shall be filed within fourteen days after the filing of the request for compensation or costs.

(II) After a request for compensation or costs or an objection to such a request, if any has been filed, the court shall determine, without a hearing, the benefit, if any, that the estate received from the services provided.

(III) If the court determines that a compensable benefit resulted from the services, then the person requesting compensation or costs shall submit to the court only those fees or costs purportedly incurred in providing the beneficial services. If no objection to those fees and costs is filed, the court shall determine the amount of compensation or costs to be awarded for the benefit, without a hearing.

(IV) An interested person disputing the reasonableness of the amount of compensation or costs requested for the beneficial services may file an objection. If an objection is filed, the proceedings to resolve the dispute shall be governed by section 15-10-604.

(c) In determining a reasonable amount of compensation or costs, the court may take into account, in addition to the factors set forth in section 15-10-603 (3):

(I) The value of a benefit to the estate, respondent, ward, or protected person;

(II) The number of parties involved in addressing the issue;

(III) The efforts made by the lawyer or person not appointed by the court to reduce and minimize issues; and

(IV) Any actions by the lawyer or person not appointed by the court that unnecessarily expanded issues or delayed or hindered the efficient administration of the estate.

(d) For the purposes of this subsection (7), services rendered by a lawyer or a person not appointed by a court that confer a benefit to an estate, respondent, ward, or protected person are those significant, demonstrable, and generally noncumulative services that assist the court in resolving material issues in the administration of an estate. By way of example and not limitation, such benefits may result in significantly increasing or preventing a significant decrease in the size of the estate, preventing or exposing maladministration or a material breach of fiduciary duty, or clarifying and upholding a decedent's, settlor's, principal's, respondent's, ward's, or protected person's intent with respect to a material issue in dispute.

(8) A fiduciary who is a member of a law firm may use the services of the law firm and charge for the reasonable value of the services of the members and staff of the firm that assist the fiduciary in performing his or her duties.

(9) Every application or petition for appointment of a fiduciary filed under this code, including without limitation those required under sections 15-12-301, 15-12-402, 15-12-614, 15-12-621, 15-12-622, 15-14-202, 15-14-204, 15-14-304, and 15-14-403, shall include a statement by the applicant or petitioner disclosing the basis upon which any compensation is to be charged to the estate by the fiduciary and his or her or its counsel or shall state that the basis has not yet been determined. The disclosure statement shall specifically describe, as is applicable, the hourly rates to be charged, any amounts to be charged pursuant to a published fee schedule, including the rates and basis for charging fees for any extraordinary services, and any other bases upon which a fee charged to the estate will be calculated. This disclosure obligation shall be continuing in nature so as to require supplemental disclosures if material changes to the basis for charging fees take place.

15-10-603. Factors in determining the reasonableness of compensation and costs.

(1) A court may review and determine:

(a) The reasonableness of the compensation of any fiduciary, lawyer, or other person who:

(I) Is employed on behalf of an estate, fiduciary, respondent, ward, or protected person;

(II) Is appointed by the court; or

(III) Provides beneficial services to an estate, respondent, ward, or protected person; and

(b) The appropriateness of any cost sought to be paid by or recovered from an estate.

(2) In considering the reasonableness of the compensation, there shall be no presumption that any method of charging a fee for services rendered to an estate, fiduciary, principal, respondent, ward, or protected person is per se unreasonable. Regardless of the method used for charging a fee, in determining appropriate compensation, the court shall apply the standard of reasonableness in light of all relevant facts and circumstances.

(3) The court shall consider all of the factors described in this subsection (3) in determining the reasonableness of any compensation or cost. The court may determine the weight to be given to each factor and to any other factor the court considers relevant in reaching its decision:

(a) The time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill required to perform the service properly;

(b) The likelihood, if apparent to the fiduciary, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude the person employed from other employment;

(c) (I) The compensation customarily charged in the community for similar services with due consideration and allowance for the complexity or uniqueness of any administrative or litigated issues, the need for and local availability of specialized knowledge or expertise, and the need for and advisability of retaining outside fiduciaries or lawyers to avoid potential conflicts of interest;

(II) As used in this subsection (3), unless the context otherwise requires, "community" means the general geographical area in which the estate is being administered or in which the respondent, ward, or protected person resides.

(d) The nature and size of the estate, the liquidity or illiquidity of the estate, and the results and benefits obtained during the administration of the estate;

(e) Whether and to what extent any litigation has taken place and the results of such litigation;

(f) The life expectancy and needs of the respondent, ward, protected person, devisee, beneficiary, or principal;

(g) The time limitations imposed on or by the fiduciary or by the circumstances of the administration of the estate;

(h) The adequacy of any detailed billing statements upon which the compensation is based;

(i) Whether the fiduciary has charged variable rates that reflect comparable payment standards in the community for like services;

(j) The expertise, reputation, and ability of the person performing the services and, in the case of a fiduciary, whether and to what extent the fiduciary has had any prior experience in administering estates similar to those for which compensation is sought;

(k) The terms of a governing instrument;

(l) The various courses of action available to a fiduciary or an individual seeking compensation for a particular service or alleged benefit and whether the course of action taken was reasonable and appropriate under the circumstances existing at the time the service was performed; and

(m) The various courses of action available to a fiduciary or an individual seeking compensation for a particular service or alleged benefit and the cost-effectiveness of the action taken under the circumstances existing at the time the service was performed.

(4) If a governing instrument provides that a fiduciary is entitled to receive compensation in accordance with a published fee schedule in effect at the time the services are performed, fees charged in accordance with the published fee schedule shall be presumed to be reasonable. The absence of such a provision in a governing instrument shall not preclude the fiduciary from receiving compensation in accordance with a published fee schedule in effect at the time the services are performed.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be interpreted to prohibit members or employees of a professional fiduciary's organization or law firm, including partners, associates, paralegals, law clerks, trust officers, caregivers, and social workers, from collaborating on the same service so long as the collaboration is reasonable and the total compensation charged for the service in the aggregate is reasonable under the circumstances.

15-10-604. Fee disputes - process and procedure. (1) A dispute over the reasonableness of a request for compensation or costs authorized by this part 6 shall be resolved in accordance with the factors set forth in section 15-10-603 (3) and the process and procedure set forth in this section.

(2) For purposes of this section, a fee dispute shall be deemed to have arisen when an objection to compensation or costs has been filed in a proceeding.

(3) After the objection to compensation or costs has been filed, the person requesting compensation or costs shall have thirty-five days, or a greater or lesser time as the court may direct, to make available to the objector for inspection and copying all documentation that the person deems necessary to establish the reasonableness of the compensation and costs in consideration of the factors set forth in section 15-10-603 (3) and to certify to the court that such documentation was made available to the objector on a certain date. The objector shall then have fourteen days, or a greater or lesser time as the court may direct, to file specific written objections to such compensation and costs based on the factors set forth in section 15-10-603 (3). The fourteen days shall commence on the date that the person makes the documentation available to the objector or upon the filing of the person's certification, whichever is later. The court may permit further discovery on the compensation and cost issues raised by the pleadings only upon good cause shown.

(4) Subject to the court's inherent authority to order alternative dispute resolution methods, the court shall determine, after notice and hearing, the amount of compensation and costs it considers to be reasonable and shall issue its findings of fact and conclusions of law referencing the factors set forth in section 15-10-603 (3) and any other factors it deems relevant to its decision.

15-10-605. Compensation and costs - assessment - limitations. (1) If the court determines that any proceedings pursuant to this code or any pleadings filed in such proceedings were brought, defended, or filed in bad faith, the court may assess the fees and the costs, including reasonable attorney fees, incurred by the fiduciary and other affected parties in responding to the proceedings or pleadings, against an estate, party, person, or entity that brought or defended the proceedings or filed the pleadings in bad faith. Nothing in this section is intended to limit any other remedy, sanction, or surcharge provided by law.

(2) If any person entitled to compensation under this part 6 is required to defend the reasonableness of compensation or costs in a proceeding, the court may review the fees and costs incurred by the person in defending the compensation or costs, and the fees incurred in challenging the compensation and costs, and may assess the reasonable fees and costs incurred in the proceeding as the court deems equitable. The court may allocate fees or costs assessed pursuant to this subsection (2) in favor of or against the estate or any party, person, or entity involved in the proceeding as justice and equity may require.

(3) A person who is unsuccessful in defending the reasonableness of compensation or costs at a hearing shall not be entitled to recover the fees or costs of that defense as the court deems equitable.

(4) A fiduciary who is unsuccessful in defending the fiduciary's conduct in a proceeding pursuant to this code alleging breach of fiduciary duty shall not recover the fees or costs of that defense as the court deems equitable.

- (a) An estate existing before, on, or after August 10, 2011; and
- (b) Proceedings to determine the reasonableness of compensation and costs commenced on or after August 10, 2011.

(2) This part 6 does not apply to proceedings to determine the reasonableness of compensation and costs commenced before August 10, 2011, unless the court determines that the application of this part 6 would not prejudice the rights of any party to the proceeding and the court directs otherwise.

PREFATORY NOTE

The Uniform Probate Code was originally promulgated in 1969.

1990 Revisions. In 1990, Article II underwent significant revision. The 1990 revisions were the culmination of a systematic study of the Code conducted by the Joint Editorial Board for the Uniform Probate Code (now named the Joint Editorial Board for Uniform Trust and Estate Acts) and a special Drafting Committee to Revise Article II. The 1990 revisions concentrated on Article II, which is the article that covers the substantive law of intestate succession; spouse's elective share; omitted spouse and children; probate exemptions and allowances; execution and revocation of wills; will contracts; rules of construction; disclaimers; and the effect of homicide and divorce on succession rights; and the rule against perpetuities and honorary trusts.

Themes of the 1990 Revisions. In the twenty or so years between the original promulgation of the Code and 1990, several developments occurred that prompted the systematic round of review. Three themes were sounded: (1) the decline of formalism in favor of intent-serving policies; (2) the recognition that will substitutes and other inter-vivos transfers have so proliferated that they now constitute a major, if not the major, form of wealth transmission; (3) the advent of the multiple-marriage society, resulting in a significant fraction of the population being married more than once and having stepchildren and children by previous marriages and (4) the acceptance of a partnership or marital-sharing theory of marriage.

The 1990 revisions responded to these themes. The multiple-marriage society and the partnership/marital-sharing theory were reflected in the revised elective-share provisions of Part 2. As the General Comment to Part 2 explained, the revised elective share granted the surviving spouse a right of election that implemented the partnership/marital-sharing theory of marriage.

The children-of-previous-marriages and stepchildren phenomena were reflected most prominently in the revised rules on the spouse's share in intestacy.

The proliferation of will substitutes and other inter-vivos transfers was recognized, mainly, in measures tending to bring the law of probate and nonprobate transfers into greater unison. One aspect of this tendency was reflected in the restructuring of the rules of construction. Rules of construction are rules that supply presumptive meaning to dispositive and similar provisions of governing instruments. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 11.3 (2003). Part 6 of the pre-1990 Code contained several rules of construction that applied only to wills. Some of those rules of construction appropriately applied only to wills; provisions relating to lapse, testamentary exercise of a power of appointment, and ademption of a devise by satisfaction exemplify such rules of construction. Other rules of construction, however, properly apply to all governing instruments, not just wills; the provision relating to inclusion of adopted persons in class gift language exemplifies this type of rule of construction. The 1990 revisions divided pre-1990 Part 6 into two parts — Part 6, containing rules of construction for wills only; and Part 7, containing rules of construction for wills and other governing instruments. A few new rules of construction were also added.

In addition to separating the rules of construction into two parts, and adding new rules of construction, the revocation-upon-divorce provision (section 2-804) was substantially revised so that divorce not only revokes testamentary devises, but also nonprobate beneficiary designations, in favor of the former spouse. Another feature of the 1990 revisions was a new section (section 2-503) that brought the execution formalities for wills more into line with those for nonprobate transfers.

2008 Revisions. In 2008, another round of revisions was adopted. The principal features of the 2008 revisions are summarized as follows:

Inflation Adjustments. Between 1990 and 2008, the Consumer Price Index rose by somewhat more than 50 percent. The 2008 revisions raised the dollar amounts by 50 percent in Article II Sections 2-102, 2-102A, 2-201, 2-402, 2-403, and 2-405, and added a new cost of living adjustment section — Section 1-109.

Intestacy. Part 1 on intestacy was divided into two subparts: Subpart 1 on general rules of intestacy and subpart 2 on parent-child relationships. For details, see the General Comment to Part 1.

Execution of Wills. Section 2-502 was amended to allow notarized wills as an alternative to wills that are attested by two witnesses. That amendment necessitated minor revisions to Section 2-504 on self-proved wills and to Section 3-406 on the effect of notarized wills in contested cases.

Class Gifts. Section 2-705 on class gifts was revised in a variety of ways, as explained in the revised Comment to that section.

Reformation and Modification. New Sections 2-805 and 2-806 brought the reformation and modification sections now contained in the Uniform Trust Code into the Uniform Probate Code.

Historical Note. This Prefatory Note was revised in 2008.

PART 1

INTESTATE SUCCESSION

GENERAL COMMENT

The pre-1990 Code's basic pattern of intestate succession, contained in Part 1, was designed to provide suitable rules for the person of modest means who relies on the estate plan provided by law. The 1990 and 2008 revisions were intended to further that purpose, by fine tuning the various sections and bringing them into line with developing public policy and family relationships.

1990 Revisions. The principal features of the 1990 revisions were:

1. So-called negative wills were authorized, under which the decedent who dies intestate, in whole or in part, can by will disinherit a particular heir.

2. A surviving spouse was granted the whole of the intestate estate, if the decedent left no surviving descendants and no parents or if the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse and the surviving spouse has no descendants who are not descendants of the decedent. The surviving spouse receives the first $200,000 plus three-fourths of the balance if the decedent left no surviving descendants but a surviving parent. The surviving spouse receives the first $150,000 plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate, if the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse but the surviving spouse has one or more other descendants. The surviving spouse receives the first $100,000 plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate, if the decedent has one or more surviving descendants who are not descendants of the surviving spouse. (To adjust for inflation, these dollar figures and other dollar figures in Article II were increased by fifty percent in 2008.)

3. A system of representation called per capita at each generation was adopted as a means of more faithfully carrying out the underlying premise of the pre-1990 UPC system of representation. Under the per-capita-at-each-generation system, all grandchildren (whose parent has predeceased the intestate) receive equal shares.

4. Although only a modest revision of the section dealing with the status of adopted children and children born of unmarried parents was then made, the question was under continuing review and it was anticipated that further revisions would be forthcoming in the future.

5. The section on advancements was revised so that it applies to partially intestate estates as well as to wholly intestate estates.

2008 Revisions. As noted in Item 4 above, it was recognized in 1990 that further revisions on matters of status were needed. The 2008 revisions fulfilled that need. Specifically, the 2008 revisions contained the following principal features:

Part 1 Divided into Two Subparts. Part 1 was divided into two subparts: Subpart 1 on general rules of intestacy and Subpart 2 on parent-child relationships.

Subpart 1: General Rules of Intestacy. Subpart 1 contains Sections 2-101 (unchanged), 2-102 (dollar figures adjusted for inflation), 2-103 (restyled and amended to grant intestacy rights to certain stepchildren as a last resort before the intestate estate escheats to the state), 2-104 (amended to clarify the requirement of survival by 120 hours as it applies to heirs who are born before the intestate's death and those who are in gestation at the intestate's death), 2-105 (unchanged), 2-106 (unchanged), 2-107 (unchanged), 2-108 (deleted and matter dealing with heirs in gestation at the intestate's death relocated to 2-104), 2-109 (unchanged), 2-110 (unchanged), 2-111 (unchanged), 2-112 (unchanged), 2-113 (unchanged), and 2-114 (deleted and replaced with a new section addressing situations in which a parent is barred from inheriting).

Subpart 2: Parent-Child Relationships. New Subpart 2 contains several new or substantially revised sections. New Section 2-115 contains definitions of terms that are used in subpart 2. New Section 2-116 is an umbrella section declaring that, except as otherwise provided in Section 2-119(b) through (e), if a parent-child relationship exists or is established under this subpart 2, the parent is a parent of the child and the child is a child of the parent for purposes of intestate succession. Section 2-117 continues the rule that, except as otherwise provided in Sections 2-120 and 2-121, a parent-child relationship exists between a child and the child's genetic parents, regardless of their marital status. Regarding adopted children, Section 2-118 continues the rule that adoption establishes a parent-child relationship between the adoptive parents and the adoptee for purposes of intestacy. Section 2-119 addresses the extent to which an adoption severs the parent-child relationship with the adoptee's genetic parents. New Sections 2-120 and 2-121 turn to various parent-child relationships resulting from assisted reproductive technologies in forming families. As one researcher reported: "Roughly 10 to 15 percent of all adults experience some form of infertility." Debora L. Spar, The Baby Business 31 (2006). Infertility, coupled with the desire of unmarried individuals to have children, have led to increased questions concerning children of assisted reproduction. Sections 2-120 and 2-121 address inheritance rights in cases of children of assisted reproduction, whether the birth mother is the one who parents the child or is a gestational carrier who bears the child for an intended parent or intended parents. As two authors have noted: "Parents, whether they are in a married or unmarried union with another, whether they are a single parent, whether they procreate by sexual intercourse or by assisted reproductive technology, are entitled to the respect the law gives to family choice." Charles P. Kindregan, Jr. & Maureen McBrien, Assisted Reproductive Technology: A Lawyer's Guide to Emerging Law and Science 6-7 (2006). The final section, new Section 2-122, provides that nothing contained in Subpart 2 should be construed as affecting application of the judicial doctrine of equitable adoption.

Historical Note. This General Comment was revised in 2008.

GENERAL RULES

Cross references: For clarification of the term "surviving spouse", see § 15-11-802.

15-11-101. Intestate estate. (1) Any part of a decedent's estate not effectively disposed of by will or otherwise passes by intestate succession to the decedent's heirs as prescribed in this code, except as modified by the decedent's will.

(2) A decedent by will may expressly exclude or limit the right of an individual or class to succeed to property of the decedent passing by intestate succession. If that individual or a member of that class survives the decedent, the share of the decedent's intestate estate to which that individual or class would have succeeded passes as if that individual or each member of that class had disclaimed his or her intestate share.

Section inoperative where will disposes of the estate. When the existence of a will disposing of the estate is once conceded, no heir can establish any rights by inheritance on simple proof of descent. Under such circumstances the statutes of intestate succession do not become operative. Hall v. Cowles' Estate, 15 Colo. 343, 25 P. 705 (1890).

Where a will clearly limits participation in the estate to the devisees and unambiguously excludes other family members from participation, the omitted heirs cannot participate by intestacy in the distribution of the trust even if no devisee survives the termination of the trust. In re Estate of Walter, 97 P.3d 188 (Colo. App. 2003).

15-11-102. Share of spouse. The various possible circumstances describing the decedent, his or her surviving spouse, and their surviving descendants, if any, are set forth in this section to be utilized in determining the intestate share of the decedent's surviving spouse. If more than one circumstance is applicable, the circumstance that produces the largest share for the surviving spouse shall be applied. The intestate share of a decedent's surviving spouse is:

- (1) The entire intestate estate if:
  - (a) No descendant or parent of the decedent survives the decedent; or
  - (b) All of the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse and there is no other descendant of the surviving spouse who survives the decedent;
- (2) The first three hundred thousand dollars, plus three-fourths of any balance of the intestate estate, if no descendant of the decedent survives the decedent, but a parent of the decedent survives the decedent;

The right to inherit is statutory and the statute which governs is embraced in §§ 15-11-101 to 15-11-113 inclusive. Wilson v. Wilson, 95 Colo. 159, 33 P.2d 969 (1934).

The policy of our law is to have property descend to the heirs in the manner provided in this article. Danks v. Herrmann, 94 Colo. 546, 31 P.2d 912 (1934).

Remainder not devised or bequeathed shall be distributed as estate of an intestate. Provisions of a will reviewed, and held to dispose of a life estate in the property only, being silent with respect to the remainder, which was not devised or bequeathed, is to be distributed in the same manner as the estate of an intestate. Blatt v. Blatt, 79 Colo. 57, 243 P. 1099 (1926).

A testator is presumed to know the laws of the state in which he lives concerning the descent and distribution of intestate property. Blatt v. Blatt, 79 Colo. 57, 243 P. 1099 (1926).

The law of an intestate's actual domicile at the time of his death governs the intestate succession of his property, when it is all situate in that state. Blatt v. Blatt, 79 Colo. 57, 243 P. 1099 (1926).

Heirs cannot complain of steps taken by intestate to deprive them of inheritance. During the lifetime of the intestate, his property was subject to his control and disposition. If it was his pleasure to take such steps as would increase the inheritance of this minor grandchild, he could do so, either by adoption or testamentary provision, and his heirs, whom he could have deprived of any inheritance at all, cannot complain. Hughes v. Jones, 89 Colo. 455, 3 P.2d 1074 (1931); In re Wilson's Estate, 95 Colo. 159, 33 P.2d 969 (1934).

(3) The first two hundred twenty-five thousand dollars, plus one-half of any balance of the intestate estate, if all of the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse and the surviving spouse has one or more surviving descendants who are not descendants of the decedent;

(4) The first one hundred fifty thousand dollars, plus one-half of any balance of the intestate estate, if one or more of the decedent's surviving descendants are not descendants of the surviving spouse.

(5) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2009, (HB 09-1287), ch. 310, p. 1671, § 3, effective July 1, 2010.)

(2) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending this section:

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Purpose and Scope of 1990 Revisions. This section was revised in 1990 to give the surviving spouse a larger share than the pre-1990 UPC. If the decedent leaves no surviving descendants and no surviving parent or if the decedent does leave surviving descendants but neither the decedent nor the surviving spouse has other descendants, the surviving spouse is entitled to all of the decedent's intestate estate.

If the decedent leaves no surviving descendants but does leave a surviving parent, the decedent's surviving spouse receives the first $300,000 plus three-fourths of the balance of the intestate estate.

If the decedent leaves surviving descendants and if the surviving spouse (but not the decedent) has other descendants, and thus the decedent's descendants are unlikely to be the exclusive beneficiaries of the surviving spouse's estate, the surviving spouse receives the first $225,000 plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate. The purpose is to assure the decedent's own descendants of a share in the decedent's intestate estate when the estate exceeds $225,000.

If the decedent has other descendants, the surviving spouse receives $150,000 plus one-half of the balance. In this type of case, the decedent's descendants who are not descendants of the surviving spouse are not natural objects of the bounty of the surviving spouse.

Note that in all the cases where the surviving spouse receives a lump sum plus a fraction of the balance, the lump sums must be understood to be in addition to the probate exemptions and allowances to which the surviving spouse is entitled under Part 4. These can add up to a minimum of $64,500.

Under the pre-1990 Code, the decedent's surviving spouse received the entire intestate estate only if there were neither surviving descendants nor parents. If there were surviving descendants, the descendants to one-half of the balance of the estate in excess of $50,000 (for example, $25,000 in a $100,000 estate). If there were no surviving descendants, but there was a surviving parent or parents, the parent or parents took that one-half of the balance in excess of $50,000.

2008 Cost-of-Living Adjustments. As revised in 1990, the dollar amount in paragraph (2) was $200,000, in paragraph (3) was $150,000, and in paragraph (4) was $100,000. To adjust for inflation, these amounts were increased in 2008 to $300,000, $225,000, and $150,000 respectively. The dollar amounts in these paragraphs are subject to annual cost-of-living adjustments under Section 1-109.

Empirical studies support the increase in the surviving spouse's intestate share, reflected in the revisions of this section. The studies have shown that testators in smaller estates (which intestate estates overwhelmingly tend to be) tend to devise their entire estates to their surviving spouses, even when the couple has children. Widow does not waive her right to take as an heir by tendering will for probate. A widow by tendering the will of her deceased husband for probate does not vouch for its validity, nor waive her right to take under the statute, nor her right to claim all the property of the estate undisposed of by the will, as the sole heir. Blatt v. Blatt, 79 Colo. 57, 243 P. 1099 (1926).

Widow cannot be deprived of her rights without her written consent. Under this and § 15-11-501, a husband cannot devise or bequeath away from his wife more than one-half of his property without her written consent executed after his death, and where he agrees to will to another a portion of his estate, the latter takes subject to this statutory provision. Share of designated beneficiary. (1) If the decedent is survived by a person with the right to inherit real or personal property from the decedent in a designated beneficiary agreement executed pursuant to article 22 of this title, the intestate share of the decedent's designated beneficiary is:

(a) The entire estate if no descendent of the decedent survives the decedent; or

15-11-103. Share of heirs other than surviving spouse and designated beneficiary.

Any part of the intestate estate not passing to the decedent's surviving spouse under section 15-11-102, or to the decedent's surviving designated beneficiary under section 15-11-102.5, or the entire intestate estate if there is no surviving spouse and no surviving designated beneficiary with the right to inherit real or personal property from the decedent through intestate succession, passes in the following order to the individuals who survive the decedent:

(1) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2010, (SB 10-199), ch. 374, p. 1748, § 5, effective July 1, 2010.)

(2) To the decedent's descendants per capita at each generation;

(3) If there is no surviving descendant, to the decedent's parents equally if both survive, or to the surviving parent if only one survives;

(4) If there is no surviving descendant or parent, to the descendants of the decedent's parents or either of them per capita at each generation;

(5) If there is no surviving descendant, parent, or descendant of a parent, but the decedent is survived on both the paternal and maternal sides by one or more grandparents or descendants of grandparents:

(a) Half to the decedent's paternal grandparents equally if both survive, to the surviving paternal grandparent if only one survives, or to the descendants of the decedent's paternal grandparents or either of them if both are deceased, the descendants taking per capita at each generation; and

(b) Half to the decedent's maternal grandparents equally if both survive, to the surviving maternal grandparent if only one survives, or to the descendants of the decedent's maternal grandparents or either of them if both are deceased, the descendants taking per capita at each generation;

(6) If there is no surviving descendant, parent, or descendant of a parent, but the decedent is survived by one or more grandparents or descendants of grandparents on the paternal but not the maternal side, or on the maternal but not the paternal side, to the decedent's relatives on the side with one or more surviving members in the manner as described in subsection (5) of this section;

(2) Amendments to this section by House Bill 09-1260 and House Bill 09-1287 were harmonized, effective July 1, 2010; except that the second sentence of subsection (7) and the provisions of subsection (8), as amended by House Bill 09-1260, are superseded by House Bill 09-1287, effective July 1, 2010.

(3) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending this section:

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

(4) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending the introductory portion to the entire section and subsections (1) and (7):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

This section provides for inheritance by descendants of the decedent, parents and their descendants, and grandparents and collateral relatives descended from grandparents; in line with modern policy, it eliminates more remote relatives tracing through great-grandparents.

1990 Revisions. The 1990 revisions were stylistic and clarifying, not substantive. The pre-1990 version of this section contained the phrase "if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent they take equally (etc.)." That language was removed. It was unnecessary and confusing because the system of representation in Section 2-106 gives equal shares if the decedent's descendants are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent.

The word "descendants" replaced the word "issue" in this section and throughout the 1990 revisions of Article II. The term issue is a term of art having a biological connotation. Now that inheritance rights, in certain cases, are extended to adopted children, the term descendants is a more appropriate term.

2008 Revisions. In addition to making a few stylistic changes, which were not intended to change meaning, the 2008 revisions divided this section into two subsections. New subsection (b) grants inheritance rights to descendants of the intestate's deceased spouse(s) who are not also descendants of the intestate. The term deceased spouse refers to an individual to whom the intestate was married at the individual's death.

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 2008.

15-11-104. Requirement of survival by one hundred twenty hours - individual gestation. (1) For purposes of intestate succession and exempt property, and except as otherwise provided in paragraph (b) of this subsection (1), the following rules apply:

(a) An individual born before a decedent's death who fails to survive the decedent by one hundred twenty hours is deemed to have predeceased the decedent. If it is not established by clear and convincing evidence that an individual born before the decedent's death survived the decedent by one hundred twenty hours, it is deemed that the individual failed to survive for the required period.

(b) An individual in gestation at a decedent's death is deemed to be living at the decedent's death if the individual lives one hundred twenty hours after birth. If it is not established by clear and convincing evidence that an individual in gestation at the decedent's death lived one hundred twenty hours after birth, it is deemed that the individual failed to survive for the required period.

(2) This section is not to be applied if its application would result in a taking of intestate estate by the state under section 15-11-105.

COMMENT

This section avoids multiple administrations and in some instances prevents the property from passing to persons not desired by the decedent. See Halbach & Waggoner, The UPC's New Survivorship and Antilapse Provisions, 55 Alb. L. Rev. 1091, 1094-1099 (1992). The 120-hour period will not delay the administration of a decedent's estate because Sections 3-302 and 3-307 prevent informal issuance of letters for a period of five days from death. Subsection (b) prevents the survivorship requirement from defeating inheritance by the last eligible relative of the intestate who survives for any period.

In the case of a surviving spouse who survives the 120-hour period, the 120-hour requirement of survivorship does not disqualify the spouse's intestate share for the federal estate-tax marital deduction. See Int.Rev.Code § 2056(b)(3).

2008 Revisions. In 2008, this section was reorganized, revised, and combined with former Section 2-108. What was contained in former Section 2-104 now appears as subsections (a)(1) and (b). What was contained in former Section 2-108 now appears as subsection (a)(2). Subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) now distinguish between an individual who was born before the decedent's death and an individual who was in gestation at the decedent's death. With respect to an individual who was born before the decedent's death, it must be established by clear and convincing evidence that the individual survived the decedent by 120 hours. For a comparable provision applicable to wills and other governing instruments, see Section 2-702. With respect to an individual who was in gestation at the decedent's death, it must be established by clear and convincing evidence that the individual lived for 120 hours after birth.

15-11-106. Per capita at each generation. (1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Deceased descendant", "deceased parent", or "deceased grandparent" means a descendant, parent, or grandparent who either predeceased the decedent or is deemed to have predeceased the decedent under section 15-11-104.

(b) "Surviving descendant" means a descendant who neither predeceased the decedent nor is deemed to have predeceased the decedent under section 15-11-104.

(2) Decedent's descendants. If, under section 15-11-103 (2), a decedent's intestate estate or a part thereof passes "per capita at each generation" to the decedent's descendants, the estate or part thereof is divided into as many equal shares as there are (i) surviving descendants in the generation nearest to the decedent which contains one or more surviving descendants and (ii) deceased descendants in the same generation who left surviving descendants, if any. Each surviving descendant in the nearest generation is allocated one share. The remaining shares, if any, are combined and then divided in the same manner among the surviving descendants of the deceased descendants as if the surviving descendants who are allocated a share and their surviving descendants had predeceased the decedent.

(3) Descendants of parents or grandparents. If, under section 15-11-103 (4) or (6), a decedent's intestate estate or a part thereof passes "per capita at each generation" to the descendants of the decedent's deceased parents or either of them, or to the descendants of the decedent's deceased grandparents or any of them, the estate or part thereof is divided into as many equal shares as there are (i) surviving descendants in the generation nearest to the deceased parents or either of them, or the deceased grandparents or any of them, that contains one or more surviving descendants and (ii) deceased descendants in the same generation who left surviving descendants, if any. Each surviving descendant in the nearest generation is allocated one share. The remaining shares, if any, are combined and then divided in the same manner among the surviving descendants of the deceased descendants as if the surviving descendants who were allocated a share and their surviving descendants had predeceased the decedent.

(3) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act repealing this section:

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

15-11-109. Advancements. (1) If an individual dies intestate as to all or a portion of his or her estate, property the decedent gave during the decedent's lifetime to an individual who, at the decedent's death, is an heir is treated as an advancement against the heir's intestate share only if (i) the decedent declared in a contemporaneous writing or the heir acknowledged in writing that the gift is an advancement, or (ii) the decedent's contemporaneous writing or the heir's written acknowledgment otherwise indicates that the gift is to be taken into account in computing the division and distribution of the decedent's intestate estate.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1) of this section, property advanced is valued as of the time the heir came into possession or enjoyment of the property or as of the time of the decedent's death, whichever first occurs.

(3) If the recipient of the property fails to survive the decedent, the property is not taken into account in computing the division and distribution of the decedent's intestate estate, unless the decedent's contemporaneous writing provides otherwise.

(4) An heir who has received from the intestate estate more than his or her share shall in no case be required to refund, except as otherwise provided by section 15-11-203.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since § 15-11-109 is similar to repealed CSA, C. 176, § 5, and laws antecedent thereto, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

Definition of advancement. "In its strict technical sense an advancement is a perfect and irrevocable gift, not required by law, made by a parent, during his lifetime, to his child, with the intention on the part of the donor that such gift shall represent a part of the whole of the portion of the donor's estate that the donee would be entitled to on the death of the donor intestate." 1 R.C.L., p. 653. Page v. Elwell, 81 Colo. 73, 253 P. 1059 (1927); Albers v. Young, 119 Colo. 37, 199 P.2d 890 (1948).

Expenditures incurred in the discharge of the ordinary parental duties will not be considered advancements to the child. Albers v. Young, 119 Colo. 37, 199 P.2d 890 (1948).

Where the decedent retained control of, and dominion over, an account, including the absolute right to withdraw all or any part of the funds at any time, an advancement will not be created. Albers v. Young, 119 Colo. 37, 199 P.2d 890 (1948).

Presumption that substantial remittance is an advancement. In the absence of a contrary intent, the presumption arises that the remittance of a substantial amount to a child by his father is intended as an advancement to be taken into account upon the final distribution of the father's estate, if he dies intestate. This presumption is rebuttable as the intent is controlling. Page v. Elwell, 81 Colo. 73, 253 P. 1059 (1927).

Such intent is determined as of the time each remittance is made. The intention of a parent in making remittances to a child, as to whether the same are to be considered gifts or advancements, is to be determined as of the very time each remittance is made. Page v. Elwell, 81 Colo. 73, 253 P. 1059 (1927).

15-11-110. Debts to decedent. A debt owed to a decedent is not charged against the intestate share of any individual except the debtor. If the debtor fails to survive the decedent, the debt is not taken into account in computing the intestate share of the debtor's descendants.

15-11-114. Parent barred from inheriting in certain circumstances. (1) A parent is barred from inheriting from or through a child of the parent if:

(a) The parent's parental rights were terminated and the parent-child relationship was not judicially reestablished; or

(b) The child died before reaching eighteen years of age and there is clear and convincing evidence that immediately before the child's death the parental rights of the parent could have been terminated under the laws of this state other than this code on the basis of nonsupport, abandonment, abuse, neglect, or other actions or inactions of the parent toward the child.

(2) For the purpose of intestate succession from or through the deceased child, a parent who is barred from inheriting under this section is treated as if the parent predeceased the child.

Editor's note: (1) This section is similar to former § 15-11-109 as it existed prior to 1995.

(2) Subsection (2) was amended in House Bill 09-1260. Those amendments were superseded by the amendments made to that section by House Bill 09-1287.

(3) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending this section:

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

2008 Revisions. In 2008, this section replaced former Section 2-114(c), which provided: “(c) Inheritance from or through a child by either natural parent or his [or her] kindred is precluded unless that natural parent has openly treated the child as his [or hers], and has not refused to support the child.”

Subsection (a)(1) recognizes that a parent whose parental rights have been terminated is no longer legally a parent.

Subsection (a)(2) addresses a situation in which a parent’s parental rights were not actually terminated. Nevertheless, a parent can still be barred from inheriting from or through a child if the child died before reaching [18] years of age and there is clear and convincing evidence that immediately before the child’s death the parental rights of the parent could have been terminated under law of this state other than this [code], but only if those parental rights could have been terminated on the basis of nonsupport, abandonment, abuse, neglect, or other actions or inactions of the parent toward the child.

Statutes providing the grounds for termination of parental rights include: Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 8-533; Conn. Gen. Stat. § 45a-717; Del. Code Ann. tit. 13 § 1103; Fla. Stat. Ann. § 39.806; Iowa Code § 600A.8; Kan. Stat. Ann. § 38-2269; Mich. Comp. L. Ann. § 712A.19b; Minn. Stat. Ann. § 260C.301; Miss. Code Ann. § 93-15-103; Mo. Rev. Stat. § 211.447; Tex. Fam. Code §§ 161.001 to .007.

SUBPART 2

PARENT-CHILD RELATIONSHIP

Editor’s note: (1) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act adding this subpart 2 (§§ 15-11-115 to 15-11-122):

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

15-11-115. Definitions. In this subpart 2:

- (1) “Adoptee” means an individual who is adopted.
- (2) “Assisted reproduction” means a method of causing pregnancy other than sexual intercourse.
- (3) “Divorce” includes an annulment, dissolution of marriage, and declaration of invalidity of a marriage.
- (4) “Functioned as a parent of the child” means behaving toward a child in a manner consistent with being the child’s parent and performing functions that are customarily performed by a parent, including fulfilling parental responsibilities toward the child, recognizing or holding out the child as the individual’s child, materially participating in the child’s upbringing, and residing with the child in the same household as a regular member of that household.
- (5) “Genetic father” means the man whose sperm fertilized the egg of a child’s genetic mother. If the father-child relationship is established under the presumption of paternity under section 19-4-105, C.R.S., the term means only the man for whom that relationship is established.

(6) "Genetic mother" means the woman whose egg was fertilized by the sperm of a child's genetic father.

(7) "Genetic parent" means a child's genetic father or genetic mother.

(8) "Incapacity" means the inability of an individual to function as a parent of a child because of the individual's physical or mental condition.

(9) "Relative" means a grandparent or a descendant of a grandparent.

COMMENT

Scope. This section sets forth definitions that apply for purposes of the intestacy rules contained in Subpart 2 (Parent-Child Relationship).

Definition of "Adoptee". The term "adoptee" is not limited to an individual who is adopted as a minor but includes an individual who is adopted as an adult.

Definition of "Assisted Reproduction". The definition of "assisted reproduction" is copied from the Uniform Parentage Act § 102. Current methods of assisted reproduction include intra-uterine insemination (previously and sometimes currently called artificial insemination), donation of eggs, donation of embryos, in-vitro fertilization and transfer of embryos, and intracytoplasmic sperm injection.

Definition of "Functioned as a Parent of the Child". The term "functioned as a parent of the child" is derived from the Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers. The Reporter's Note No. 4 to § 14.5 of the Restatement lists the following parental functions:

Custodial responsibility refers to physical custodianship and supervision of a child. It usually includes, but does not necessarily require, residential or overnight responsibility.

Decisionmaking responsibility refers to authority for making significant life decisions on behalf of the child, including decisions about the child's education, spiritual guidance, and health care.

Caretaking functions are tasks that involve interaction with the child or that direct, arrange, and supervise the interaction and care provided by others. Caretaking functions include but are not limited to all of the following:

(a) satisfying the nutritional needs of the child, managing the child's bedtime and wake-up routines, caring for the child when sick or injured, being attentive to the child's personal hygiene needs including washing, grooming, and dressing, playing with the child and arranging for recreation, protecting the child's physical safety, and providing transportation;

(b) directing the child's various developmental needs, including the acquisition of motor and language skills, toilet training, self-confidence, and maturation;

(c) providing discipline, giving instruction in manners, assigning and supervising chores, and performing other tasks that attend to the child's needs for behavioral control and self-restraint;

(d) arranging for the child's education, including remedial or special services appropriate to the child's needs and interests, communicating with teachers and counselors, and supervising homework;

(e) helping the child to develop and maintain appropriate interpersonal relationships with peers, siblings, and other family members;

(f) arranging for health-care providers, medical follow-up, and home health care;

(g) providing moral and ethical guidance;

(h) arranging alternative care by a family member, babysitter, or other child-care provider or facility, including investigation of alternatives, communication with providers, and supervision of care.

Parenting functions are tasks that serve the needs of the child or the child's residential family. Parenting functions include caretaking functions, as defined [above], and all of the following additional functions:

(a) providing economic support;

(b) participating in decisionmaking regarding the child's welfare;

(c) maintaining or improving the family residence, including yard work, and house cleaning;

(d) doing and arranging for financial planning and organization, car repair and maintenance, food and clothing purchases, laundry and dry cleaning, and other tasks supporting the consumption and savings needs of the household;

(e) performing any other functions that are customarily performed by a parent or guardian and that are important to a child's welfare and development.

Ideally, a parent would perform all of the above functions throughout the child's minority. In cases falling short of the ideal, the trier of fact must balance both time and conduct. The question is, did the individual perform sufficient parenting functions over a sufficient period of time to justify concluding that the individual functioned as a parent of the child. Clearly, insubstantial conduct, such as an occasional gift or social contact, would be insufficient. Moreover, merely obeying a child support order would not, by itself, satisfy the requirement. Involuntarily providing support is inconsistent with functioning as a parent of the child.

The context in which the question arises is also relevant. If the question is whether the individual claiming to have functioned as a parent of the child inherits from the child, the court might require more substantial conduct over a more substantial period of time than if the question is whether a child inherits from an individual whom the child claims functioned as his or her parent.

Definition of “Genetic Father”. The term “genetic father” means the man whose sperm fertilized the egg of a child’s genetic mother. If the father-child relationship is established under the presumption of paternity recognized by the law of this state, the term means only the man for whom that relationship is established. As stated in the Legislative Note, a state that has enacted the Uniform Parentage Act (2000, as amended) should insert a reference to Section 201(b)(1), (2), or (3) of that Act.

Definition of “Relative”. The term “relative” does not include any relative no matter how remote but is limited to a grandparent or a descendant of a grandparent, as determined under this subpart 2.

15-11-116. Effect of parent-child relationship. Except as otherwise provided in section 15-11-119, if a parent-child relationship exists or is established under this subpart 2, the parent is a parent of the child and the child is a child of the parent for the purpose of intestate succession.

COMMENT

Scope. This section provides that if a parent-child relationship exists or is established under any section in subpart 2, the consequence is that the parent is a parent of the child and the child is a child of the parent for the purpose of intestate succession by, from, or through the parent and the child. The exceptions in Section 2-119(b) through (e) refer to cases in which a parent-child relationship exists but only for the purpose of the right of an adoptee or a descendant of an adoptee to inherit from or through one or both genetic parents.

15-11-117. No distinction based on marital status. Except as otherwise provided in section 15-11-114, 15-11-119, 15-11-120, or 15-11-121, a parent-child relationship exists between a child and the child’s genetic parents, regardless of the parents’ marital status.

Source: L. 2009: Entire section added, (HB 09-1287), ch. 310, p. 1676, § 8, effective July 1, 2010.

Cross references: For another provision on marital status, see § 19-4-103.

COMMENT

Scope. This section, adopted in 2008, provides the general rule that a parent-child relationship exists between a child and the child’s genetic parents, regardless of the parents’ marital status. Exceptions to this general rule are contained in Sections 2-114 (Parent Barred from Inheriting in Certain Circumstances), 2-119 (Adoptee and Adoptee’s Genetic Parents), 2-120 (Child Conceived by Assisted Reproduction

Other than Child Born to Gestational Carrier), and 2-121 (Child Born to Gestational Carrier).

This section replaces former Section 2-114(a), which provided: “(a) Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), for purposes of intestate succession by, through, or from a person, an individual is the child of his [or her] natural parents, regardless of their marital status. The parent and child relationship may be established under [the Uniform Parentage Act] [applicable state law] [insert appropriate statutory reference].”

Defined Terms. Genetic parent is defined in Section 2-115 as the child’s genetic father or genetic mother. Genetic mother is defined as the woman whose egg was fertilized by the sperm of a child’s genetic father. Genetic father is defined as the man whose sperm fertilized the egg of a child’s genetic mother.

15-11-118. Adoptee and adoptee’s adoptive parent or parents. (1) Parent-child relationship between adoptee and adoptive parent or parents. A parent-child relationship exists between an adoptee and the adoptee’s adoptive parent or parents.

(2) Individual in process of being adopted by married couple - stepchild in process of being adopted by stepparent. For purposes of subsection (1) of this section:

(a) An individual who is in the process of being adopted by a married couple when one of the spouses dies is treated as adopted by the deceased spouse if the adoption is subsequently granted to the decedent’s surviving spouse; and

(b) A child of a genetic parent who is in the process of being adopted by a genetic parent’s spouse when the spouse dies is treated as adopted by the deceased spouse if the genetic parent survives the deceased spouse by one hundred twenty hours.

(2.5) Individual in process of being adopted by second parent. For purposes of subsection (1) of this section, a child who is in the process of being adopted by a second adult in a second-parent adoption when the second adult dies is treated as adopted by the second adult if the child’s parent survives the second adult by one hundred twenty hours.

(3) Child of assisted reproduction or gestational child in process of being adopted. If, after a parent-child relationship is established between a child of assisted reproduction and a parent under section 15-11-120 or between a gestational child and a parent under section 15-11-121, the child is in the process of being adopted by the parent’s spouse or another individual when that spouse or individual dies, the child is treated as adopted by the deceased spouse or individual for the purpose of paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section.

Editor’s note: (1) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act adding subsection (2.5) and amending subsection (3):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

2008 Revisions. In 2008, this section and Section 2-119 replaced former Section 2-114(b), which provided: “(b) An adopted individual is the child of his [or her] adopting parent or parents and not of his [or her] natural parents, but adoption of a child by the spouse of either natural parent has no effect on (i) the relationship between the child and that natural parent or (ii) the right of the child or a descendant of the child to inherit from or through the other natural parent”. The 2008 revisions divided the coverage of former Section 2-114(b) into two sections. Subsection (a) of this section covered that part of former Section 2-114(b) that provided that an adopted individual is the child of his or her adopting parent or parents. Section 2-119(a) and (b)(1) covered that part of former Section 2-114(b) that provided that an adopted individual is not the child of his natural parents, but adoption of a child by the spouse of either natural parent has no effect on the relationship between the child and that natural parent or (ii) the right of the child or a descendant of the child to inherit from or through the other natural parent.

The 2008 revisions also added subsections (b)(2) and (c), which are explained below.

Data on Adoptions. Official data on adoptions are not regularly collected. Partial data are sometimes available from the Children's Bureau of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the U.S. Census Bureau, and the Evan B. Donaldson Adoption Institute.

For an historical treatment of adoption, from ancient Greece, through the Middle Ages, 19th- and 20th-century America, to open adoption and international adoption, see Debora L. Spar, The Baby Business ch. 6 (2006) and sources cited therein.

Defined Term. Adoptee is defined in Section 2-115 as an individual who is adopted. The term is not limited to an individual who is adopted as a minor but includes an individual who is adopted as an adult.

Subsection (a): Parent-Child Relationship Between Adoptee and Adoptive Parent or Parents. Subsection (a) states the general rule that adoption creates a parent-child relationship between the adoptee and the adoptee's adoptive parent or parents.

Subsection (b)(1): Individual in Process of Being Adopted by Married Couple. If the spouse who subsequently died had filed a legal proceeding to adopt the individual before the spouse died, the individual is "in the process of being adopted" by the deceased spouse when the spouse died. However, the phrase "in the process of being adopted" is not intended to be limited to that situation, but is intended to grant flexibility to find on a case by case basis that the process commenced earlier.

Subsection (b)(2): Stepchild in Process of Being Adopted by Stepparent. If the stepparent who subsequently died had filed a legal proceeding to adopt the stepchild before the stepparent died, the stepchild is "in the process of being adopted" by the deceased stepparent when the stepparent died. However, the phrase "in the process of being adopted" is not intended to be limited to that situation, but is intended to grant flexibility to find on a case by case basis that the process commenced earlier.

Subsection (c): Child of Assisted Reproduction or Gestational Child in Process of Being Adopted. Subsection (c) provides that if, after a parent-child relationship is established between a child of assisted reproduction and a parent under Section 2-120 or between a gestational child and a parent under Section 2-121, the child is in the process of being adopted by the parent's spouse when that spouse dies, the child is treated as adopted by the deceased spouse for the purpose of subsection (b)(2). An example would be a situation in which an unmarried mother or father is the parent of a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child, and subsequently marries an individual who then begins the process of adopting the child but who dies before the adoption becomes final. In such a case, subsection (c) provides that the child is treated as adopted by the deceased spouse for the purpose of subsection (b)(2). The phrase "in the process of being adopted" carries the same meaning under subsection (c) as it does under subsection (b)(2).

15-11-119. Adoptee and adoptee's genetic parents. (1) Parent-child relationship between adoptee and genetic parents. Except as otherwise provided in this section, a parent-child relationship does not exist between an adoptee and the adoptee's genetic parents.

(2) Stepchild adopted by stepparent. A parent-child relationship exists between an individual who is adopted by the spouse of either genetic parent and:

(a) The genetic parent whose spouse adopted the individual; and

(b) The other genetic parent, but only for the purpose of the right of the adoptee or a descendant of the adoptee to inherit from or through the other genetic parent.

(2.5) Child of a second-parent adoption. A parent-child relationship exists between an individual who is adopted by a second parent and:

(a) A genetic parent who consented to a second-parent adoption; and

(b) Another genetic parent who is not a third-party donor, but only for the purpose of the right of the adoptee or a descendant of the adoptee to inherit from or through the other genetic parent.

(3) Individual adopted by relative of genetic parent. A parent-child relationship exists between both genetic parents and an individual who is adopted by a relative of a genetic parent, or by the spouse or surviving spouse of a relative of a genetic parent, but only for the purpose of the right of the adoptee or a descendant of the adoptee to inherit from or through either genetic parent.

(4) Individual adopted after death of both genetic parents. A parent-child relationship exists between both genetic parents and an individual who is adopted after the death of both genetic parents, but only for the purpose of the right of the adoptee or a descendant of the adoptee to inherit through either genetic parent.

(5) Child of assisted reproduction or gestational child who is subsequently adopted. If, after a parent-child relationship is established between a child of assisted reproduction and a parent or parents under section 15-11-120 or between a gestational child and a parent or parents under section 15-11-121, the child is adopted by another or others, the child's parent or parents under section 15-11-120 or 15-11-121 are treated as the child's genetic parent or parents for the purpose of this section.

Editor's note: (1) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsections (2.5)(a) and (2.5)(b):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

2008 Revisions. In 2008, this section and Section 2-118 replaced former Section 2-114(b), which provided: "(b) An adopted individual is the child of his [or her] adopting parent or parents and not of his [or her] natural parents, but adoption of a child by the spouse of either natural parent has no effect on (i) the relationship between the child and that natural parent or (ii) the right of the child or a descendant of the child to inherit from or through the other natural parent". The 2008 revisions divided the coverage of former Section 2-114(b) into two sections. Section 2-118(a) covered that part of former Section 2-114(b) that provided that an adopted individual is the child of his or her adopting parent or parents. Subsections (a) and (b) of this section covered that part of former Section 2-114(b) that provided that an adopted individual is not the child of his natural parents, but adoption of a child by the spouse of either natural parent has no effect on the relationship between the child and that natural parent or (ii) the right of the child or a descendant of the child to inherit from or through the other natural parent.

The 2008 revisions also added subsections (c), (d), and (e), which are explained below.

Defined Terms. Section 2-119 uses terms that are defined in Section 2-115.

Adoptee is defined in Section 2-115 as an individual who is adopted. The term is not limited to an individual who is adopted as a minor, but includes an individual who is adopted as an adult.

Genetic parent is defined in Section 2-115 as the child's genetic father or genetic mother. Genetic mother is defined as the woman whose egg was fertilized by the sperm of a child's genetic father. Genetic father is defined as the man whose sperm fertilized the egg of a child's genetic mother.

Relative is defined in Section 2-115 as a grandparent or a descendant of a grandparent.

Subsection (a): Parent-Child Relationship Between Adoptee and Adoptee's Genetic Parents. Subsection (a) states the general rule that a parent-child relationship does not exist between an adopted child and the child's genetic parents. This rule recognizes that an adoption severs the parent-child relationship between the adopted child and the child's genetic parents. The adoption gives the adopted child a replacement family, sometimes referred to in the case law as "a fresh start". For further elaboration of this theory, see Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 2.5(2)(A) & cmts. d & e (1999). Subsection (a) also states, however, that there are exceptions to this general rule in subsections (b) through (d).

Subsection (b): Stepchild Adopted by Stepparent. Subsection (b) continues the so-called “stepparent exception” contained in the Code since its original promulgation in 1969. When a stepparent adopts his or her stepchild, Section 2-118 provides that the adoption creates a parent-child relationship between the child and his or her adoptive stepparent. Section 2-119(b)(1) provides that a parent-child relationship continues to exist between the child and the child’s genetic parent whose spouse adopted the child. Section 2-119(b)(2) provides that a parent-child relationship also continues to exist between an adopted stepchild and his or her other genetic parent (the noncustodial genetic parent) for purposes of inheritance from and through that genetic parent, but not for purposes of inheritance by the other genetic parent and his or her relatives from or through the adopted stepchild.

Example 1—Post-Widowhood Remarriage. A and B were married and had two children, X and Y. A died, and B married C. C adopted X and Y. Under subsection (b)(1), X and Y are treated as B’s children and under Section 2-118(a) as C’s children for all purposes of inheritance. Under subsection (b)(2), X and Y are treated as A’s children for purposes of inheritance from and through A but not for purposes of inheritance from or through X or Y. Thus, if A’s father, G, died intestate, survived by X and Y and by G’s daughter (A’s sister), S, G’s heirs would be S, X, and Y. S would take half and X and Y would take one-fourth each.

Example 2—Post-Divorce Remarriage. A and B were married and had two children, X and Y. A and B got divorced, and B married C. C adopted X and Y. Under subsection (b)(1), X and Y are treated as B’s children and under Section 2-118(a) as C’s children for all purposes of inheritance. Under subsection (b)(2), X and Y are treated as A’s children for purposes of inheritance from and through A. On the other hand, neither A nor any of A’s relatives can inherit from or through X or Y.

Subsection (c): Individual Adopted by Relative of a Genetic Parent. Under subsection (c), a child who is adopted by a maternal or a paternal relative of either genetic parent, or by the spouse or surviving spouse of such a relative, remains a child of both genetic parents.

Example 3. F and M, a married couple with a four-year old child, X, were badly injured in an automobile accident. F subsequently died. M, who was in a vegetative state and on life support, was unable to care for X. Thereafter, M’s sister, A, and A’s husband, B, adopted X. F’s father, PGF, a widower, then died intestate. Under subsection (c), X is treated as PGF’s grandchild (F’s child).

Subsection (d): Individual Adopted After Death of Both Genetic Parents. Usually, a post-death adoption does not remove a child from contact with the genetic families. When someone with ties to the genetic family or families adopts a child after the deaths of the child’s genetic parents, even if the adoptive parent is not a relative of either genetic parent or a spouse or surviving spouse of such a relative, the child continues to be in a parent-child relationship with both genetic parents. Once a child has taken root in a family, an adoption after the death of both genetic parents is likely to be by someone chosen or approved of by the genetic family, such as a person named as guardian of the child in a deceased parent’s will. In such a case, the child does not become estranged from the genetic family. Such an adoption does not “remove” the child from the families of both genetic parents. Such a child continues to be a child of both genetic parents, as well as a child of the adoptive parents.

Example 4. F and M, a married couple with a four-year-old child, X, were involved in an automobile accident that killed F and M. Neither M’s parents nor F’s father (F’s mother had died before the accident) nor any other relative was in a position to take custody of X. X was adopted by F and M’s close friends, A and B, a married couple approximately of the same ages as F and M. F’s father, PGF, a widower, then died intestate. Under subsection (d), X is treated as PGF’s grandchild (F’s child). The result would be the same if F’s or M’s will appointed A and B as the guardians of the person of X, and A and B subsequently successfully petitioned to adopt X.

Subsection (e): Child of Assisted Reproduction or Gestational Child Who Is Subsequently Adopted. Subsection (e) puts a child of assisted reproduction and a gestational child on the same footing as a genetic child for purposes of this section. The results in Examples 1 through 4 would have been the same had the child in question been a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child.

15-11-120. Child conceived by assisted reproduction other than child born to gestational carrier. (1) Definitions. In this section:

(a) “Birth mother” means a woman, other than a gestational carrier under section 15-11-121, who gives birth to a child of assisted reproduction. The term is not limited to a woman who is the child’s genetic mother.

(b) “Child of assisted reproduction” means a child conceived by means of assisted reproduction by a woman other than a gestational carrier under section 15-11-121.

(c) “Third-party donor” means an individual who produces eggs or sperm used for assisted reproduction, whether or not for consideration. The term does not include:

(I) A husband who provides sperm, or a wife who provides eggs, that are used for assisted reproduction by the wife;

(II) The birth mother of a child of assisted reproduction; or

(III) An individual who has been determined under subsection (5) or (6) of this section to have a parent-child relationship with a child of assisted reproduction.

(2) Third-party donor. A parent-child relationship does not exist between a child of assisted reproduction and a third-party donor.

(3) Parent-child relationship with birth mother. A parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and the child’s birth mother.

(4) Parent-child relationship with husband whose sperm were used during his lifetime by his wife for assisted reproduction. Except as otherwise provided in subsections (9) and (10) of this section, a parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and the husband of the child’s birth mother if the husband provided the sperm that the birth mother used during his lifetime for assisted reproduction.

(5) Birth certificate - presumptive effect. A birth certificate identifying an individual other than the birth mother as the other parent of a child of assisted reproduction presumptively establishes a parent-child relationship between the child and that individual.

(6) Parent-child relationship with another. Except as otherwise provided in subsections (7), (9), and (10) of this section, and unless a parent-child relationship is established under subsection (4) or (5) of this section, a parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and an individual other than the birth mother who consented to assisted reproduction by the birth mother with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child. Consent to assisted reproduction by the birth mother with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child is established if the individual:

(a) Before or after the child’s birth, signed a record that, considering all the facts and circumstances, evidences the individual’s consent; or

(b) In the absence of a signed record under paragraph (a) of this subsection (6):

(I) Functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child’s birth;

(II) Intended to function as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child’s birth but was prevented from carrying out that intent by death, incapacity, or other circumstances; or

(III) Intended to be treated as a parent of a posthumously conceived child, if that intent is established by clear and convincing evidence.

(7) Record signed more than two years after the birth of the child - effect. For the purpose of paragraph (a) of subsection (6) of this section, neither an individual who signed a record more than two years after the birth of the child, nor a relative of that individual who is not also a relative of the birth mother, inherits from or through the child unless the individual functioned as a parent of the child before the child reached eighteen years of age.

(8) Presumption - birth mother is married or surviving spouse. For the purpose of paragraph (b) of subsection (6) of this section, the following rules apply:

(a) If the birth mother is married at the time of conception and no divorce proceeding is then pending, her spouse is presumed to satisfy the requirements of subparagraph (I) or (II) of paragraph (b) of subsection (6) of this section.

(b) If the birth mother is a surviving spouse and at her deceased spouse’s death no divorce proceeding was pending, her deceased spouse is presumed to satisfy the requirements of subparagraph (II) or (III) of paragraph (b) of subsection (6) of this section.

(9) Divorce before placement of eggs, sperm, or embryos. If a married couple is divorced before placement of eggs, sperm, or embryos, a child resulting from the assisted reproduction is not a child of the birth mother’s former spouse, unless the former spouse consented in a record that if assisted reproduction were to occur after divorce, the child would be treated as the former spouse’s child.

(10) Withdrawal of consent before placement of eggs, sperm, or embryos. If, in a record, an individual withdraws consent to assisted reproduction before placement of eggs, sperm, or embryos, a child resulting from the assisted reproduction is not a child of that individual, unless the individual subsequently satisfies subsection (6) of this section.

(11) When posthumously conceived child treated as in gestation. If, under this section, an individual is a parent of a child of assisted reproduction who is conceived after the individual's death, the child is treated as in gestation at the time of the individual's death for purposes of section 15-11-104 (1) (b) if the child is:

- (a) In utero not later than thirty-six months after the individual's death; or
- (b) Born not later than forty-five months after the individual's death.

Editor's note: (1) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsection (8):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Data on Children of Assisted Reproduction. The Center for Disease Control (CDC) of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services collects data on children of assisted reproduction (ART). See Center for Disease Control, 2004 Assisted Reproductive Technology Success Rates (Dec. 2006) (2004 CDC Report), available at <http://www.cdc.gov/ART/ART2004>. The data, however, is of limited use because the definition of ART used in the CDC Report excludes intrauterine (artificial) insemination (2004 CDC Report at 3), which is probably the most common form of assisted reproductive procedures. The CDC estimates that in 2004 ART procedures (excluding intrauterine insemination) accounted for slightly more than one percent of total U.S. births. 2004 CDC Report at 13. According to the Report: "The number of infants born who were conceived using ART increased steadily between 1996 and 2004. In 2004, 49,458 infants were born, which was more than double the 20,840 born in 1996." 2004 CDC Report at 57. "The average age of women using ART services in 2004 was 36. The largest group of women using ART services were women younger than 35, representing 41% of all ART cycles carried out in 2004. Twenty-one percent of ART cycles were carried out among women aged 35-37, 19% among women aged 38-40, 9% among women aged 41-42, and 9% among women older than 42." 2004 CDC Report at 15. AMA Ethics Policy on Posthumous Conception. The ethics policies of the American Medical Association concerning artificial insemination by a known donor state that "[i]f semen is frozen and the donor dies before it is used, the frozen semen should not be used or donated for purposes other than those originally intended by the donor. If the donor left no instructions, it is reasonable to allow the remaining partner to use the semen for intrauterine insemination but not to donate it to someone else. However, the donor should be advised of such a policy at the time of donation and be given an opportunity to override it." Am. Med. Assn. Subsection (a): Definitions. Subsection (a) defines the following terms:

Birth mother is defined as the woman (other than a gestational carrier under Section 2-121) who gave birth to a child of assisted reproduction.

Child of assisted reproduction is defined as a child conceived by means of assisted reproduction by a woman other than a gestational carrier under Section 2-121.

Third-party donor. The definition of third-party donor is based on the definition of “donor” in the Uniform Parentage Act § 102.

Other Defined Terms. In addition to the terms defined in subsection (a), this section uses terms that are defined in Section 2-115.

Assisted reproduction is defined in Section 2-115 as a method of causing pregnancy other than sexual intercourse.

Divorce is defined in Section 2-115 as including an annulment, dissolution, and declaration of invalidity of a marriage.

Functioned as a parent of the child is defined in Section 2-115 as behaving toward a child in a manner consistent with being the child’s parent and performing functions that are customarily performed by a parent, including fulfilling parental responsibilities toward the child, recognizing or holding out the child as the individual’s child, materially participating in the child’s upbringing, and residing with the child in the same household as a regular member of that household. See also the Comment to Section 2-115 for additional explanation of the term.

Genetic father is defined in Section 2-115 as the man whose sperm fertilized the egg of a child’s genetic mother.

Genetic mother is defined as the woman whose egg was fertilized by the sperm of the child’s genetic father.

Incapacity is defined in Section 2-115 as the inability of an individual to function as a parent of a child because of the individual’s physical or mental condition.

Subsection (b): Third-Party Donor. Subsection (b) is consistent with the Uniform Parentage Act § 702. Under subsection (b), a third-party donor does not have a parent-child relationship with a child of assisted reproduction, despite the donor’s genetic relationship with the child.

Subsection (c): Parent-Child Relationship With Birth Mother. Subsection (c) is in accord with the Uniform Parentage Act § 201 in providing that a parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and the child’s birth mother. The child’s birth mother, defined in subsection (a) as the woman (other than a gestational carrier) who gave birth to the child, made the decision to undergo the procedure with intent to become pregnant and give birth to the child. Therefore, in order for a parent-child relationship to exist between her and the child, no proof that she consented to the procedure with intent to be treated as the parent of the child is necessary.

Subsection (d): Parent-Child Relationship with Husband Whose Sperm Were Used During His Lifetime By His Wife for Assisted Reproduction. The principal application of subsection (d) is in the case of the assisted reproduction procedure known as intrauterine insemination husband (IIH), or, in older terminology, artificial insemination husband (AIH). Subsection (d) provides that, except as otherwise provided in subsection (i), a parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and the husband of the child’s birth mother if the husband provided the sperm that were used during his lifetime by her for assisted reproduction and the husband is the genetic father of the child. The exception contained in subsection (i) relates to the withdrawal of consent in a record before the placement of eggs, sperm, or embryos. Note that subsection (d) only applies if the husband’s sperm were used during his lifetime by his wife to cause a pregnancy by assisted reproduction. Subsection (d) does not apply to posthumous conception.

Subsection (e): Birth Certificate: Presumptive Effect. A birth certificate will name the child’s birth mother as mother of the child. Under subsection (c), a parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and the child’s birth mother. Note that the term “birth mother” is a defined term in subsection (a) as not including a gestational carrier as defined in Section 2-121.

Subsection (e) applies to the individual, if any, who is identified on the birth certificate as the child’s other parent. Subsection (e) grants presumptive effect to a birth certificate identifying an individual other than the birth mother as the other parent of a child of assisted reproduction. In the case of unmarried parents, federal law requires that states enact procedures under which “the name of the father shall be included on the record of birth,” but only if the father and mother have signed a voluntary acknowledgment of paternity or a court of an administrative agency of competent jurisdiction has issued an adjudication of paternity. See 42 U.S.C. § 666(a)(5)(D). This federal statute is included as an appendix to the Uniform Parentage Act.

The federal statute applies only to unmarried opposite-sex parents. Section 2-120(e)’s presumption, however, could apply to a same-sex couple if state law permits a woman who is not the birth mother to be listed on the child’s birth certificate as the child’s other parent. Even if state law does not permit that listing, the woman who is not the birth mother could be the child’s parent by adoption of the child (see Section 2-118) or under subsection (f) as a result of her consent to assisted reproduction by the birth mother “with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child,” or by satisfying the “function as a parent” test in subsection (f)(2).

Section 2-120 does not apply to same-sex couples that use a gestational carrier. For same-sex couples using a gestational carrier, the parent-child relationship can be established by adoption (see Section 2-118 and Section 2-121(b)), or it can be established under subsection 2-121(d) if the couple enters into a gestational agreement with the gestational carrier under which the couple agrees to be the parents of the child born to the gestational carrier. It is irrelevant whether either intended parent is a genetic parent of the child. See Section 2-121(a)(4).

Subsection (f): Parent-Child Relationship with Another. In order for someone other than the birth mother to have a parent-child relationship with the child, there needs to be proof that the individual consented to assisted reproduction by the birth mother with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child. The other individual's genetic material might or might not have been used to create the pregnancy. Except as otherwise provided in this section, merely depositing genetic material is not, by itself, sufficient to establish a parent-child relationship with the child.

Subsection (f)(1): Signed Record Evidencing Consent, Considering All the Facts and Circumstances, to Assisted Reproduction with Intent to Be Treated as the Other Parent of the Child. Subsection (f)(1) provides that a parent-child relationship exists between a child of assisted reproduction and an individual other than the birth mother who consented to assisted reproduction by the birth mother with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child. Consent to assisted reproduction with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child is established if the individual signed a record, before or after the child's birth, that considering all the facts and circumstances evidences the individual's consent. Recognizing consent in a record not only signed before the child's birth but also at any time after the child's birth is consistent with the Uniform Parentage Act §§ 703 and 704.

As noted, the signed record need not explicitly express consent to the procedure with intent to be treated as the other parent of child, but only needs to evidence such consent considering all the facts and circumstances. An example of a signed record that would satisfy this requirement comes from In re Martin B., 841 N.Y.S.2d 207 (Sur. Ct. 2007). In that case, the New York Surrogate's Court held that a child of posthumous conception was included in a class gift in a case in which the deceased father had signed a form that stated: "In the event of my death I agree that my spouse shall have the sole right to make decisions regarding the disposition of my semen samples. I authorize repro lab to release my specimens to my legal spouse [naming her]." Another form he signed stated: "I, [naming him], hereby certify that I am married or intimately involved with [naming her] and the cryopreserved specimens stored at repro lab will be used for future inseminations of my wife/intimate partner." Although these forms do not explicitly say that the decedent consented to the procedure with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child, they do evidence such consent in light of all of the facts and circumstances and would therefore satisfy subsection (f)(1).

Subsection (f)(2): Ideally an individual other than the birth mother who consented to assisted reproduction by the birth mother with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child will have signed a record that satisfies subsection (f)(1). If not, subsection (f)(2) recognizes that actions speak as loud as words. Under subsection (f)(2), consent to assisted reproduction by the birth mother with intent to be treated as the other parent of the child is established if the individual functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth. Under subsection (f)(2)(B), the same result applies if the evidence establishes that the individual had that intent but death, incapacity, or other circumstances prevented the individual from carrying out that intent. Finally, under subsection (f)(2)(C), the same result applies if it can be established by clear and convincing evidence that the individual intended to be treated as a parent of a posthumously conceived child.

Subsection (g): Record Signed More than Two Years after the Birth of the Child: Effect. Subsection (g) is designed to prevent an individual who has never functioned as a parent of the child from signing a record in order to inherit from or through the child or in order to make it possible for a relative of the individual to inherit from or through the child. Thus, subsection (g) provides that, for purposes of subsection (f)(1), an individual who signed a record more than two years after the birth of the child, or a relative of that individual, does not inherit from or through the child unless the individual functioned as a parent of the child before the child reached the age of [18].

Subsection (h): Presumption: Birth Mother is Married or Surviving Spouse. Under subsection (h), if the birth mother is married and no divorce proceeding is pending, then in the absence of clear and convincing evidence to the contrary, her spouse satisfies subsection (f)(2)(A) or (B) or if the birth mother is a surviving spouse and at her deceased spouse's death no divorce proceeding was pending, then in the absence of clear and convincing evidence to the contrary, her deceased spouse satisfies subsection (f)(2)(B) or (C).

Subsection (i): Divorce Before Placement of Eggs, Sperm, or Embryos. Subsection (i) is derived from the Uniform Parentage Act § 706(b).

Subsection (j): Withdrawal of Consent Before Placement of Eggs, Sperm, or Embryos. Subsection (j) is derived from the Uniform Parentage Act § 706(a). Subsection (j) provides that if, in a record, an individual withdraws consent to assisted reproduction before placement of eggs, sperm, or embryos, a child resulting from the assisted reproduction is not a child of that individual, unless the individual subsequently satisfies the requirements of subsection (f).

Subsection (k): When Posthumously Conceived Gestational Child Treated as in Gestation. Subsection (k) provides that if, under this section, an individual is a parent of a gestational child who is conceived after the individual's death, the child is treated as in gestation at the individual's death for purposes of Section 2-104(a)(2) if the child is either (i) in utero no later than 36 months after the individual's death or (ii) born no later than 45 months after the individual's death. Note also that Section 3-703 gives the decedent's personal representative authority to take account of the possibility of posthumous conception in the timing of all or part of the distribution of the estate.

The 36-month period in subsection (k) is designed to allow a surviving spouse or partner a period of grieving, time to make up his or her mind about whether to go forward with assisted reproduction, and a reasonable allowance for unsuccessful attempts to achieve a pregnancy. The 36-month period also coincides with Section 3-1006, under which an heir is allowed to recover property improperly distributed or its value from any distributee during the later of three years after the decedent's death or one year after distribution. If the assisted-reproduction procedure is performed in a medical facility, the date when the child is in utero will ordinarily be evidenced by medical records. In some cases, however, the procedure is not performed in a medical facility, and so such evidence may be lacking. Providing an alternative of birth within 45 months is designed to provide certainty in such cases. The 45-month period is based on the 36-month period with an additional nine months tacked on to allow for a typical period of pregnancy.

15-11-121. Child born to gestational carrier. (1) In this section:

(a) "Gestational agreement" means an enforceable or unenforceable agreement for assisted reproduction in which a woman agrees to carry a child to birth for an intended parent, intended parents, or an individual described in subsection (5) of this section.

(b) "Gestational carrier" means a woman who is not an intended parent who gives birth to a child under a gestational agreement. The term is not limited to a woman who is the child's genetic mother.

(c) "Gestational child" means a child born to a gestational carrier under a gestational agreement.

(d) "Intended parent" means an individual who entered into a validated gestational agreement providing that the individual will be the parent of a child born to a gestational carrier by means of assisted reproduction. The term is not limited to an individual who has a genetic relationship with the child.

(2) Court order adjudicating parentage - effect. A parent-child relationship is conclusively established by a court order designating the parent or parents of a gestational child.

(3) Gestational carrier. A parent-child relationship between a gestational child and the child's gestational carrier does not exist unless the gestational carrier is:

(a) Designated as a parent of the child in a court order described in subsection (2) of this section; or

(b) The child's genetic mother and a parent-child relationship does not exist under this section with an individual other than the gestational carrier.

(4) Parent-child relationship with intended parent or parents. In the absence of a court order under subsection (2) of this section, a parent-child relationship exists between a gestational child and an intended parent who:

(a) Functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth; or

(b) Died while the gestational carrier was pregnant if:

(I) There were two intended parents and the other intended parent functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth;

(II) There were two intended parents, the other intended parent also died while the gestational carrier was pregnant, and a relative of either deceased intended parent or the spouse or surviving spouse of a relative of either deceased intended parent functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth; or

(III) There was no other intended parent and a relative of or the spouse or surviving spouse of a relative of the deceased intended parent functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth.

(5) Gestational agreement after death or incapacity. In the absence of a court order under subsection (2) of this section, a parent-child relationship exists between a gestational child and an individual whose sperm or eggs were used after the individual's death or incapacity to conceive a child under a gestational agreement entered into after the individual's death or incapacity if the individual intended to be treated as the parent of the child. The individual's intent may be shown by:

(a) A record signed by the individual which considering all the facts and circumstances evidences the individual's intent; or

(b) Other facts and circumstances establishing the individual's intent by clear and convincing evidence.

(6) Presumption - gestational agreement after spouse's death or incapacity. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (7) of this section, and unless there is clear and convincing evidence of a contrary intent, an individual is deemed to have intended to be treated as the parent of a gestational child for purposes of paragraph (b) of subsection (5) of this section if:

(a) The individual, before death or incapacity, deposited the sperm or eggs that were used to conceive the child;

(b) When the individual deposited the sperm or eggs, the individual was married and no divorce proceeding was pending; and

(c) The individual's spouse or surviving spouse functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth.

(7) Subsection (6) presumption inapplicable. The presumption under subsection (6) of this section does not apply if there is:

(a) A court order under subsection (2) of this section; or

(b) A signed record that satisfies paragraph (a) of subsection (5) of this section.

(8) When posthumously conceived gestational child treated as in gestation. If, under this section, an individual is a parent of a gestational child who is conceived after the individual's death, the child is treated as in gestation at the time of the individual's death for purposes of section 15-11-104 (1) (b) if the child is:

(a) In utero not later than thirty-six months after the individual's death; or

(b) Born not later than forty-five months after the individual's death.

(9) No effect on other laws. This section does not affect laws of this state other than this code regarding the enforceability or validity of a gestational agreement.

COMMENT

Subsection (a): Definitions. Subsection (a) defines the following terms:

Gestational agreement. The definition of gestational agreement is based on the Comment to Article 8 of the Uniform Parentage Act, which states that the term "gestational carrier" "applies to both a woman who, through assisted reproduction, performs the gestational function without being genetically related to a child, and a woman who is both the gestational and genetic mother. The key is that an agreement has been made that the child is to be raised by the intended parents." The Comment also points out that "The [practice in which the woman is both the gestational and genetic mother] has elicited disfavor in the ART community, which has concluded that the gestational carrier's genetic link to the child too often creates additional emotional and psychological problems in enforcing a gestational agreement."

Gestational carrier is defined as a woman who is not an intended parent and who gives birth to a child under a gestational agreement. The term is not limited to a woman who is the child's genetic mother.

Gestational child is defined as a child born to a gestational carrier under a gestational agreement.

Intended parent is defined as an individual who entered into a gestational agreement providing that the individual will be the parent of a child born to a gestational carrier by means of assisted reproduction. The term is not limited to an individual who has a genetic relationship with the child.

Other Defined Terms. In addition to the terms defined in subsection (a), this section uses terms that are defined in Section 2-115.

Child of assisted reproduction is defined in Section 2-115 as a method of causing pregnancy other than sexual intercourse.

Divorce is defined in Section 2-115 as including an annulment, dissolution, and declaration of invalidity of a marriage.

Functioned as a parent of the child is defined in Section 2-115 as behaving toward a child in a manner consistent with being the child's parent and performing functions that are customarily performed by a parent, including fulfilling parental responsibilities toward the child, recognizing or holding out the child as the individual's child, materially participating in the child's upbringing, and residing with the child in the same household as a regular member of that household. See also the Comment to Section 2-115 for additional explanation of the term.

Genetic mother is defined as the woman whose egg was fertilized by the sperm of the child's genetic father.

Incapacity is defined in Section 2-115 as the inability of an individual to function as a parent of a child because of the individual's physical or mental condition.

Relative is defined in Section 2-115 as a grandparent or a descendant of a grandparent.

Subsection (b): Court Order Adjudicating Parentage: Effect. A court order issued under § 807 of the Uniform Parentage Act (UPA) would qualify as a court order adjudicating parentage for purposes of subsection (b). UPA § 807 provides:

UPA § 807. Parentage under Validated Gestational Agreement. (a) Upon birth of a child to a gestational carrier, the intended parents shall file notice with the court that a child has been born to the gestational carrier within 300 days after assisted reproduction. Thereupon, the court shall issue an order:

- (1) confirming that the intended parents are the parents of the child;
- (2) if necessary, ordering that the child be surrendered to the intended parents; and
- (3) directing the [agency maintaining birth records] to issue a birth certificate naming the intended parents as parents of the child.

(b) If the parentage of a child born to a gestational carrier is alleged not to be the result of assisted reproduction, the court shall order genetic testing to determine the parentage of the child.

(c) If the intended parents fail to file notice required under subsection (a), the gestational carrier or the appropriate State agency may file notice with the court that a child has been born to the gestational carrier within 300 days after assisted reproduction. Upon proof of a court order issued pursuant to Section 803 validating the gestational agreement, the court shall order the intended parents are the parents of the child and are financially responsible for the child.

Subsection (c): Gestational Carrier. Under subsection (c), the only way that a parent-child relationship exists between a gestational child and the child's gestational carrier is if she is (1) designated as a parent of the child in a court order described in subsection (b) or (2) the child's genetic mother and a parent-child relationship does not exist under this section with an individual other than the gestational carrier.

Subsection (d): Parent-Child Relationship With Intended Parent or Parents. Subsection (d) only applies in the absence of a court order under subsection (b). If there is no such court order, subsection (b) provides that a parent-child relationship exists between a gestational child and an intended parent who functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth. A parent-child also exists between a gestational child and an intended parent if the intended parent died while the gestational carrier was pregnant, but only if (A) there were two intended parents and the other intended parent functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth; (B) there were two intended parents, the other intended parent also died while the gestational carrier was pregnant, and a relative of either deceased intended parent or the spouse or surviving spouse of a relative of either deceased intended parent functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth; or (C) there was no other intended parent and a relative of or the spouse or surviving spouse of a relative of the deceased intended parent functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth.

Subsection (e): Gestational Agreement After Death or Incapacity. Subsection (e) only applies in the absence of a court order under subsection (b). If there is no such court order, a parent-child relationship exists between a gestational child and an individual whose sperm or eggs were used after the individual's death or incapacity to conceive a child under a gestational agreement entered into after the individual's death or incapacity if the individual intended to be treated as the parent of the child. The individual's intent may be shown by a record signed by the individual which considering all the facts and circumstances evidences the individual's intent or by other facts and circumstances establishing the individual's intent by clear and convincing evidence.

Subsections (f) and (g): Presumption: Gestational Agreement After Spouse's Death or Incapacity. Subsection (f) and (g) are connected. Subsection (f) provides that unless there is clear and convincing evidence of a contrary intent, an individual is deemed to have intended to be treated as the parent of a gestational child for purposes of subsection (e)(2) if (1) the individual, before death or incapacity, deposited the sperm or eggs that were used to conceive the child, (2) when the individual deposited the sperm or eggs, the individual was married and no divorce proceeding was pending; and (3) the individual's spouse or surviving spouse functioned as a parent of the child no later than two years after the child's birth.

Subsection (g) provides, however, that the presumption under subsection (f) does not apply if there is a court order under subsection (b) or a signed record that satisfies subsection (e)(1).

Subsection (h): When Posthumously Conceived Gestational Child is Treated as in Gestation. Subsection (h) provides that if, under this section, an individual is a parent of a gestational child who is conceived after the individual's death, the child is treated as in gestation at the individual's death for purposes of Section 2-104(a)(2) if the child is either (i) in utero not later than 36 months after the individual's death or (ii) born not later than 45 months after the individual's death. Note also that Section 3-703 gives the decedent's personal representative authority to take account of the possibility of posthumous conception in the timing of the distribution of part or all of the estate.

The 36-month period in subsection (g) is designed to allow a surviving spouse or partner a period of grieving, time to make up his or her mind about whether to go forward with assisted reproduction, and a reasonable allowance for unsuccessful attempts to achieve a pregnancy. The three-year period also coincides with Section 3-1006, under which an heir is allowed to recover property improperly distributed or its value from any distributee during the later of three years after the decedent's death or one year after distribution. If the assisted-reproduction procedure is performed in a medical facility, the date when the child is in utero will ordinarily be evidenced by medical records. In some cases, however, the procedure is not performed in a medical facility, and so such evidence may be lacking. Providing an alternative of birth within 45 months is designed to provide certainty in such cases. The 45-month period is based on the 36-month period with an additional nine months tacked on to allow for a typical period of pregnancy.

ELECTIVE-SHARE OF SURVIVING SPOUSE

GENERAL COMMENT

The elective share of the surviving spouse was fundamentally revised in 1990 and was reorganized and clarified in 1993 and 2008. The main purpose of the revisions is to bring elective-share law into line with the contemporary view of marriage as an economic partnership. The economic partnership theory of marriage is already implemented under the equitable-distribution system applied in both the common-law and community-property states when a marriage ends in divorce. When a marriage ends in death, that theory is also already implemented under the community-property system and under the system promulgated in the Model Marital Property Act. In the common-law states, however, elective-share law has not caught up to the partnership theory of marriage.

The general effect of implementing the partnership theory in elective-share law is to increase the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a long-term marriage in cases in which the marital assets were disproportionately titled in the decedent's name; and to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a long-term marriage in cases in which the marital assets were more or less equally titled or disproportionately titled in the surviving spouse's name. A further general effect is to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a short-term, later-in-life marriage (typically a post-widowhood remarriage) in which neither spouse contributed much, if anything, to the acquisition of the other's wealth, except that a special supplemental elective-share amount is provided in cases in which the surviving spouse would otherwise be left without sufficient funds for support.

The Partnership Theory of Marriage

The partnership theory of marriage, sometimes also called the marital-sharing theory, is stated in various ways. Sometimes it is thought of "as an expression of the presumed intent of husbands and wives to pool their fortunes on an equal basis, share and share alike." M. Glendon, The Transformation of Family Law 131 (1989). Under this approach, the economic rights of each spouse are seen as deriving from an unspoken marital bargain under which the partners agree that each is to enjoy a half interest in the fruits of the marriage, i.e., in the property nominally acquired by and titled in the sole name of either partner during the marriage (other than in property acquired by gift or inheritance). A decedent who disinherits his or her surviving spouse is seen as having reneged on the bargain. Sometimes the theory is expressed in restitutionary terms, a return-of-contribution notion. Under this approach, the law grants each spouse an entitlement to compensation for non-monetary contributions to the marital enterprise, as "a recognition of the activity of one spouse in the home and to compensate not only for this activity but for opportunities lost." Id. See also American Law Institute, Principles of Family Dissolution § 4.09 Comment c (2002).

No matter how the rationale is expressed, the community-property system, including that version of community law promulgated in the Model Marital Property Act, recognizes the partnership theory, but it is sometimes thought that the common-law system denies it. In the ongoing marriage, it is true that the basic principle in the common-law (title-based) states is that marital status does not affect the ownership of property. The regime is one of separate property. Each spouse owns all that he or she earns. By contrast, in the community-property states, each spouse acquires an ownership interest in half the property the other earns during the marriage. By granting each spouse upon acquisition an immediate half interest in the earnings of the other, the community-property regimes directly recognize that the couple's enterprise is in essence collaborative.

The common-law states, however, also give effect or purport to give effect to the partnership theory when a marriage is dissolved by divorce.

If the marriage ends in divorce, a spouse who sacrificed his or her financial-earning opportunities to contribute so-called domestic services to the marital enterprise (such as child rearing and homemaking) stands to be recompensed. All states now follow the equitable-distribution system upon divorce, under which "broad discretion [is given to] trial courts to assign to either spouse property acquired during the marriage, irrespective of title, taking into account the circumstances of the particular case and recognizing the value of the contributions of a nonworking spouse or homemaker to the acquisition of that property. Simply stated, the system of equitable distribution views marriage as essentially a shared enterprise or joint undertaking in the nature of a partnership to which both spouses contribute—directly and indirectly, financially and nonfinancially—the fruits of which are distributable at divorce." J. Gregory, The Law of Equitable Distribution ¶ 1.03, at p. 1-6 (1989).

The other situation in which spousal property rights figure prominently is disinheritance at death. The original (pre-1990) Uniform Probate Code, along with almost all other non-UPC common-law states, treats this as one of the few instances in American law where the decedent's testamentary freedom with respect to his or her title-based ownership interests must be curtailed. No matter what the decedent's intent, the original Uniform Probate Code and almost all of the non-UPC common-law states recognize that the surviving spouse does have some claim to a portion of the decedent's estate. These statutes provide the spouse a so-called forced share. The forced share is expressed as an option that the survivor can elect or let lapse during the administration of the decedent's estate, hence in the UPC the forced share is termed the "elective" share.

Elective-share law in the common-law states, however, has not caught up to the partnership theory of marriage. Under typical American elective-share law, including the elective share provided by the original Uniform Probate Code, a surviving spouse may claim a one-third share of the decedent's estate—not the 50 percent share of the couple's combined assets that the partnership theory would imply.

Long-term Marriages. To illustrate the discrepancy between the partnership theory and conventional elective-share law, consider first a long-term marriage, in which the couple's combined assets were accumulated mostly during the course of the marriage. The original elective-share fraction of one-third of the decedent's estate plainly does not implement a partnership principle. The actual result depends on which spouse happens to die first and on how the property accumulated during the marriage was nominally titled.

Example 1—Long-term Marriage under Conventional Forced-share Law. Consider A and B, who were married in their twenties or early thirties; they never divorced, and A died at age, say, 70, survived by B. For whatever reason, A left a will entirely disinheriting B.

Throughout their long life together, the couple managed to accumulate assets worth $600,000, marking them as a somewhat affluent but hardly wealthy couple.

Under conventional elective-share law, B's ultimate entitlement depends on the manner in which these $600,000 in assets were nominally titled as between them. B could end up much poorer or much richer than a 50/50 partnership principle would suggest. The reason is that under conventional elective-share law, B has a claim to one-third of A's "estate."

Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Decedent's Name; Conventional Elective-share Law Frequently Entitles Survivor to Less Than Equal Share of Marital Assets. If all the marital assets were titled in A's name, B's claim against A's estate would only be for $200,000—well below B's $300,000 entitlement produced by the partnership/marital-sharing principle.

If $500,000 of the marital assets were titled in A's name, B's claim against A's estate would still only be for $166,500 (1/3 of $500,000), which when combined with B's "own" $100,000 yields a $266,500 cut for B—still below the $300,000 figure produced by the partnership/marital-sharing principle.

Marital Assets Equally Titled; Conventional Elective-share Law Entitles Survivor to Disproportionately Large Share. If $300,000 of the marital assets were titled in A's name, B would still have a claim against A's estate for $100,000, which when combined with B's "own" $300,000 yields a $400,000 cut for B—well above the $300,000 amount to which the partnership/marital-sharing principle would lead.

Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Survivor's Name; Conventional Elective-share Law Entitles Survivor to Magnify the Disproportion. If only $200,000 were titled in A's name, B would still have a claim against A's estate for $66,667 (1/3 of $200,000), even though B was already overcompensated as judged by the partnership/marital-sharing theory.

Short-term, Later-in-Life Marriages. Short-term marriages, particularly the post-widowhood remarriage occurring later in life, present different considerations. Because each spouse in this type of marriage typically comes into the marriage owning assets derived from a former marriage, the one-third fraction of the decedent's estate far exceeds a 50/50 division of assets acquired during the marriage.

Example 2—Short-term, Later-in-Life Marriage under Conventional Elective-share Law. Consider B and C. A year or so after A's death,

B married C. Both B and C are in their seventies, and after five years of marriage, B dies survived by C. Both B and C have adult children and a few grandchildren by their prior marriages, and each naturally would prefer to leave most or all of his or her property to those children.

The value of the couple's combined assets is $600,000, $300,000 of which is titled in B's name (the decedent) and $300,000 of which is titled in C's name (the survivor).

For reasons that are not immediately apparent, conventional elective-share law gives the survivor, C, a right to claim one-third of B's estate, thereby shrinking B's estate (and hence the share of B's children by B's prior marriage to A) by $100,000 (reducing it to $200,000) while supplementing C's assets (which will likely go to C's children by C's prior marriage) by $100,000 (increasing their value to $400,000).

Conventional elective-share law, in other words, basically rewards the children of the remarried spouse who manages to outlive the other, arranging for those children a windfall share of one-third of the "loser's" estate. The "winning" spouse who chanced to survive gains a windfall, for this "winner" is unlikely to have made a contribution, monetary or otherwise, to the "loser's" wealth remotely worth one-third.

The Redesigned Elective Share

The redesigned elective share is intended to bring elective-share law into line with the partnership theory of marriage.

In the long-term marriage illustrated in Example 1, the effect of implementing a partnership theory is to increase the entitlement of the surviving spouse when the marital assets were disproportionately titled in the decedent's name; and to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of the surviving spouse when the marital assets were more or less equally titled or disproportionately titled in the surviving spouse's name. Put differently, the effect is both to reward the surviving spouse who sacrificed his or her financial-earning opportunities in order to contribute so-called domestic services to the marital enterprise and to deny an additional windfall to the surviving spouse in whose name the fruits of a long-term marriage were mostly titled.

In the short-term, later-in-life marriage illustrated in Example 2, the effect of implementing a partnership theory is to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of the surviving spouse because in such a marriage neither spouse is likely to have contributed much, if anything, to the acquisition of the other's wealth. Put differently, the effect is to deny a windfall to the survivor who contributed little to the decedent's wealth, and ultimately to deny a windfall to the survivor's children by a prior marriage at the expense of the decedent's children by a prior marriage. Bear in mind that in such a marriage, which produces no children, a decedent who disinherits or largely disinherits the surviving spouse may not be acting so much from malice or spite toward the surviving spouse, but from a natural instinct to want to leave most or all of his or her property to the children of his or her former, long-term marriage. In hardship cases, however, as explained later, a special supplemental elective-share amount is provided when the surviving spouse would otherwise be left without sufficient funds for support.

2008 Revisions. When first promulgated in the early 1990s, the statute provided that the “elective-share percentage” increased annually according to a graduated schedule. The “elective-share percentage” ranged from a low of 0 percent for a marriage of less than one year to a high of 50 percent for a marriage of fifteen years or more. The “elective-share percentage” did double duty. The system equated the “elective-share percentage” of the couple’s combined assets with 50 percent of the marital-property portion of the couple’s assets — the assets that are subject to equalization under the partnership theory of marriage. Consequently, the elective share effected the partnership theory rather indirectly. Although the schedule was designed to represent by approximation a constant fifty percent of the marital-property portion of the couple’s assets (the augmented estate), it did not say so explicitly.

The 2008 revisions are designed to present the system in a more direct form, one that makes the system more transparent and therefore more understandable. The 2008 revisions disentangle the elective-share percentage from the system that approximates the marital-property portion of the augmented estate. As revised, the statute provides that the “elective-share percentage” is always 50 percent, but it is not 50 percent of the augmented estate but 50 percent of the “marital-property portion” of the augmented estate. The marital-property portion of the augmented estate is computed by approximation—by applying the percentages set forth in a graduated schedule that increases annually with the length of the marriage (each “marital-portion percentage” being double the percentage previously set forth in the “elective-share percentage” schedule). Thus, for example, under the former system, the elective-share amount in a marriage of ten years was 30 percent of the augmented estate. Under the revised system, the elective-share amount is 50 percent of the marital-property portion of the augmented estate, the marital-property portion of the augmented estate being 60 percent of the augmented estate.

The primary benefit of these changes is that the statute, as revised, presents the elective-share’s implementation of the partnership theory of marriage in a direct rather than indirect form, adding clarity and transparency to the system. An important byproduct of the revision is that it facilitates the inclusion of an alternative provision for enacting states that want to implement the partnership theory of marriage but prefer not to define the marital-property portion by approximation but by classification. Under the deferred marital-property approach, the marital-property portion consists of the value of the couple’s property that was acquired during the marriage other than by gift or inheritance. (See below.)

The 2008 revisions are based on a proposal presented in Waggoner, “The Uniform Probate Code’s Elective Share: Time for a Reassessment,” 37 U. Mich. J. L. Reform 1 (2003), an article that gives a more extensive explanation of the rationale of the 2008 revisions.

Specific Features of the Redesigned Elective Share

Because ease of administration and predictability of result are prized features of the probate system, the redesigned elective share implements the marital-partnership theory by means of a mechanically determined approximation system. Under the redesigned elective share, there is no need to identify which of the couple’s property was earned during the marriage and which was acquired prior to the marriage or acquired during the marriage by gift or inheritance. For further discussion of the reasons for choosing this method, see Waggoner, “Spousal Rights in Our Multiple-Marriage Society: The Revised Uniform Probate Code,” 26 Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 683 (1992).

Section 2-202(a)—The “Elective-share Amount.” Under Section 2-202(a), the elective-share amount is equal to 50 percent of the value of the “marital-property portion of the augmented estate.” The marital-property portion of the augmented estate, which is determined under Section 2-203(b), increases with the length of the marriage. The longer the marriage, the larger the “marital-property portion of the augmented estate.” The sliding scale adjusts for the correspondingly greater contribution to the acquisition of the couple’s marital property in a marriage of 15 years than in a marriage of 15 days. Specifically, the “marital-property portion of the augmented estate” starts low and increases annually according to a graduated schedule until it reaches 100 percent. After one year of marriage, the marital-property portion of the augmented estate is six percent of the augmented estate and it increases with each additional year of marriage until it reaches the maximum 100 percent level after 15 years of marriage.

Section 2-203(a)—the “Augmented Estate.” The elective-share percentage of 50 percent is applied to the value of the “marital-property portion of the augmented estate.” As defined in Section 2-203, the “augmented estate” equals the value of the couple’s combined assets, not merely the value of the assets nominally titled in the decedent’s name.

More specifically, the “augmented estate” is composed of the sum of four elements:

Section 2-204—the value of the decedent’s net probate estate;

Section 2-205—the value of the decedent’s nonprobate transfers to others, consisting of will-substitute-type inter-vivos transfers made by the decedent to others than the surviving spouse;

Section 2-206—the value of the decedent’s nonprobate transfers to the surviving spouse, consisting of will-substitute-type inter-vivos transfers made by the decedent to the surviving spouse; and

Section 2-207—the value of the surviving spouse’s net assets at the decedent’s death, plus any property that would have been in the surviving spouse’s nonprobate transfers to others under Section 2-205 had the surviving spouse been the decedent.

Section 2-203(b)—the “Marital-property portion” of the Augmented Estate. Section 2-203(b) defines the marital-property portion of the augmented estate.

Section 2-202(a)—the “Elective-share Amount.” Section 2-202(a) requires the elective-share percentage of 50 percent to be applied to the value of the marital-property portion of the augmented estate. This calculation yields the “elective-share amount”—the amount to which the surviving spouse is entitled. If the elective-share percentage were to be applied only to the marital-property portion of the decedent’s assets, a surviving spouse who has already been overcompensated in terms of the way the marital-property portion of the couple’s assets have been nominally titled would receive a further windfall under the elective-share system. The marital-property portion of the couple’s assets, in other words, would not be equalized. By applying the elective-share percentage of 50 percent to the marital-property portion of the augmented estate (the couple’s combined assets), the redesigned system denies any significance to how the spouses took title to particular assets.

Section 2-209—Satisfying the Elective-share Amount. Section 2-209 determines how the elective-share amount is to be satisfied. Under Section 2-209, the decedent’s net probate estate and nonprobate transfers to others are liable to contribute to the satisfaction of the elective-share amount only to the extent the elective-share amount is not fully satisfied by the sum of the following amounts:

Subsection (a)(1)—amounts that pass or have passed from the decedent to the surviving spouse by testate or intestate succession and amounts included in the augmented estate under Section 2-206, i.e., the value of the decedent’s nonprobate transfers to the surviving spouse; and Subsection (a)(2)—the marital-property portion of amounts included in the augmented estate under Section 2-207.

If the combined value of these amounts equals or exceeds the elective-share amount, the surviving spouse is not entitled to any further amount from recipients of the decedent’s net probate estate or nonprobate transfers to others, unless the surviving spouse is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount under Section 2-202(b).

Example 3—15-Year or Longer Marriage under Redesigned Elective Share; Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Decedent’s Name. A and B were married to each other more than 15 years. A died, survived by B. A’s will left nothing to B, and A made no nonprobate transfers to B. A made nonprobate transfers to others in the amount of $100,000 as defined in Section 2-205.

	Aug- mented Estate	Marital- Property Portion (100%)
A’s net probate estate	$300,000	$300,000
A’s nonprobate transfers to others	$100,000	$100,000
A’s nonprobate transfers to B	$0	$0
B’s net assets and nonprobate transfers to others	$200,000	$200,000
Augmented Estate	$600,000	$600,000
Elective-Share Amount (50 % of Marital-prop- erty portion) .....		$300,000
Less Amount Already Satisfied .....		$200,000
Unsatisfied Balance .....		$100,000

Under Section 2-209(a)(2), the full value of B’s assets ($200,000) counts first toward satisfying B’s entitlement. B, therefore, is treated as already having received $200,000 of B’s ultimate entitlement of $300,000. Section 2-209(c) makes A’s net probate estate and nonprobate transfers to others liable for the unsatisfied balance of the elective-share amount, $100,000, which is the amount needed to bring B’s own $200,000 up to $300,000.

Example 4—15-Year or Longer Marriage under Redesigned Elective Share; Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Survivor’s Name. As in Example 3, A and B were married to each other more than 15 years. A died, survived by B. A’s will left nothing to B, and A made no nonprobate transfers to B. A made nonprobate transfers to others in the amount of $50,000 as defined in Section 2-205.

	Aug- mented Estate	Marital- Property Portion (100%)
A’s net probate estate	$150,000	$150,000
A’s nonprobate transfers to others	$50,000	$50,000

A's nonprobate transfers to B	$0	$0
B's assets and nonprobate transfers to others	$400,000	$400,000
Augmented Estate	$600,000	$600,000
Elective-Share Amount (50% of Marital-property portion) .....		$300,000
Less Amount Already Satisfied .....		$400,000
Unsatisfied Balance .....		$0

Under Section 2-209(a)(2), the full value of B's assets ($400,000) counts first toward satisfying B's entitlement. B, therefore, is treated as already having received more than B's ultimate entitlement of $300,000. B has no claim on A's net probate estate or nonprobate transfers to others.

In a marriage that has lasted less than 15 years, only a portion of the survivor's assets—not all—count toward making up the elective-share amount. This is because, in these shorter-term marriages, the marital-property portion of the survivor's assets under Section 2-203(b) is less than 100% and, under Section 2-209(a)(2), the portion of the survivor's assets that count toward making up the elective-share amount is limited to the marital-property portion of those assets.

To explain why this is appropriate requires further elaboration of the underlying theory of the redesigned system. The system avoids the classification and tracing-to-source problems in determining the marital-property portion of the couple's assets. This is accomplished under Section 2-203(b) by applying an ever-increasing percentage, as the length of the marriage increases, to the couple's combined assets without regard to when or how those assets were acquired. By approximation, the redesigned system equates the marital-property portion of the couple's combined assets with the couple's marital assets—assets subject to equalization under the partnership/marital-sharing theory. Thus, in a marriage that has endured long enough for the marital-property portion of their assets to be 60% under Section 2-203(b), 60% of each spouse's assets are treated as marital assets. Section 2-209(a)(2) therefore counts only 60% of the survivor's assets toward making up the elective-share amount.

Example 5—Under 15-Year Marriage under the Redesigned Elective Share; Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Decedent's Name. A and B were married to each other more than 5 but less than 6 years. A died, survived by B. A's will left nothing to B, and A made no nonprobate transfers to B. A made nonprobate transfers to others in the amount of $100,000 as defined in Section 2-205.

	Aug-mented Estate	Marital-Property Portion (30%)
A's net probate estate	$300,000	$90,000
A's nonprobate transfers to others	$100,000	$30,000
A's nonprobate transfers to B	$0	$0
B's assets and nonprobate transfers to others	$200,000	$60,000
Augmented Estate	$600,000	$180,000
Elective-Share Amount (50% of Marital-property portion) .....		$90,000
Less Amount Already Satisfied .....		$60,000
Unsatisfied Balance .....		$30,000

Under Section 2-209(a)(2), the marital-property portion of B's assets (30% of $200,000, or $60,000) counts first toward satisfying B's entitlement. B, therefore, is treated as already having received $60,000 of B's ultimate entitlement of $90,000. Under Section 2-209(c), B has a claim on A's net probate estate and nonprobate transfers to others of $30,000.

Deferred Marital-Property Alternative

By making the elective share percentage a flat 50 percent of the marital-property portion of the augmented estate, the 2007 revision disentangles the elective share percentage from the approximation schedule, thus allowing the marital-property portion of the augmented estate to be defined either by the approximation schedule or by the deferred-marital-property approach. Although one of the benefits of the 2007 revision is added clarity, an important byproduct of the revision is that it facilitates the inclusion of an alternative provision for enacting states that prefer a deferred marital-property approach. See Alan Newman, Incorporating the Partnership Theory of Marriage into Elective-Share Law: the Approximation System of the Uniform Probate Code and the Deferred-Community-Property Alternative, 49 Emory L.J. 487 (2000).

The Support Theory

The partnership/marital-sharing theory is not the only driving force behind elective-share law. Another theoretical basis for elective-share law is that the spouses' mutual duties of support during their joint lifetimes should be continued in some form after death in favor of the survivor, as a claim on the decedent's estate. Current elective-share law implements this theory poorly. The fixed fraction, whether it is the typical one-third or some other fraction, disregards the survivor's actual need. A one-third share may be inadequate to the surviving spouse's needs, especially in a modest estate. On the other hand, in a very large estate, it may go far beyond the survivor's needs. In either a modest or a large estate, the survivor may or may not have ample independent means, and this factor, too, is disregarded in conventional elective-share law. The redesigned elective share system implements the support theory by granting the survivor a supplemental elective-share amount related to the survivor's actual needs. In implementing a support rationale, the length of the marriage is quite irrelevant. Because the duty of support is founded upon status, it arises at the time of the marriage.

Section 2-202(b)—the “Supplemental Elective-share Amount.” Section 2-202(b) is the provision that implements the support theory by providing a supplemental elective-share amount of $75,000. The $75,000 figure is bracketed to indicate that individual states may wish to select a higher or lower amount.

In satisfying this $75,000 amount, the surviving spouse's own titled-based ownership interests count first toward making up this supplemental amount; included in the survivor's assets for this purpose are amounts shifting to the survivor at the decedent's death and amounts owing to the survivor from the decedent's estate under the accrual-type elective-share apparatus discussed above, but excluded are (1) amounts going to the survivor under the Code's probate exemptions and allowances and (2) the survivor's Social Security benefits (and other governmental benefits, such as Medicare insurance coverage). If the survivor's assets are less than the $75,000 minimum, then the survivor is entitled to whatever additional portion of the decedent's estate is necessary, up to 100 percent of it, to bring the survivor's assets up to that minimum level. In the case of a late marriage, in which the survivor is perhaps aged in the mid-seventies, the minimum figure plus the probate exemptions and allowances (which under the Code amount to a minimum of another $64,500) is pretty much on target — in conjunction with Social Security payments and other governmental benefits — to provide the survivor with a fairly adequate means of support.

Example 6—Supplemental Elective-share Amount. After A's death in Example 1, B married C. Five years later, B died, survived by C. B's will left nothing to C, and B made no nonprobate transfers to C. B made no nonprobate transfers to others as defined in Section 2-205.

	Aug- mented Estate	Marital- Property Portion (30%)
B's net probate estate	$90,000	$27,000
B's nonprobate transfers to others	$0	$0
B's nonprobate transfers to C	$0	$0
C's assets and nonprobate transfers to others	$10,000	$3,000

Augmented Estate	$100,000	$30,000
Elective-Share Amount (50% of Marital-property portion) .....	$15,000
Less Amount Already Satisfied .....		$3,000
Unsatisfied Balance .....		$12,000

Solution under Redesigned Elective Share. Under Section 2-209(a)(2), $3,000 (30%) of C's assets count first toward making up C's elective-share amount; under Section 2-209(c), the remaining $12,000 elective-share amount would come from B's net probate estate.

Application of Section 2-202(b) shows that C is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount. The calculation of C's supplemental elective-share amount begins by determining the sum of the amounts described in sections:

2-207 .....	$10,000
2-209(a)(1) .....	0
Elective-share amount payable from decedent's probate estate under Section 2-209(c) ..	$12,000
Total .....	$22,000

The above calculation shows that C is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount under Section 2-202(b) of $53,000 ($75,000 minus $22,000). The supplemental elective-share amount is payable entirely from B's net probate estate, as prescribed in Section 2-209(c).

The end result is that C is entitled to $65,000 ($12,000 + $53,000) by way of elective share from B's net probate estate (and nonprobate transfers to others, had there been any). Sixty-five thousand dollars is the amount necessary to bring C's $10,000 in assets up to $75,000.

Decedent's Nonprobate Transfers to Others

The original Code made great strides toward preventing “fraud on the spouse's share.” The problem of “fraud on the spouse's share” arises when the decedent seeks to evade the spouse's elective share by engaging in various kinds of nominal inter-vivos transfers. To render that type of behavior ineffective, the original Code adopted the augmented-estate concept, which extended the elective-share entitlement to property that was the subject of specified types of inter-vivos transfer, such as revocable inter-vivos trusts.

In the redesign of the elective share, the augmented-estate concept has been strengthened. The pre-1990 Code left several loopholes ajar in the augmented estate—a notable one being life insurance the decedent buys, naming someone other than his or her surviving spouse as the beneficiary. With appropriate protection for the insurance company that pays off before receiving notice of an elective-share claim, the redesigned elective-share system includes these types of insurance policies in the augmented estate as part of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others under Section 2-205.

Historical Note. This General Comment was revised in 1993 and in 2008.

15-11-201. Right to elective-share. (1) Elective-share amount. The surviving spouse of a decedent who dies domiciled in this state has a right of election, under the limitations and conditions stated in this part 2, to take an elective-share amount not greater than one-half of the value of the augmented estate, determined by the length of time the spouse and the decedent were married to each other, in accordance with the following schedule:

If the decedent and the spouse were married to each other:

The elective-share percentage is:

Less than 1 year	Supplemental amount only.
1 year but less than 2 years	5% of the augmented estate.
2 years but less than 3 years	10% of the augmented estate.
3 years but less than 4 years	15% of the augmented estate.
4 years but less than 5 years	20% of the augmented estate.
5 years but less than 6 years	25% of the augmented estate.
6 years but less than 7 years	30% of the augmented estate.
7 years but less than 8 years	35% of the augmented estate.
8 years but less than 9 years	40% of the augmented estate.
9 years but less than 10 years	45% of the augmented estate.
10 years or more	50% of the augmented estate.

(2) (a) Supplemental elective-share amount. If the sum of the amounts described in sections 15-11-202 (2) (d), 15-11-203 (1) (a), and that part of the elective-share amount payable from the decedent's probate estate and nonprobate transfers to others under section 15-11-203 (2) and (3) is less than fifty thousand dollars, the surviving spouse is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount equal to fifty thousand dollars, minus the sum of the amounts described in those sections. The supplemental elective-share amount is payable from the decedent's probate estate and from recipients of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others in the order of priority set forth in section 15-11-203 (2) and (3).

(b) The dollar amount stated in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall be increased or decreased based on the cost of living adjustment as calculated and specified in section 15-10-112.

(3) Effect of election on statutory benefits. If the right of election is exercised by or on behalf of the surviving spouse, the surviving spouse's exempt property and family allowance, if any, are not charged against but are in addition to the elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts.

(4) Nondomiciliary. The right, if any, of the surviving spouse of a decedent who dies domiciled outside this state to take an elective-share in property in this state is governed by the law of the decedent's domicile at death.

Editor's note: (1) This section is similar to former § 15-11-201 as it existed prior to 1995.

(2) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsection (2):

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Pre-1990 Provision. The pre-1990 provisions granted the surviving spouse a one-third share of the augmented estate. The one-third fraction was largely a carry over from common-law dower, under which a surviving widow had a one-third interest for life in her deceased husband's land.

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. The revision of this section is the first step in the overall plan of implementing a partnership or marital-sharing theory of marriage, with a support theory back-up.

Subsection (a). Subsection (a) implements the partnership theory by providing that the elective-share amount is 50 percent of the value of the marital-property portion of the augmented estate. The augmented estate is defined in Section 2-203(a) and the marital-property portion of the augmented estate is defined in Section 2-203(b).

Subsection (b). Subsection (b) implements the support theory of the elective share by providing a $75,000 supplemental elective-share amount, in case the surviving spouse's assets and other entitlements are below this figure.

2008 Cost-of-Living Adjustments. As originally promulgated in 1990, the dollar amount in subsection (b) was $50,000. To adjust for inflation, this amount was increased in 2008 to $75,000. The dollar amount in this subsection is subject to annual cost-of-living adjustments under Section 1-109.

Subsection (c). The homestead, exempt property, and family allowances provided by Article II, Part 4, are not charged to the electing spouse as a part of the elective share. Consequently, these allowances may be distributed from the probate estate without reference to whether an elective share right is asserted.

Cross Reference. To have the right to an elective share under subsection (a), the decedent's spouse must survive the decedent. Under Section 2-702(a), the requirement of survivorship is satisfied only if it can be established that the spouse survived the decedent by 120 hours.

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 2008.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provision similar to this section.

In contrast to the Uniform Probate Code provisions concerning the augmented estate, which do not allow the surviving spouse to opt out of his beneficial interest in a trust established by the decedent, and which describe their second purpose as to prevent the surviving spouse from electing a share of the probate estate when the spouse has received a fair share of the total wealth of the decedent through other means, the sole purpose of the Colorado provisions is to protect the surviving spouse. Matter of Estate of Grasseschi, 776 P.2d 1136 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 785 P.2d 1253 (Colo. 1989).

Widow is entitled to statutory allowance even though mutual wills are executed. Where a husband leaves a will, his widow is entitled to the statutory widow's allowance regardless of whether she intends to take under the statute or the will, and the fact that the husband and wife may have executed mutual wills, in itself, in the absence of an effective waiver of the widow's allowance by the wife, in no manner changes the rule. In re Williams, Estate, 101 Colo. 262, 72 P.2d 476 (1937).

Widow electing to take one-half of estate is entitled to such remaining moiety after discharge of debts. Where under this section a widow renounces the will of her deceased husband, and elects to take one-half of the whole estate of the deceased, she is entitled to such remaining moiety after the discharge of the debts against the estate. Hanna v. Palmer, 6 Colo. 156, 45 Am. R. 524 (1882).

A devise by wife to husband of a life estate in the whole of her property is not the equivalent of one-half thereof. Wolfe v. Mueller, 46 Colo. 335, 104 P. 487 (1909).

Renouncing where estate is insolvent. Where the widow renounces under this section, giving her in such case one-half of the whole estate, and the estate is solvent, she is entitled to half the rents arising out of land devised under the will to one not an heir at law of the testator. Logan v. Logan, 11 Colo. 44, 17 P. 99 (1887).

Any election to renounce is contingent upon validity of will. Whether expressed therein or not, any election to renounce a will and take under the statute is contingent upon the establishment of the ultimate validity of the will. In re Stitzer's Estate, 103 Colo. 529, 87 P.2d 745 (1939).

A widow who renounces all benefits under the will of her deceased husband is entitled to one-half of his estate under the provisions of this section. Hart v. Hart, 95 Colo. 471, 37 P.2d 754 (1934).

Right of a surviving spouse applies to property of which the husband dies seized and possessed. Hageman v. First Nat'l Bank, 32 Colo. App. 406, 514 P.2d 328 (1973).

If by a will the husband attempts to dispose of his property in a manner adverse to the interest of the wife, she has the right to elect to take against the will and receive one-half of the husband's estate. Hageman v. First Nat'l Bank, 32 Colo. App. 406, 514 P.2d 328 (1973).

15-11-202. Augmented estate. (1) Definitions. (a) As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(I) "Bona fide purchaser" means a purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of an adverse claim. The notation of a state documentary fee on a recorded instrument pursuant to section 39-13-103, C.R.S., is prima facie evidence that the transfer described therein was made to a bona fide purchaser.

(II) "Decedent's nonprobate transfers to others" means the decedent's nonprobate transfers to persons, other than the decedent's spouse, surviving spouse, the decedent, or the decedent's creditors, estate, or estate creditors, that are included in the augmented estate under paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section.

(III) "Fractional interest in property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship", whether the fractional interest is unilaterally severable or not, means the fraction, the numerator of which is one and the denominator of which, if the decedent was a joint tenant, is one plus the number of joint tenants who survive the decedent and which, if the decedent was not a joint tenant, is the number of joint tenants.

Property transferred to inter vivos trust. Where the settlor, in creating an inter vivos trust, transferred title to property owned by him, and his interest therein passed immediately to the trustee and a valid trust was established, the rights retained by the settlor in the trust did not defeat the trust nor the resulting exclusion of the trust property from the settlor's probate estate, and the transferred property was not subject to the surviving spouse's elective share. Hageman v. First Nat'l Bank, 32 Colo. App. 406, 514 P.2d 328 (1973).

This section is not limited to cases in which Colorado is the domiciliary state. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

Election in case of ancillary administration. Nothing in this section expressly requires, in the case of an ancillary administration, that a valid election against the will be filed in the domiciliary state. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

Rule which prohibits taking against the will and receiving benefits under the will is based upon the doctrine of equitable estoppel and is designed to prevent a surviving spouse from taking unfair advantage of the multijurisdictional distribution of an estate. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

Rule precludes election in ancillary administration inconsistent with election in domiciliary estate. The rule which prohibits taking against the will and receiving benefits under the will at the same time precludes an election by the surviving spouse in an ancillary administration which is inconsistent with an election already taken in the domiciliary estate. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

Assertion of a contrary election is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded and proved by the party asserting the estoppel. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

Applied in Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982); Snyder v. Macy, 674 P.2d 972 (Colo. App. 1983).

(IV) "Marriage", as it relates to a transfer by the decedent during marriage, means any marriage of the decedent to the decedent's surviving spouse.

(V) "Nonadverse party" means a person who does not have a substantial beneficial interest in the trust or other property arrangement that would be adversely affected by the exercise or nonexercise of the power that he or she possesses respecting the trust or other property arrangement. A person having a general power of appointment over property is deemed to have a beneficial interest in the property.

(VI) "Power" or "power of appointment" includes a power to designate the beneficiary of a beneficiary designation, including beneficiary designations under individual retirement accounts and annuities described in section 408 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", as amended, as well as other pension plans or arrangements not subject to part 2 (section 201 et seq.) of the federal "Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974", as amended (29 U.S.C. sec. 1051 et seq.).

(VII) "Presently exercisable general power of appointment" means a power of appointment under which, at the time in question, the decedent, whether or not he or she then had the capacity to exercise the power, held a power to create a present or future interest in himself or herself, his or her creditors, his or her estate, or the creditors of his or her estate, and includes a power to revoke or invade the principal of a trust or other property arrangement.

(VIII) "Probate estate" means property, whether real or personal, movable or immovable, wherever situated, that would pass by intestate succession if the decedent died without a valid will.

(X) (Reserved)

(XI) "Transfer", as it relates to a transfer by, or on behalf of, the decedent, includes:

(A) An exercise or release of a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent;

(B) A lapse at death of a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent; and

(C) An exercise, release, or lapse of a presently exercisable general power of appointment that the decedent created in himself or herself and of a power described in sub-subparagraph (B) of subparagraph (II) of paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section that the decedent conferred on a nonadverse party.

(XII) "Value", unless otherwise indicated, means fair market value as of the decedent's date of death.

(b) In sub-subparagraph (A) of subparagraph (III) of paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section, "termination", with respect to a right or interest in property, means that the right or interest terminated by the terms of the governing instrument or that the decedent transferred or relinquished the right or interest; and, with respect to a power over property, means that the power terminated by exercise, release, lapse, in default, or otherwise; except that, with respect to a power described in sub-subparagraph (A) of subparagraph (I) of paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section, "termination" means that the power terminated by exercise or release, but not by lapse nor in default or otherwise.

(2) Property included in augmented estate. The augmented estate consists of the sum of:

(a) The value of the decedent's probate estate, reduced by funeral and administrative expenses, family allowance, exempt property, and enforceable claims;

(b) The value of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, which are composed of all property, whether real or personal, movable or immovable, wherever situated, not included in the decedent's probate estate, of any of the following types:

(I) Property of any of the following types that passed outside probate at the decedent's death:

(A) Property over which the decedent alone, immediately before death, held or retained a presently exercisable general power of appointment; the amount included is the value of the property subject to the power, to the extent that the property passed at the decedent's death, by exercise, release, lapse, in default, or otherwise to, or for the benefit of, any person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse; except that property over which the decedent had only a testamentary power of appointment is not included. Property over which the decedent had a general inter vivos power of appointment or withdrawal created in the decedent by a third party is includable unless the governing instrument contains a provision for its termination or lapse, in full or in part, during the life of the decedent.

(B) The decedent's fractional interest in property held by the decedent in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship; the amount included is the value of the decedent's fractional interest, to the extent that the fractional interest passed by right of survivorship at the decedent's death to a surviving joint tenant other than the decedent's surviving spouse;

(C) The decedent's ownership interest in multiple-party accounts (within the meaning of section 15-15-201 (5)) and property or accounts held in POD, TOD, or co-ownership registration with the right of survivorship; the amount included is the value of the decedent's ownership interest, to the extent that the decedent's ownership interest passed at the decedent's death to, or for the benefit of, any person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse; or

(D) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of subsection (3) of this section, proceeds of insurance, including accidental death benefits, on the life of the decedent, if the decedent owned the insurance policy immediately before death or if and to the extent that the decedent alone and immediately before death held a presently exercisable general power of appointment over the policy or its proceeds; the amount included is the value of the proceeds, to the extent that they were payable at the decedent's death to, or for the benefit of, the decedent's estate or surviving spouse;

(II) Property transferred in any of the following forms by the decedent during marriage:

(A) Any irrevocable transfer in which the decedent retained the right to the possession or enjoyment of, or to the income from, the property if and to the extent that the decedent's right terminated at or continued beyond the decedent's death; the amount included is the value of the fraction of the property to which the decedent's right related, to the extent that the fraction of the property passed outside probate to or for the benefit of any person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse; or

(B) Any transfer in which the decedent created a power over the income or principal of the transferred property, exercisable by the decedent alone or in conjunction with any other person, or exercisable by a nonadverse party, for the benefit of the decedent, the decedent's creditors, the decedent's estate, or the creditors of the decedent's estate; the amount included is the value of the property subject to the power, to the extent that the power was exercisable at the decedent's death to, or for the benefit of, any person other than the decedent's surviving spouse or to the extent that the property subject to the power passed at the decedent's death, by exercise, release, lapse, in default, or otherwise to, or for the benefit of, any person other than the decedent's estate or surviving spouse; and

(III) Property transferred during marriage and during the two-year period next preceding the decedent's death as a result of a transfer by the decedent if the transfer was of any of the following types:

(A) Any property that passed as a result of the termination of a right or interest in, or power over, property that would have been included in the augmented estate under sub-subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b), or under subparagraph (II) of this paragraph (b), if the right, interest, or power had not terminated until the decedent's death; the amount included is the value of the property that would have been included under sub-subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subparagraph (I) or subparagraph (II) of this paragraph (b); except that the property is valued at the time that the right, interest, or power terminated, and is included only to the extent that the property passed upon termination to, or for the benefit of, any person other than the decedent or the decedent's estate, spouse, or surviving spouse;

(B) Any transfer of, or relating to, an insurance policy on the life of the decedent if the proceeds would have been included in the augmented estate under sub-subparagraph (D) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b) had the transfer not occurred; the amount included is the value of the insurance proceeds to the extent that the proceeds were payable at the decedent's death to, or for the benefit of, the decedent's estate or surviving spouse; or

(C) Any transfer of property, to the extent not otherwise included in the augmented estate, made to, or for the benefit of, a person other than the decedent's surviving spouse;

the amount included is the value of the transferred property to the extent that the aggregate transfers to any one donee in either of the two years exceeded ten thousand dollars;

(c) The value of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to the decedent's surviving spouse, which are composed of all property that passed outside probate at the decedent's death from the decedent to the surviving spouse by reason of the decedent's death, including (i) the decedent's fractional interest in property held as a joint tenant with the right of survivorship, to the extent that the decedent's fractional interest passed to the surviving spouse as surviving joint tenant, (ii) the decedent's ownership interest in multiple-party accounts (within the meaning of section 15-15-201 (5)) and property or accounts held in POD, TOD, or co-ownership registration with the right of survivorship, to the extent the decedent's ownership interest passed to the surviving spouse as surviving co-owner, and (iii) all other property that would have been included in the augmented estate under subparagraph (I) or (II) of paragraph (b) of this subsection (2) had it passed to, or for the benefit of, a person other than the decedent's spouse, surviving spouse, the decedent, or the decedent's creditors, estate, or estate creditors, but excluding property passing to the surviving spouse under the federal social security system; and

(d) To the extent not included in or expressly excluded from the augmented estate under paragraph (a) or (c) of this subsection (2), the value of:

(I) Property that was owned by the decedent's surviving spouse at the decedent's death, including:

(A) The surviving spouse's fractional interest in property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship;

(B) The surviving spouse's ownership interest in multiple-party accounts (within the meaning of section 15-15-201 (5)) and property or accounts held in POD, TOD, or co-ownership registration with the right of survivorship; and

(C) Property that passed to the surviving spouse by reason of the decedent's death; and

(II) Property that would have been included in the surviving spouse's nonprobate transfers to others, other than the spouse's fractional and ownership interests included under sub-subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (d), had the spouse been the decedent. Property included under this paragraph (d) is valued at the decedent's death, taking the fact that the decedent predeceased the spouse into account; except that, for purposes of sub-subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (d), the values of the spouse's fractional and ownership interests are determined immediately before the decedent's death if the decedent was then a joint tenant or a co-owner of the property or accounts. For purposes of this subparagraph (II), proceeds of insurance that would have been included in the spouse's nonprobate transfers to others under sub-subparagraph (D) of subparagraph (I) of paragraph (b) of this subsection (2) are not valued as if he or she were deceased. The value of property included under this paragraph (d) is reduced in each category by enforceable claims against the included property and is reduced by enforceable claims against the surviving spouse.

(3) Exclusions. Notwithstanding anything stated in subsection (2) of this section, the following exclusions shall control:

(a) The value of any property is excluded from the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others (i) to the extent the decedent received adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth for a transfer of the property; or (ii) if the property was transferred with the written joinder of, or if the transfer was consented to in writing by, the surviving spouse; or (iii) if the property was transferred to a bona fide purchaser. For purposes of this section, in the absence of a finding of a contrary intent, joinder in the filing of a gift tax return does not constitute consent or joinder.

(b) Any life insurance maintained pursuant to a marriage dissolution settlement agreement or court order or any distribution from a plan qualified under section 401(a) of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", as amended, is excluded from the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others to the extent such items are payable to a person other than the surviving spouse.

(c) Life insurance, accident insurance, pension, profit sharing, retirement, and other benefit plans payable to persons other than the decedent's surviving spouse or the decedent's estate are excluded from the augmented estate.

(d) Any completed transfers made by the decedent prior to July 1, 1974, are excluded from the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others.

(e) The decedent's fractional interest in real property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, if such joint tenancy was created by a transfer by the decedent prior to marriage to the surviving spouse, is excluded from the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others.

(f) The decedent's fractional interest in real property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, if such joint tenancy was created by a transfer by someone other than the decedent or by someone other than the surviving spouse, is excluded from the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others.

(g) The surviving spouse's fractional interest in real property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, if such joint tenancy was created by a transfer by someone other than the decedent or by someone other than the surviving spouse, is excluded from the augmented estate.

(h) Except with respect to joint tenancies between the surviving spouse and the decedent, the surviving spouse's fractional interest in real property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, if such joint tenancy was created by a transfer by the surviving spouse prior to marriage to the decedent, is excluded from the augmented estate.

(4) Valuation. The value of property includes the commuted value of any present or future interest and the commuted value of amounts payable under any trust, life insurance settlement option, annuity contract, public or private pension, disability compensation, death benefit or retirement plan, or any similar arrangement, exclusive of the federal social security system.

(5) Overlapping application; no double inclusion. In case of overlapping application to the same property referred to in sub-subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subparagraph (I) or subparagraph (II) of paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section, the property is included in the augmented estate under the provision yielding the highest value, but under any one, but only one, of the overlapping provisions if they all yield the same value.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Ownership of Personal Property Accumulated During a Marriage", see 17 Colo. Law. 623 (1988).

The legislative purpose in enacting the concept of the augmented estate was twofold: (1) To attempt to prevent the owner of wealth from making arrangements which transmit his property to others by means other than probate deliberately to defeat the right of the surviving spouse to a share and (2) to insure that the spouse is adequately provided for. Matter of Estate of Grasseschi, 776 P.2d 1136 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 785 P.2d 1253 (Colo. 1989).

Sections 15-11-402 and 15-11-403 (now §§ 15-11-403 and 15-11-404) to be read with subsection (1). Sections 15-11-402 and 15-11-403 (now §§ 15-11-403 and 15-11-404) providing for family and exempt property allowances must be read in conjunction with the definition of "augmented estate" in subsection (1) of this section to determine whether distributing such allowances from the "augmented estate" is consistent and harmonious with the creation of an

"augmented estate" under the statute. In re Estate of Novitt, 37 Colo. App. 524, 549 P.2d 805 (1976).

Family and exempt property allowances are items to be claimed from probate estate. The language of subsection (1) clearly reflects a legislative intent to establish the family allowance and exempt property allowance as items to be claimed from the probate estate, if any, to which are then added certain items to create the augmented estate. In re Estate of Novitt, 37 Colo. App. 524, 549 P.2d 805 (1976).

Election of the surviving spouse to one-half of the augmented estate was disallowed insofar as it would affect assets transferred to a revocable inter vivos trust prior to July 1, 1974, the effective date of the Colorado probate code. In re Estate of Novitt, 37 Colo. App. 524, 549 P.2d 805 (1976).

Except where inter-vivos transfers reduce the probate estate below a threshold amount, then all claims and expenses should be allowed against the total assets of the augmented estate and the surviving spouse's elective share awarded from a net value. Matter of Estate of Smith, 718 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1986).

And computation of a negative value for the probate estate is merely an accounting tool to arrive at a proper allocation of the benefits and burdens accruing to the estate. Matter of Estate of Smith, 718 P.2d 1069 (Colo. App. 1986).

Application to joint tenancies. The probate court properly refused to apply the augmented estate provisions of this section to joint tenancies where the joint tenancies vested prior to the effective date of the Colorado probate code. Estate of Barnhart v. Burkhardt, 38 Colo. App. 544, 563 P.2d 972 (1977), aff'd, 194 Colo. 505, 574 P.2d 500 (1978).

15-11-203. Sources from which elective-share payable. (1) Elective-share amount only. In a proceeding for an elective-share, the following are applied first to satisfy the elective-share amount and to reduce or eliminate any contributions due from the decedent's probate estate and recipients of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others:

(a) Amounts included in the augmented estate under section 15-11-202 (2) (a) which pass or have passed to the surviving spouse by testate or intestate succession and amounts included in the augmented estate under section 15-11-202 (2) (c). For the purposes of this subsection (1), if the surviving spouse disclaims any property, including interests in trust created by the decedent, such property shall not be applied under this subsection (1) to the extent that such property passes to a person other than the surviving spouse;

(b) Amounts included in the augmented estate under section 15-11-202 (2) (d) up to the applicable percentage thereof. For the purposes of this subsection (1), the "applicable percentage" is twice the elective-share percentage set forth in the schedule in section 15-11-201 (1) appropriate to the length of time the spouse and the decedent were married to each other.

(2) Unsatisfied balance of elective-share amount; supplemental elective-share amount. If, after the application of subsection (1) of this section, the elective-share amount is not fully satisfied or the surviving spouse is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount, amounts included in the decedent's probate estate and in the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, other than amounts included under section 15-11-202 (2) (b) (III) (A) or (2) (b) (III) (C), are applied first to satisfy the unsatisfied balance of the elective-share amount or the supplemental elective-share amount. The decedent's probate estate and that portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others are so applied that liability for the unsatisfied balance of the elective-share amount or for the supplemental elective-share amount is equitably apportioned among the recipients of the decedent's probate estate and of that portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others in proportion to the value of their interests therein.

(3) Unsatisfied balance of elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts. If, after the application of subsections (1) and (2) of this section, the elective-share or supplemental elective-share amount is not fully satisfied, the remaining portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others is so applied that liability for the unsatisfied balance of the elective-share or supplemental elective-share amount is equitably apportioned among the recipients of that remaining portion of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others in proportion to the value of their interests therein.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Divorce Considerations Relevant to an Estate Planning Practice", see 29 Colo. Law. 53 (February 2000).

15-11-204. Personal liability of recipients. (1) Only original recipients of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, and the donees of the recipients of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, to the extent the donees have the property or its proceeds, are liable to make a proportional contribution toward satisfaction of the surviving spouse's elective-share or supplemental elective-share amount. A person liable to make contribution may choose to give up the proportional part of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to him or her or to pay the value of the amount for which he or she is liable.

(2) If any section or any part of any section of this part 2 is preempted by any federal law (other than the federal "employee retirement income security act of 1974", as amended) with respect to a payment, an item of property, or any other benefit included in the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, a person, other than a bona fide purchaser, who receives the payment, item of property, or any other benefit is obligated to return that payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of that payment or the value of that item of property or benefit, as provided in section 15-11-203, to the person who would have been entitled to it were that section or part of that section not preempted.

(3) A bona fide purchaser who purchases property from a recipient or who receives a payment or other item of property in partial or full satisfaction of a legally enforceable obligation, is neither obligated under this part 2 to return the payment, item of property, or benefit nor is liable under this part 2 for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-207 as it existed prior to 1995.

15-11-205. Proceeding for elective-share; time limit. (1) Except as provided in subsection (2) of this section, the election shall be made by filing in the court and mailing or delivering to the personal representative, if any, a petition for the elective-share within nine months after the date of the decedent's death, or within six months after the decedent's will is admitted to probate, whichever limitation expires later. The surviving spouse shall serve a copy of the petition for the elective share on, and shall give written notice of the time and place set for hearing to, persons interested in the estate and to the distributees and recipients of portions of the augmented estate whose interests may be adversely affected by the taking of the elective-share.

(2) Within nine months after the decedent's death, the surviving spouse may petition the court for an extension of time for making an election. If, within nine months after the decedent's death, the spouse gives notice of the petition to all persons interested in the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, the court, for cause shown by the surviving spouse, may extend the time for election.

(3) The surviving spouse may withdraw his or her demand for an elective-share at any time before entry of a final determination by the court. Written notice of such withdrawal shall be given to persons interested in the estate and the distributees and recipients of portions of the augmented estate whose interests may be adversely affected by the taking of the elective-share.

(4) After notice and hearing, the court shall determine the elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts, and shall order its payment from the assets of the augmented estate or by contribution as appears appropriate under sections 15-11-203 and 15-11-204. If it appears that a fund or property included in the augmented estate has not come into the possession of the personal representative, or has been distributed by the personal representative, the court nevertheless shall fix the liability of any person who has any interest in the fund or property or who has possession thereof, whether as trustee or otherwise. The proceeding may be maintained against fewer than all persons against whom relief could be sought, but no person is subject to contribution in any greater amount than he or she would have been under sections 15-11-203 and 15-11-204 had relief been secured against all persons subject to contribution.

(5) An order or judgment of the court may be enforced as necessary in suit for contribution or payment in other courts of this state or other jurisdictions.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Ownership of Personal Property Accumulated During a Marriage", see 17 Colo. Law. 623 (1988).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provision similar to this section.

Purpose of section. The purpose of this section is to assure timely notice to the court, administrative officials, and interested parties, that the surviving spouse is dissatisfied with the will and elects to take and receive one-half of the estate of the testator. In re Stitzer's Estate, 103 Colo. 529, 87 P.2d 745 (1939).

This section is simply one of limitation fixing a definite time after which an election, if filed, cannot be considered. In re Stitzer's Estate, 103 Colo. 529, 87 P.2d 745 (1939).

This section is not directory only, but mandatory. In re Sheely's Estate, 102 Colo. 194, 78 P.2d 378 (1938).

Widow's election must be made within time allowed. In re Sheely's Estate, 102 Colo. 194, 78 P.2d 378 (1938).

Section 15-11-205 sets forth the time limits within which the surviving spouse must elect to take an augmented share of the estate. Because the renunciation described in § 15-11-

207 is inextricably intertwined with the entire election procedure, the time constraints enunciated in this section must also apply to it. Matter of Estate of Grasseschi, 776 P.2d 1136 (Colo. App. 1989), cert. denied, 785 P.2d 1253 (Colo. 1989).

Right to oppose petition. The requirement for notice and an opportunity to appear must be deemed to include the right to oppose a petition for an elective share. In re Estate of Abbott, 39 Colo. App. 536, 571 P.2d 311 (1977).

Sufficiency of notice of election. Under this section any written form of notice which accomplishes the purpose of informing those charged with the administration of the estate that the surviving spouse is dissatisfied with the will and is asserting statutory rights is sufficient. In re Stitzer's Estate, 103 Colo. 529, 87 P.2d 745 (1939).

Express election must be made. Husband who applied for probate of the will of his wife and insisted, during a long litigation, upon the jurisdiction of the district court will not be heard to afterwards question the probate, for the absence of an express election by him. Whipple v. Wessels, 66 Colo. 120, 180 P. 309 (1919).

15-11-206. Right of election personal to surviving spouse; incapacitated surviving spouse. (1) Surviving spouse must be living at time of election. The right of election may be exercised only by a surviving spouse who is living when the petition for the elective-share is filed in the court under section 15-11-205 (1). If the election is not exercised by the surviving spouse personally, it may be exercised on the surviving spouse's behalf by his or her conservator, guardian, or agent under the authority of a power of attorney.

(2) Incapacitated surviving spouse. If the election is exercised on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an incapacitated person, the court shall set aside that portion of the elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts due from the decedent's probate estate and recipients of the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others under section 15-11-203 (2) and (3) and shall appoint a trustee to administer that property for the support of the surviving spouse. For the purposes of this subsection (2), an election on behalf of a surviving spouse by an agent under a durable power of attorney is presumed to be on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an incapacitated person. The trustee shall administer the trust in accordance with the following terms and such additional terms as the court determines appropriate:

(a) Expenditures of income and principal may be made in the manner, when, and to the extent that the trustee determines suitable and proper for the surviving spouse's support, without court order but with regard to other support, income, and property of the surviving spouse and benefits of medical or other forms of assistance from any state or federal government or governmental agency for which the surviving spouse must qualify on the basis of need.

(b) During the surviving spouse's incapacity, neither the surviving spouse nor anyone acting on behalf of the surviving spouse has a power to terminate the trust; but if the surviving spouse regains capacity, the surviving spouse then acquires the power to terminate the trust and acquire full ownership of the trust property free of trust, by delivering to the trustee a writing signed by the surviving spouse declaring the termination.

(c) Upon the surviving spouse's death, the trustee shall transfer the unexpended trust property in the following order: (i) under the residuary clause, if any, of the will of the predeceased spouse against whom the elective-share was taken, as if that predeceased spouse died immediately after the surviving spouse; or (ii) to that predeceased spouse's heirs under section 15-11-711.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provision similar to this section.

This section is constitutional. Sweeney v. Summers, 194 Colo. 149, 571 P.2d 1067 (1977).

This section does not set up an unconstitutional classification in distinguishing between a competent surviving spouse and an incompetent surviving spouse. Sweeney v. Summers, 194 Colo. 149, 571 P.2d 1067 (1977).

Court not bound by mathematical formula. The court, in determining whether to authorize the right of election by the conservator, has the power to grant or refuse such right without being bound by a mathematical formula. Sweeney v. Summers, 194 Colo. 149, 571 P.2d 1067 (1977).

Creditor has no right to compel husband to renounce will. Neither spouse has any right, vested or inchoate, in the estate of the other. The husband's consent to the wife's testamentary disposition of her property is effective as against his creditors, and this even though such consent was given with the active purpose to defeat the right which, the husband surviving the wife, the creditors might otherwise have to resort to the husband's moiety of the wife's estate. The creditor has no right to compel the husband to take as against the provisions of the will, and no standing to afterwards question the probate of the will or the disposition of the wife's property made thereby. Deutsch v. Rohlfing, 22 Colo. App. 543, 126 P. 1123 (1912).

A surviving husband who dies without making an election not to take under the will is conclusively presumed to have consented to its terms. Gallup v. Rule, 81 Colo. 335, 255 P. 463 (1927).

A right of election is a personal privilege which does not pass to the heirs. Gallup v. Rule, 81 Colo. 335, 255 P. 463 (1927).

The court erred in attempting to shield the assets of the trust for the purpose of determining Medicaid eligibility because § 15-1412.6 (2) prohibits any trust that has been "established by an individual that has the effect of qualifying or purports to qualify the trust beneficiary for public assistance," and that section does not except from this prohibition elective-share trusts created pursuant to this section. In re Estate of Faller, 66 P.3d 114 (Colo. App. 2002).

15-11-207. Waiver of right to elect and of other rights. (1) The rights of election of a surviving spouse and the rights of the surviving spouse to exempt property, family allowance, and the decedent's homestead exemption may be waived, wholly or partially, before or after marriage, by a writing signed by the waiving party after fair disclosure. Unless the writing provides to the contrary, a waiver of "all rights upon death" (or equivalent language) in the property or estate of a present or prospective spouse is:

(a) A waiver of all rights to elective-share, exempt property, family allowance, and the decedent's homestead exemption by the waiving party in the property of the other;

(b) A waiver of the statutory priority of the waiving party to serve as personal representative, executor, or administrator of the estate of the other; and

(c) A renunciation and disclaimer by the waiving party of all benefits that would otherwise pass to him or her from the other by intestate succession or by virtue of the provisions of any will executed before the writing. Provisions of a will executed before the writing are given effect as if the waiving party:

- (I) Disclaimed all interests passing to him or her under the will; and
- (II) Became disqualified to serve as personal representative, executor, administrator, or trustee.
- (2) A surviving spouse's waiver is not enforceable if such waiver would not be enforceable under section 14-2-307, C.R.S.
- (3) In addition to all other available procedures, a person may revoke all benefits that would otherwise pass upon death by virtue of the provisions of any will executed before the revocation to relatives of such person's spouse, wholly or partially, before or after marriage, by a writing signed by the revoking party. Unless the writing provides to the contrary, a revocation of "all benefits passing upon death to the relatives of my spouse" (or equivalent language) is a revocation of all benefits that would otherwise pass upon death to the relatives of the spouse from the revoking party by virtue of the provisions of any will executed before the writing. Provisions of a will executed before the writing are given effect as if the relatives:
  - (a) Disclaimed all interests passing to them under the will; and
  - (b) Became disqualified to serve as personal representative, executor, administrator, or trustee.
- (4) For purposes of this section, "relative" of an individual's spouse means a person who is related to the spouse by blood, adoption, or affinity and who, if the individual and the individual's spouse were divorced, would not be related to the individual by blood, adoption, or affinity.
- (5) The amendments to this section, as contained in House Bill 96-1342, shall take effect July 1, 1996, and shall apply only to waivers and revocations which are executed on or after said date.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Pre-Nuptial Agreements Revisited", see 11 Colo. Law. 1882 (1982). For article, "Prenuptial Agreements and the Dead Man's Statute", see 23 Colo. Law. 357 (1994).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provision similar to this section.

Right of election may be waived. Where a husband and wife agree with each other to waive any and all claims of every kind to any property that might be due to either from the estate of the other, it is held that a claim of the widow for an allowance from the husband's estate was properly denied. Brimble v. Sickler, 83 Colo. 494, 266 P. 497 (1928).

Waiver does not have to be express. It is sufficient if some term which clearly comprehends the scope of those words, and admits of no doubt, is used. Vincent v. Martin, 91 Colo. 106, 11 P.2d 1089 (1932).

Language constituting waiver. Where by contract between husband and wife the latter agreed to accept certain bequests under a will to be, and which was, executed by the husband "in full satisfaction of any and all rights of dower, statutory allowances and rights of inheritance as surviving widow", it is held that she thereby waived her right to a widow's allowance. Vincent v. Martin, 91 Colo. 106, 11 P.2d 1089 (1932).

Wife did not waive her statutory right to take against her husband's will when neither the will, nor a signed statement by the wife, contained specific language of waiver of her statutory entitlement to one-half her husband's estate. Snyder v. Macy, 674 P.2d 972 (Colo. App. 1983).

Waiver cannot arise from presumption, assumption, or construction. It must be in terms clearly and definitely indicating a purpose to waive the specific statutory right. In re Williams' Estate, 101 Colo. 262, 72 P.2d 476 (1937); In re Bradley's Estate, 106 Colo. 500, 106 P.2d 1063 (1940); In re Griffie's Estate, 108 Colo. 366, 117 P.2d 823 (1941).

State's interest in certainty of waiver. One reason why a waiver of the right should appear beyond any doubt is that the state also is vitally interested. If the husband fails to provide support for his widow, the state may have to do so. In re Bradley's Estate, 106 Colo. 500, 106 P.2d 1063 (1940).

Intention to waive allowance must be established beyond doubt. The right to a widow's allowance is strongly favored by our representative legislative bodies as is indicated by long-standing laws upon the subject, and the right will not be held to have been waived or relinquished except in cases where the intention to waive or relinquish is established beyond doubt. In re McLaughlin's Estate, 117 Colo. 67, 184 P.2d 130 (1947).

A stipulation as to division of property entered into in a suit for divorce and incorporated in the interlocutory decree was not intended to waive any statutory allowance which the wife might enjoy as her husband's widow, and, on the death of the husband before the divorce became final, the widow was entitled to her allowance. In re McLaughlin's Estate, 117 Colo. 67, 184 P.2d 130 (1947).

A complete property settlement entered into in anticipation of divorce is a waiver "unless it provides to the contrary." A property settlement which disposes of every item of property owned by the parties at the time of execution is complete within the meaning of this section. In re Estate of Morrell, 687 P.2d 1319 (Colo. App. 1984).

Nuptial agreements are valid and enforceable and will generally be given full force and effect. Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982).

Nuptial agreement will be upheld unless the person attacking it proves fraud, concealment, or failure to disclose material information, and the burden of proof does not shift to the estate even if the amount received by the surviving spouse under the nuptial agreement is disproportionate to the value of the decedent's estate. In re Estate of Lewin v. First Nat'l Bank, 42 Colo. App. 129, 595 P.2d 1055 (1979).

Once the proponent of an antenuptial agreement has established the existence of the agreement itself, the party contesting the validity of the antenuptial agreement has the burden of proving fraud, concealment or failure to disclose material information. Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982).

Confidential relationship requires good faith and fairness in dealings. Parties to nuptial agreements do not deal at arm's length as a confidential relationship exists between them, and each has a responsibility to act with good faith and fairness to the other. Such a responsibility contemplates that each party will make fair disclosure of his or her assets to the prospective spouse prior to the execution of the agreement. Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982).

What constitutes fair disclosure. Fair disclosure contemplates that each spouse should be given information, of a general and approximate nature, concerning the net worth of the other. Each party has a duty to consider and evaluate the information received before signing an agreement since they are not assumed to have lost their judgmental faculties because of their pending marriage. Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982).

Absence of detailed disclosure insufficient to set aside agreement. Fair disclosure is not synonymous with detailed disclosure such as a financial statement of net worth and income, and the mere fact that detailed disclosure was not made will not necessarily be sufficient to set aside an otherwise properly executed agreement and will not raise a presumption of fraudulent concealment. Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982).

Concept of "inquiry notice" is inapposite to duty of fair disclosure. While the concept of "inquiry notice" is relevant when it is alleged that a party is guilty of fraud or concealment, this concept is inapposite to the duty of fair disclosure imposed by this section. Lebsock v. Lebsock, 44 Colo. App. 220, 618 P.2d 683 (1980).

Fair disclosure is not required if the wife already has a knowledge of the husband's assets. Lebsock v. Lebsock, 44 Colo. App. 220, 618 P.2d 683 (1980).

Inquiry not required merely because information would lead reasonably prudent person to make inquiry. While a general and approximate knowledge by one party of the other's worth may, in some circumstances, abrogate the duty to make a fair disclosure, a party has no duty to make inquiry merely because she has information which would lead a reasonably prudent person to make such inquiry in conjunction with a commercial transaction. Lebsock v. Lebsock, 44 Colo. App. 220, 618 P.2d 683 (1980).

Antenuptial agreement not sufficiently specific to constitute waiver. In re Bradley's Estate, 106 Colo. 500, 106 P.2d 1063 (1940).

Where a valid antenuptial contract contained a specific provision that the wife to-be "doth acquit, release and discharge" the other contractor from all claim to a "widow's award", she thereby waived her right to any future demand for a widow's allowance against his estate, under the statute or otherwise. In re Griffie's Estate, 108 Colo. 366, 117 P.2d 823 (1941).

15-11-208. Protection of payors and other third parties. (1) Although under this part 2, a payment, item of property, or other benefit is included in the decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, a payor or other third party is not liable for having made a payment or transferred an item of property or other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, or for having taken any other action in reliance on the beneficiary's apparent entitlement under the terms of the governing instrument, upon request and satisfactory proof of the decedent's death, before the payor or other third party has received written notice as described in subsection (2) of this section. A payor or other third party is only liable for actions taken two or more business days after the payor or other third party has actual receipt of such written notice. Any form or service of notice other than that described in subsection (2) of this section shall not be sufficient to impose liability on a payor or other third party for actions taken pursuant to the governing instrument.

(2) The written notice shall indicate the name of the decedent, the name of the surviving spouse, the nature of the payment or item of property or other benefit, and a statement that the surviving spouse intends to file a petition for the elective share or that a petition for the elective share has been filed. The written notice shall be mailed to the payor's or other third party's main office or home by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, or served upon the payor or other third party in the same manner as a summons in a civil action. Notice to a sales representative of the payor or other third party shall not constitute notice to the payor or other third party.

(3) Upon receipt of the written notice described in subsection (2) of this section, a payor or other third party may pay to the court any amount owed, or transfer to or deposit with the court any item of property held by it. The availability of such actions under this section shall not prevent the payor or other third party from taking any other action authorized by law or the governing instrument. The court is the court having jurisdiction of the probate proceedings relating to the decedent's estate, or if no proceedings have been commenced, the court having jurisdiction of probate proceedings relating to decedents' estates located in the county of the decedent's residence. If no probate proceedings have been commenced, the payor or other third party shall file with the court a copy of the written notice received by the payor or other third party, with the payment of funds or transfer or deposit of property. The court shall not charge a filing fee to the payor or other third party for the payment to the court of amounts owed or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property even if no probate proceedings have been commenced before such payment, transfer, or deposit. Payment of amounts to the court or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property pursuant to this section by the payor or other third party discharges the payor or other third party from all claims under the governing instrument or applicable law for the value of amounts paid to the court or items of property transferred to or deposited with the court.

(4) The court shall hold the funds or item of property and, upon its determination under section 15-11-205 (4), shall order disbursement in accordance with the determination. If no petition is filed in the court within the specified time under section 15-11-205 (1), or, if filed, the demand for an elective share is withdrawn under section 15-11-205 (3), the court shall order disbursement to the designated beneficiary in the governing instrument. A filing fee, if any, shall be charged upon disbursement either to the recipient or against the funds or property on deposit with the court, in the discretion of the court.

(5) Upon petition to the court by the beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, the court may order that all or part of the property be paid to the beneficiary in an amount and subject to conditions consistent with this section.

PART 3

SPOUSE AND CHILDREN UNPROVIDED FOR IN WILLS

Cross references: For clarification of the term "surviving spouse", see § 15-11-802.

15-11-301. Entitlement of spouse; premarital will. (1) If a testator's surviving spouse married the testator after the testator executed his or her will, the surviving spouse is entitled to receive, as an intestate share, no less than the value of the share of the estate he or she would have received if the testator had died intestate as to that portion of the testator's estate, if any, that neither is devised outright to nor in trust for the benefit of a child of the testator who was born before the testator married the surviving spouse and who is not a child of the surviving spouse nor is so devised to a descendant of such a child, or passes under section 15-11-603 or 15-11-604 to such a child or to a descendant of such a child, unless:

(a) It appears from the will or other evidence that the will was made in contemplation of the testator's marriage to the surviving spouse;

(b) The will expresses the intention that it is to be effective notwithstanding any subsequent marriage; or

(c) The testator provided for the spouse by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by the testator's statements or is reasonably inferred from the amount of the transfer or other evidence.

(2) In satisfying the share provided by this section, devises made by the will to the testator's surviving spouse, if any, are applied first, and other devises, other than a devise outright to or in trust for the benefit of a child of the testator who was born before the testator married the surviving spouse and who is not a child of the surviving spouse or a devise or substitute gift under section 15-11-603 or 15-11-604 to a descendant of such a child, abate as provided in section 15-12-902.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Divorce Considerations Relevant to an Estate Planning Practice", see 29 Colo. Law. 53 (February 2000).

15-11-302. Omitted children. (1) Except as provided in subsection (2) of this section, if a testator fails to provide in his or her will for any of his or her children born or adopted after the execution of the will, the omitted after-born or after-adopted child receives a share in the estate as follows:

(a) If the testator had no child living when he or she executed the will, an omitted after-born or after-adopted child receives a share in the estate equal in value to that which the child would have received had the testator died intestate, unless the will devised all or substantially all the estate to the other parent of the omitted child and that other parent survives the testator and is entitled to take under the will.

(b) If the testator has one or more children living when he or she executed the will, and the will devised property or an interest in property to one or more of the then living children, an omitted after-born or after-adopted child is entitled to share in the testator's estate as follows:

(I) The portion of the testator's estate in which the omitted after-born or after-adopted child is entitled to share is limited to devises made to the testator's then living children under the will.

(II) The omitted after-born or after-adopted child is entitled to receive the share of the testator's estate, as limited in subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b), that the child would have received had the testator included all omitted after-born and after-adopted children with the children to whom devises were made under the will and had given an equal share of the estate to each child.

(III) To the extent feasible, the interest granted an omitted after-born or after-adopted child under this section shall be of the same character, whether equitable or legal, present or future, as that devised to the testator's then living children under the will.

(IV) In satisfying a share provided by this paragraph (b), devises to the testator's children who were living when the will was executed abate ratably. In abating the devises of the then living children, the court shall preserve to the maximum extent possible the character of the testamentary plan adopted by the testator.

(2) Neither paragraph (a) nor (b) of subsection (1) of this section applies if:

(a) It appears from the will that the omission was intentional; or

(b) The testator provided for the omitted after-born or after-adopted child by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by the testator's statements or is reasonably inferred from the amount of the transfer or other evidence.

(3) If at the time of execution of the will the testator fails to provide in his or her will for a living child solely because he or she believes the child to be dead, the child is entitled to share in the estate as if the child were an omitted after-born or after-adopted child.

(4) In satisfying a share provided by paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section, devises made by the will abate under section 15-12-902.

ANNOTATION

Posthumous child takes as though testator had died intestate. Testator leaving a widow and one child devises all his estate to his widow, not expressing any intention to disinherit an after-born child. The posthumous child takes one-fourth of the lands whereof the testator died seized, which is the interest the minor would have inherited had her father died intestate. Lowrey v. Harlow, 22 Colo. App. 73, 123 P. 143 (1912) (decided under repealed laws antecedent to repealed CSA, C. 176, § 41).

PART 4

EXEMPT PROPERTY AND ALLOWANCES

Cross references: For clarification of the term "surviving spouse", see § 15-11-802.

15-11-401. Applicable law. This part 4 applies to the estate of a decedent who dies domiciled in this state. Rights to exempt property and a family allowance for a decedent who dies not domiciled in this state are governed by the law of the decedent's domicile at death.

15-11-402. Homestead. The provisions of sections 38-41-201 and 38-41-204, C.R.S., provide for a homestead exemption but shall not create an allowance for the surviving spouse or minor children. A personal representative's obligation to distribute property as an exempt property allowance under section 15-11-403, to pay money as a family allowance under section 15-11-404, or to distribute property to devisees, heirs, or beneficiaries shall not be considered a debt, contract, or civil obligation, as referred to under sections 38-41-201 and 38-41-202, C.R.S.

15-11-403. Exempt property. (1) (a) Prior to January 1, 2012, the decedent's surviving spouse is entitled to exempt property from the estate in the form of cash in the amount of or other property of the estate in the value of twenty-six thousand dollars in excess of any security interests therein. If there is no surviving spouse, the decedent's dependent children are entitled jointly to the same exempt property. Rights to exempt property have priority over all claims against the estate, except claims for the costs and expenses of administration, and reasonable funeral and burial, interment, or cremation expenses, which shall be paid in the priority and manner set forth in section 15-12-805. The right to exempt property shall abate as necessary to permit payment of the family allowance. These rights are in addition to any benefit or share passing to the surviving spouse or dependent children by the decedent's will, unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective-share.

(b) On and after January 1, 2012, the decedent's surviving spouse is entitled to exempt property from the estate in the form of cash in the amount of or other property of the estate in the value of thirty thousand dollars in excess of any security interests therein. If there is no surviving spouse, the decedent's dependent children are entitled jointly to the same exempt property. Rights to exempt property have priority over all claims against the estate, except claims for the costs and expenses of administration, and reasonable funeral and burial, interment, or cremation expenses, which shall be paid in the priority and manner set forth in section 15-12-805. The right to exempt property shall abate as necessary to permit payment of the family allowance. These rights are in addition to any benefit or share passing to the surviving spouse or dependent children by the decedent's will, unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective-share.

(2) The dollar amount stated in paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1) of this section shall be increased or decreased based on the cost of living adjustment as calculated and specified in section 15-10-112; except that, when the increase in the dollar amount stated in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section, as enacted in Senate Bill 11-016, enacted in 2011, takes effect, the next regularly scheduled cost of living adjustment will be suspended for one year.

Editor's note: (1) This section is similar to former § 15-11-402 as it existed prior to 1995.

(2) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending this section:

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

As originally adopted in 1969, the dollar amount exempted was set at $3,500. To adjust for inflation, the amount was increased to $10,000 in 1990 and to $15,000 in 2008. The dollar amount in this section is subject to annual cost-of-living adjustments under Section 1-109.

Unlike the exempt amount described in Sections 2-402 and 2-404, the exempt amount described in this section is available in a case in which the decedent left no spouse but left only adult children. The provision in this section that establishes priorities is required because of possible difference between beneficiaries of the exemptions described in this section and those described in Sections 2-402 and 2-404.

Section 2-204 covers waiver of exempt property rights. This section indicates that a decedent's will may put a spouse to an election with reference to exemptions, but that no election is presumed to be required.

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 2008.

Annotator's note: Since § 15-11-403 is similar to §§ 15-11-402 and 15-11-405 as they existed prior to the 1994 repeal and reenactment of this entire part, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in this section. For additional cases, see the annotations under former §§ 15-11-402 and 15-11-405 in the 1987 replacement volume.

The general assembly did not intend to limit claims for exempt property to living persons; rather, it only intended to limit the claim to spouses who survive the decedent by five or more days. The right to an exempt property allowance that automatically vested in a surviving spouse after she survived her husband by more than one hundred twenty hours therefore rightfully passed to her estate following her death ten months later. Foiles v. Whittman, 233 P.3d 697 (Colo. 2010).

This section and § 15-11-404 to be read with § 15-11-202 (1). This section and § 15-11-404, providing for family and exempt property allowances, must be read in conjunction with the definition of "augmented estate" in § 15-11-202 (1) to determine whether distributing such allowances from the "augmented estate" is consistent and harmonious with the creation of an "augmented estate" under the statute. In re Estate of Novitt, 37 Colo. App. 524, 549 P.2d 805 (1976).

Allowances to be claimed from probate estate. The language of § 15-11-202 (1) clearly reflects a legislative intent to establish the family allowance and exempt property allowance as items to be claimed from the probate estate, if any, to which are then added certain items to create the augmented estate. In re Estate of Novitt, 37 Colo. App. 524, 549 P.2d 805 (1976).

Medical services reimbursement funds not recoverable by treating physicians. Medical services reimbursement funds received by the personal representative are a part of the surviving spouse's exempt property allowance when there exists no basis to impress a constructive trust on such funds. The legislature in enacting this section clearly intended that a surviving spouse's exempt property allowance have priority over all claims against the state. Timothy C. Wirt, M.D., P.C. v. Prout, 754 P.2d 429 (Colo. App. 1988).

Exempt property claim automatically vested in decedent's wife when she survived him and it passed to the estate following her subsequent death. In re Estate of Whittman, 220 P.3d 961 (Colo. App. 2009), aff'd, 233 P.3d 697 (Colo. 2010).

Applied in Lopata v. Metzel, 641 P.2d 952 (Colo. 1982); Snyder v. Macy, 674 P.2d 972 (Colo. App. 1983).

15-11-404. Family allowance. (1) In addition to the right to exempt property, the decedent's surviving spouse and minor children who the decedent was obligated to support and children who were in fact being supported by the decedent are entitled to a reasonable allowance in money out of the estate for their maintenance during the period of administration, which allowance may not continue for longer than one year if the estate is inadequate to discharge allowed claims. The allowance may be paid as a lump sum or in periodic installments. It is payable to the surviving spouse, if living, for the use of the surviving spouse and minor and dependent children; otherwise to the children, or persons having their care and custody. If a minor child or dependent child is not living with the surviving spouse, the allowance may be made partially to the child or his or her guardian or other person having the child's care and custody, and partially to the spouse, as their needs may appear. The family allowance is exempt from and has priority over all claims except claims for the costs and expenses of administration, and reasonable funeral and burial, interment, or cremation expenses, which shall be paid in the priority and manner set forth in section 15-12-805.

(2) The family allowance is not chargeable against any benefit or share passing to the surviving spouse or children by the will of the decedent, unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective-share. The death of any person entitled to a family allowance terminates the right to receive an allowance for any period arising after his or her death, but does not affect the right of his or her estate to recover the unpaid allowance for periods prior to his or her death.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-403 as it existed prior to 1995.

Colorado need not be domiciliary state. Under this statute there is no requirement that the surviving spouse be a resident of this state or that this state be the domiciliary state. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

There is no statutory bar to filing for a widow's allowance in Colorado, where Colorado is the ancillary jurisdiction. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

Where the assets of the domiciliary estate have been insufficient to satisfy a widow's allowance awarded in the domiciliary proceeding, the spouse is entitled to satisfaction of the domiciliary allowance from the assets in the ancillary estate. In re Estate of Piazza, 34 Colo. App. 296, 526 P.2d 155 (1974).

When allowance is vested. The remarriage of a widow does not divest her or her minor children of an allowance already vested before her remarriage. A surviving spouse's allowance is vested when the court enters an order approving the estimate of the appraisers and setting aside specific articles of property to her. Hale v. Burford, 73 Colo. 197, 214 P. 543 (1923).

Widow entitled to allowance regardless of election. The fact that a widow accepted her widow's allowance held of no significance one way or the other in determining whether or not there had been an election under § 15-11-201, for she was entitled to such allowance whether she intended to claim under the statute or under the will. Hodgkins v. Ashby, 56 Colo. 553, 139 P. 538 (1914).

Allowance protected against liability of husband. The last sentence of subsection (1) is a declaration of the legislative policy that the allowance should be protected against any indebtedness or liability of the husband. In re Bradley's Estate, 106 Colo. 500, 106 P.2d 1063 (1940).

Source, determination, and documentation. (1) (a) (I) If the estate is otherwise sufficient, property specifically devised or disposed of by memorandum under section 15-11-513 to any person other than a person entitled to exempt property may not be used to satisfy rights to exempt property. Subject to this restriction, the surviving spouse, the guardians of minor children, or dependent children who are adults may select property of the estate as their exempt property. The personal representative may make these selections if the surviving spouse, the dependent children, or the guardians of the minor children are unable or fail to do so within a reasonable time or there is no guardian of a minor child. The personal representative may execute an instrument or deed of distribution to establish the ownership of property taken as exempt property allowance. Prior to January 1, 2012, the personal representative may determine the family allowance in a lump sum not exceeding twenty-four thousand dollars or periodic installments not exceeding two thousand dollars per month for one year and may disburse funds of the estate in payment of the family allowance. The personal representative or an interested person aggrieved by any selection, determination, payment, proposed payment, or failure to act under this section may petition the court for appropriate relief, which may provide a family allowance other than that which the personal representative determined or could have determined.

Where allowance satisfied. Where a widow is the sole heir of her deceased husband and receives his entire net estate, amounting to more than $2,000, it is immaterial whether she receives the amount to which she is entitled as a widow's allowance as such, or as a part of the estate, and in such circumstances where "other estate of the deceased" is discovered after final settlement and discharge of the widow as administratrix, and which was not inventoried or accounted for, as between the widow and a creditor whose claim had not been theretofore presented for allowance, the latter is entitled to the proceeds of the newly discovered estate in preference to the former's demand for a widow's allowance therefrom. allowance in a lump sum not exceeding thirty thousand dollars or periodic installments not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars per month for one year and may disburse funds of the estate in payment of the family allowance. The personal representative or an interested person aggrieved by any selection, determination, payment, proposed payment, or failure to act under this section may petition the court for appropriate relief, which may provide a family allowance other than that which the personal representative determined or could have determined.

(b) The dollar amount stated in subparagraph (I) or (II) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1) shall be increased or decreased based on the cost of living adjustment as calculated and specified in section 15-10-112; except that, when the increase in the dollar amount stated in subparagraph (II) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (1), as enacted in Senate Bill 11-016, enacted in 2011, takes effect, the next regularly scheduled cost of living adjustment will be suspended for one year.

(2) If the right to an elective-share is exercised on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an incapacitated person, the personal representative may add any unexpended portions payable under the exempt property and family allowance to the trust established under section 15-11-206 (2).

(3) No exempt property or family allowance shall be payable unless the person entitled to payment thereof requests such payment within six months after the first publication of notice to creditors for filing claims which arose before the death of the decedent, or within one year after the date of death, whichever time limitation first expires. The court may extend the time for presenting such request as it sees fit for cause shown by the person entitled to payment before the time limitation has expired; except that the time for presenting the request shall not be extended beyond two years after the date of death. The request shall be made to the personal representative, or, if none is appointed, to any other person having possession of the decedent's assets. A request on behalf of a minor or dependent child may be made by the child's guardian or other person having his or her care and custody.

(2) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsection (1):

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Scope and Purpose of 1990 Revision. As originally adopted in 1969, the maximum family allowance the personal representative was authorized to determine without court order was a lump sum of $6,000 or periodic installments of $500 per month for one year. To adjust for inflation, the amounts were increased in 1990 to $18,000 and $1,500 respectively and in 2008 to $22,500 and $2,250. The dollar amount in this section is subject to annual cost-of-living adjustments under Section 1-109.

A new subsection (b) was added to provide for the case where the right to an elective share is exercised on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an incapacitated person. In that case, the personal representative is authorized to add any unexpended portions under the homestead allowance, exempt property, and family allowance to the custodial trust established by Section 2-212(b).

If Domiciliary Assets Insufficient. Note that a domiciliary personal representative can collect against out of state assets if domiciliary assets are insufficient.

Cross References. See Sections 3-902, 3-906, and 3-907.

P.2d 977 (1953), or the insane delusion test. In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

The test of testamentary capacity is a positive showing that at the time of executing the will, the testator understood the nature and extent of his property, understood the effect of the proposed testamentary disposition, knew the natural objects of his bounty, and that the proposed will represented his wishes. Lehman v. Lindenmeyer, 48 Colo. 305, 109 P. 956 (1910); Cunningham v. Stender, 127 Colo. 293, 255 P.2d 977 (1953); In re Estate of Scott, 119 P.3d 511 (Colo. App. 2004), aff'd, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

Testamentary capacity consists of mentality and memory sufficient to understand intelligently the nature and purpose of the transaction, to comprehend generally the nature and extent of property to be disposed of, to remember who are the natural objects of the testator's bounty, and to understand the nature and effect of the desired disposition. *Columbia Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. An insane delusion is a persistent belief in something that has no existence in fact, which belief is adhered to in spite of all evidence to the contrary. Breeden v. Stone, 992 P.2d 1167 (Colo. 2000); In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

Symptoms of senile dementia prior to making a will are not conclusive of incapacity. Hanks v. McNeil Coal Corp., 114 Colo. 578, 168 P.2d 256 (1946).

Likewise, an adjudication of unsoundness of mind and the appointment of a guardian is not conclusive evidence of testamentary incapacity, although the guardianship existed at the time the will was executed. In re McGrove's Estate, 106 Colo. 69, 101 P.2d 25 (1940).

Findings that warrant appointment of a guardian or conservator do not equate to a determination of testamentary incapacity. In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

Effect of § 15-14-409, appointment of a conservator or guardianship, on testamentary capacity. Section 15-14-409 specifically provides that the appointment of a conservator or the entry of another protective order is not a determination of decedent's testamentary capacity. In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

In addition, § 28-5-219 provides that neither the fact that a person has been rated incompetent by the veterans administration nor the fact that a guardian has been appointed for the person shall be construed as a legal adjudication of insanity or mental incompetency. In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

Testator held not to be mentally incapacitated at time will executed by reason of drugs administered. In re Rentfro's Estate, 102 Colo. 400, 79 P.2d 1042 (1938).

Disinheritance of son by virtue of will does not indicate lack of testamentary capacity. Since one making a will is not bound to dispose of his property according to the rules of intestate succession, the fact that a testatrix practically disinherited her son in her will is no reason for regarding her as lacking testamentary capacity. In re Cole's Estate, 75 Colo. 264, 226 P. 143 (1924).

Burden of proving want of testamentary capacity is on proponent of will. In re Roeber's Estate, 70 Colo. 196, 199 P. 481 (1921).

Burden of proof of lack of testamentary capacity. Once the proponent of a holographic will has offered prima facie proof that it was duly executed, the contestant must bear the burden of introducing prima facie evidence that the person who executed the will lacked testamentary capacity. Nunez v. Jersin, 635 P.2d 231 (Colo. App. 1981).

Effect of § 15-12-407 on burden of proof. Enactment of § 15-12-407 changes the long-established Colorado rule that the proponent of a will has the burden of proof and persuasion with regard to testamentary capacity. Nunez v. Jersin, 635 P.2d 231 (Colo. App. 1981).

For testatrix's mental capacity to direct making and execution of will, see In re Stitzer's Estate, 100 Colo. 521, 68 P.2d 561 (1937).

The fact that the testator believed the will contestant was not his son does not justify a conclusion of mental incompetency, even though for years the testator treated and recognized him as a son. Miller v. Weston, 67 Colo. 534, 189 P. 610 (1920).

A testator's preference to a niece or nephew, or even to a stranger, creates no suspicion as to his mental capacity despite the fact that he thereby disinherits brothers and sisters or even children. Nelson v. Nelson, 27 Colo. App. 104, 146 P. 1079 (1915).

Decedent's lack of knowledge of the actual value of estate is not, by itself, proof of lack of testamentary capacity. In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

Decedent's failure to accurately estimate the value of estate does not, in itself, amount to an insane delusion. The court found that decedent would not have left a larger bequest to the contestants even if decedent had been aware of the actual value of his or her estate. In re Estate of Romero, 126 P.3d 228 (Colo. App. 2005).

Evidence of testamentary capacity. If the testamentary disposition is consistent with the testator's situation and in congruity with his affections and previous declarations and if the disposition might have been expected from one so situated, this is rational and legal evidence of testamentary capacity. In re Shapter's Estate, 35 Colo. 578, 85 P. 688 (1905).

In order to prove that a testator is not possessed of sufficient mental capacity to execute a valid will, evidence offered has to be calculated to establish his mental incapacity at the time of the will's execution. In re Estate of Southwick v. First Nat'l Bank, 33 Colo. App. 86, 515 P.2d 484 (1973).

Testamentary incapacity to execute a valid will on a given day may be proven by evidence of incompetency at times prior to the date of execution. In re Estate of Southwick v. First Nat'l Bank, 33 Colo. App. 86, 515 P.2d 484 (1973).

Expert opinion evidence describing mental incapacity at a time prior to the execution of a will, if not too remote in time, provides an inference, the weight of which is left to the trier of fact, that the testator continued to be incompetent at the date of the will's execution, and the admissibility of such evidence is largely within the discretion of the trial court.   - (II) Acknowledged by the testator before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments.

- (3) Intent that the document constitute the testator's will can be established by extrinsic evidence, including, for holographic wills, portions of the document that are not in the testator's handwriting.
- (4) For purposes of this section, "conscious presence" requires physical proximity to the testator but not necessarily within testator's line of sight.
- (5) For purposes of this part 5, "will" does not include a designated beneficiary agreement that is executed pursuant to article 22 of this title.

COMMENT

Subsection (a): Witnessed or Notarized Wills. Three formalities for execution of a witnessed or notarized will are imposed. Subsection (a)(1) requires the will to be in writing. Any reasonably permanent record is sufficient. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 3.1 cmt. i (1999).

Under subsection (a)(2), the testator must sign the will or some other individual must sign the testator's name in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction. If the latter procedure is followed, and someone else signs the testator's name, the so-called "conscious presence" test is codified, under which a signing is sufficient if it was done in the testator's conscious presence, i.e., within the range of the testator's senses such as hearing; the signing need not have occurred within the testator's line of sight. For application of the "conscious-presence" test, see Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 3.1 cmt. n (1999); Cunningham v. Cunningham, 83 N.W. 58 (Minn. 1900) (conscious-presence requirement held satisfied where "the signing was within the sound of the testator's voice; he knew what was being done ..."); Healy v. Bartless, 59 A. 617 (N.H. 1904) (individuals are in the decedent's conscious presence "whenever they are so near at hand that he is conscious of where they are and of what they are doing, through any of his senses, and where he can readily see them if he is so disposed."); Demaris' Estate, 110 P.2d 571 (Or. 1941) ("[W]e do not believe that sight is the only test of presence. We are convinced that any of the senses that a testator possesses, which enable him to know whether another is near at hand and what he is doing, may be employed by him in determining whether [an individual is] in his [conscious] presence ...").

Signing may be by mark, nickname, or initials, subject to the general rules relating to that which constitutes a "signature." See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 3.1 cmt. j (1999). There is no requirement that the testator "publish" the document as his or her will, or that he or she request the witnesses to sign, or that the witnesses sign in the presence of the testator or of each other. The testator may sign the will outside the presence of the witnesses, if he or she later acknowledges to the witnesses that the signature is his or hers (or that his or her name was signed by another) or that the document is his or her will. An acknowledgment need not be expressly stated, but can be inferred from the testator's conduct. Norton v. Georgia Railroad Bank & Tr. Co., 285 S.E.2d 910 (Ga. 1982).

There is no requirement that the testator's signature be at the end of the will; thus, if the testator writes his or her name in the body of the will and intends it to be his or her signature, the statute is satisfied. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 3.1 cmts. j & k (1999).

Subsection (a)(3) requires that the will either be (A) signed by at least two individuals, each of whom witnessed at least one of the following:

(i) the signing of the will; (ii) the testator's acknowledgment of the signature; or (iii) the testator's acknowledgment of the will; or (B) acknowledged by the testator before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Subparagraph (B) was added in 2008 in order to recognize the validity of notarized wills.

Under subsection (a)(3)(A), the witnesses must sign as witnesses (see, e.g., Mossler v. Johnson, 565 S.W.2d 952 (Tex. Civ.App. 1978)), and must sign within a reasonable time after having witnessed the testator's act of signing or acknowledgment. There is, however, no requirement that the witnesses sign before the testator's death. In a particular case, the reasonable-time requirement could be satisfied even if the witnesses sign after the testator's death.

Under subsection (a)(3)(B), a will, whether or not it is properly witnessed under subsection (a)(3)(A), can be acknowledged by the testator before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Note that a signature guarantee is not an acknowledgment before a notary public or other person authorized by law to take acknowledgments. The signature guarantee program, which is regulated by federal law, is designed to facilitate transactions relating to securities. See 17 C.F.R. § 240.17Ad-15.

Allowing notarized wills as an optional method of execution addresses cases that have begun to emerge in which the supervising attorney, with the client and all witnesses present, circulates one or more estate-planning documents for signature, and fails to notice that the client or one of the witnesses has unintentionally neglected to sign one of the documents. See, e.g., Dalk v. Allen, 774 So.2d 787 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000); Sisson v. Park Street Baptist Church, 24 E.T.R.2d 18 (Ont. Gen. Div. 1998). This often, but not always, arises when the attorney prepares multiple estate-planning documents — a will, a durable power of attorney, a health-care power of attorney, and perhaps a revocable trust. It is common practice, and sometimes required by state law, that the documents other than the will be notarized. It would reduce confusion and chance for error if all of these documents could be executed with the same formality.

In addition, lay people (and, sad to say, some lawyers) think that a will is valid if notarized, which is not true under non-UPC law. See, e.g., Estate of Saueressig, 136 P.3d 201 (Cal. 2006). In Estate of Hall, 51 P.3d 1134 (Mont. 2002), a notarized but otherwise unwitnessed will was upheld, but not under the pre-2008 version of Section 2-502, which did not authorize notarized wills. The will was upheld under the harmless-error rule of Section 2-503. There are also cases in which a testator went to his or her bank to get the will executed, and the bank's notary notarized the document, mistakenly thinking that notarization made the will valid. Cf., e.g., Orrell v. Cochran, 695 S.W.2d 552 (Tex. 1985). Under non-UPC law, the will is usually held invalid in such cases, despite the lack of evidence raising any doubt that the will truly represented the decedent's wishes.

Other uniform acts affecting property or person do not require either attesting witnesses or notarization. See, e.g., Uniform Trust Code § 402(a)(2); Power of Attorney Act § 105; Uniform Health-Care Decisions Act § 2(f).

A will that does not meet the requirements of subsection (a) may be valid under subsection (b) as a holograph or under the harmless-error rule of Section 2-503.

Subsection (b): Holographic Wills. This subsection authorizes holographic wills. On holographic wills, see Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 3.2 (1999). Subsection (b) enables a testator to write his or her own will in handwriting. There need be no witnesses. The only requirement is that the signature and the material portions of the document be in the testator's handwriting.

By requiring only the "material portions of the document" to be in the testator's handwriting (rather than requiring, as some existing statutes do, that the will be "entirely" in the decedent's handwriting), a holograph may be valid even though immaterial parts such as date or introductory wording are printed, typed, or stamped.

A valid holograph can also be executed on a printed will form if the material portions of the document are handwritten. The fact, for example, that the will form contains printed language such as "I give, devise, and bequeath to _____" does not disqualify the document as a holographic will, as long as the testator fills out the remaining portion of the dispositive provision in his or her own hand.

Subsection (c): Extrinsic Evidence. Under subsection (c), testamentary intent can be shown by extrinsic evidence, including for holographic wills the printed, typed, or stamped portions of the form or document. Handwritten alterations, if signed, of a validly executed nonhandwritten will can operate as a holographic codicil to the will. If necessary, the handwritten codicil can derive meaning, and hence validity as a holographic codicil, from nonhandwritten portions of the document. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 3.2 cmt. g (1999). This position intentionally contradicts Estate of Foxley, 575 N.W.2d 150 (Neb. 1998), a decision condemned in Reporter's Note No. 4 to the Restatement as a decision that "reached a manifestly unjust result".

2008 Revisions. In 2008, this section was amended by adding subsection (a)(3)(B). Subsection (a)(3)(B) and its rationale are discussed in Waggoner, The UPC Authorizes Notarized Wills, 34 ACTEC J. 58 (2008).

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 2008.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

The requirements of this section are plain. They are, to reiterate: The will must be written; it must be signed by the testator, or someone for him in his presence and by his direction; it must be signed or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses; and the testator must request two persons to sign the instrument as witnesses. McGary v. Blakely, 127 Colo. 495, 258 P.2d 770 (1953).

A will not meeting the requirements of this section is void for all purposes. McGary v. Blakely, 127 Colo. 495, 258 P.2d 770 (1953).

The formalities required for valid will execution require strict adherence in order to prevent fraud because statutes governing execution are designed to safeguard and protect the decedent's estate. In re Estate of Royal, 826 P.2d 1236 (Colo. 1992).

For a will, so far as execution goes, is an entirety, and if defective because not executed in accordance with the requirements of law, it is void for all purposes. Twilley v. Durkee, 72 Colo. 444, 211 P. 668 (1922).

With reference to wills made by residents of the state, the provisions of this section are mandatory. Reed v. McLaughlin, 128 Colo. 581, 265 P.2d 691 (1954).

Where testamentary capacity, sufficient witnessing, and a valid bequest are shown, a refusal to probate a will held error, regardless of whether a testamentary trust therein was valid or not. Frazier v. Frazier, 83 Colo. 188, 263 P. 413 (1927).

Court has duty as matter of law to hold will properly executed. Where proof of due execution has been made and no evidence presented to the contrary, it is the duty of the court to hold as a matter of law that the will was properly executed, and to remove that question from the jury's consideration. O'Brien v. Wallace, 145 Colo. 291, 359 P.2d 1029 (1961).

A will must be reduced to writing but its continued existence as a will should not be held to depend at all events upon the production and exhibition of the writing. Estate of Eder, 94 Colo. 173, 29 P.2d 631 (1934).

Attempted creation of a trust by will held invalid as depending on oral instructions for its execution, since such instructions given before or after the execution of a will are in violation of this section requiring wills to be in writing. Frazier v. Frazier, 83 Colo. 188, 263 P. 413 (1927).

What constitutes "presence". If in the act of attesting the will the witnesses are where the testator can see them if he desires, they are in his presence within the meaning of this section. Burnham v. Grant, 24 Colo. App. 131, 134 P. 254 (1913).

This section requires that the witnesses shall sign the will. This means that something more is required of witnesses than the mere placing of their names on the document. It requires an observation by the witnesses to see that the will was executed by the testator and that the testator had capacity to make the will. McGary v. Blakeley, 127 Colo. 495, 258 P.2d 770 (1953).

Witnesses must actually sign the will and may not substitute oral testimony to affirm testator's signature. In re Estate of Royal, 813 P.2d 790 (Colo. App. 1991), aff'd, 826 P.2d 1236 (Colo. 1992).

Will is valid despite failure of witnesses to sign on same page as testator. Although the witnesses' signatures do not appear on the same page as the signature of the testator, the witnesses did "subscribe" their names to the will and the will is valid. Additionally, all three witnesses testified as to the proper execution of the will in every essential element, therefore the will was properly admitted to probate. Brock v. Erickson, 28 Colo. App. 555, 475 P.2d 346 (1970).

Witnesses may attest to a will after the testator's death but only upon a showing of exceptional circumstances which made it impossible or extremely impractical for the witnesses to have signed the will before the testator's death. In re Estate of Royal, 813 P.2d 790 (Colo. App. 1991), aff'd, 826 P.2d 1236 (Colo. 1992).

Witnesses' signatures should be affixed to the document at least by the time the will becomes operative, namely the death of the testator. If the will speaks as of the date of the testator's death, it follows that the document should be complete at that time. In re Estate of Royal, 826 P.2d 1236 (Colo. 1992).

An attestation clause is prima facie evidence of the facts stated in such clause. Butcher v. Butcher, 21 Colo. App. 416, 122 P. 397 (1921); Lenahan v. White, 79 Colo. 347, 245 P. 711 (1926); Wehrkamp v. Burnett, 82 Colo. 5, 256 P. 630 (1927); Aquilini v. Chamblin, 94 Colo. 367, 30 P.2d 325 (1934); McGary v. Blakeley, 127 Colo. 495, 258 P.2d 770 (1953); Brock v. Erickson, 28 Colo. App. 555, 475 P.2d 346 (1970).

In the absence of an attestation clause, no presumption may be indulged as to due execution simply by the proof of signatures. If there is no attestation clause the facts of the execution may be shown by other evidence. McGary v. Blakeley, 127 Colo. 495, 258 P.2d 770 (1953).

Sufficient publication. The testator said that he understood and asked them to sign as witnesses to his will. That constituted a publication of the will in compliance with this section. Wehrkamp v. Burnett, 82 Colo. 5, 256 P. 630 (1927); Aquilini v. Chamblin, 94 Colo. 367, 30 P.2d 325 (1934).

Acknowledgment sufficient if testator clearly indicates that the instrument is his last will and testament. There was no evidence that the testator acknowledged that the writing was his last will and testament, as required by this section. But it is not necessary for testators to use the very words of this section, and they seldom do. If the testator, by word or deed, clearly indicates that the instrument is his last will and testament, it is sufficient. Aquilini v. Chamblin, 94 Colo. 367, 30 P.2d 325 (1934).

A will is void and not entitled to probate where it appears that the testator did not declare the writing to be his last will and testament, did not know its contents, and did not request the subscribing witnesses to attest the same. Wagner v. Heldt, 93 Colo. 442, 26 P.2d 813 (1933).

The provisions of this section, by force of the following section, are extended to codicils of wills. Int'l Trust Co. v. Anthony, 45 Colo. 474, 101 P. 781 (1909).

Thus a codicil attested by only one witness is without effect. Freeman v. Hart, 61 Colo. 455, 158 P. 305 (1916).

And the same is true where one witness did not sign in the presence of the testator. A codicil, the execution of which was witnessed by two witnesses, one of whom signed it in the testator's presence and the other at a later day, and not in his presence, will be rejected. Int'l Trust Co. v. Anthony, 45 Colo. 474, 101 P. 781 (1909).

No requirement that deed comply with statutory requirements of a will. First Nat'l Bank v. Groussman, 29 Colo. App. 215, 483 P.2d 398 (1971).

Testamentary intent required. To be a holographic will, the evidence must establish that the decedent intended the writing itself to make a testamentary disposition of decedent's property. In re Estate of Fegley, 42 Colo. App. 47, 589 P.2d 80 (1978); Matter of Estate of Olschansky, 735 P.2d 927 (Colo. App. 1987).

The informal character of the decedent's letter as well as the statement she would leave something for her granddaughter reflected that the decedent did not intend the letter to make a testamentary disposition. Matter of Estate of Olschansky, 735 P.2d 927 (Colo. App. 1987).

Circumstantial evidence used in proving testator's signature. Where owing to the failure of the memory of the subscribing witnesses it is impossible to obtain direct testimony that the testator's signature was upon the paper when the witnesses subscribed it, circumstances may be resorted to. In re Carey's Estate, 56 Colo. 77, 136 P. 1175 (1913).

Burden is on contestants to overthrow will duly admitted to probate. The weight of authority is to the effect that, in a contest of a will which has theretofore been duly admitted to probate, the burden of proof is on the contestant to establish his grounds of contest. The probate is held to be prima facie evidence of the due attestation, execution, and validity of the will, and the burden is upon the contestants to overthrow the will. Aquilini v. Chamblin, 94 Colo. 367, 30 P.2d 325 (1934).

Burden is on proponent who presents will for probate to show due execution. Upon the proponent who presents a will for probate rests the burden of proof to show its execution in accordance with the requirements of the law. Snodgrass v. Smith, 42 Colo. 60, 94 P. 312 (1908); Twilley v. Durkee, 72 Colo. 444, 211 P. 668 (1922); O'Brien v. Wallace, 145 Colo. 291, 359 P.2d 1029 (1961).

Onus of proof. Where a will has been executed and witnessed under such circumstances that it is presumed the testator knew its contents, the onus of proving the contrary is upon him who alleges it. In re Shapter's Estate, 35 Colo. 578, 85 P. 688 (1906); Kavanagh v. Jamison, 79 Colo. 115, 244 P. 476 (1926).

Testator's signature creates presumption of his awareness of its contents. Ordinarily, where the will has been executed under the formalities prescribed by law, and proof thereof has been made by the witnesses, the testator's bare signature to the will is taken as proof thereof, and it will be presumed that the will had been read by or to him, and that he was aware of its contents. Snodgrass v. Smith, 42 Colo. 60, 94 P. 312 (1908); Kavanagh v. Jamison, 79 Colo. 115, 244 P. 476 (1926).

Signature not required by a cross-out to effectuate a partial revocation. When a holographic will was properly executed, no additional signature or acknowledgment is necessary to allow compliance with a cross-out if the testator's intent has been proved by clear and convincing evidence. In re Estate of Schumacher, 253 P.3d 1280 (Colo. App. 2011).

Agreement as to disposition of joint bank account. Where testator placed money in joint bank account with another with agreement that at testator's death the other would withdraw money and give it to testator's beneficiaries, this agreement failed to comply with provisions of this section and testator's executor could recover money in action for conversion. Urbancich v. Jersin, 123 Colo. 88, 226 P.2d 316 (1950).

Probate not denied where portions are illegible or missing. A holographic will may not be denied probate merely because portions of the date not at issue are abbreviated, missing, or illegible, where the critical elements of the date are certain and unambiguous. Nunez v. Jersin, 635 P.2d 231 (Colo. App. 1981).

Handwritten list found in safe deposit box of deceased may be found to be a valid holographic codicil to will if signature and material provisions are in handwriting of deceased, but evidence must show the writing was executed with testamentary intent and evidence failed to make such showing. Matter of Estate of Harrington, 850 P.2d 158 (Colo. App. 1993).

Applied in Friedholm v. Fegley, 42 Colo. App. 47, 589 P.2d 80 (1978); Nunez v. Jersin, 635 P.2d 231 (Colo. App. 1981).

15-11-503. Writings intended as wills. (1) Although a document, or writing added upon a document, was not executed in compliance with section 15-11-502, the document or writing is treated as if it had been executed in compliance with that section if the proponent of the document or writing establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended the document or writing to constitute:

- (a) The decedent's will;
- (b) A partial or complete revocation of the will;
- (c) An addition to or an alteration of the will; or
- (d) A partial or complete revival of the decedent's formerly revoked will or a formerly revoked portion of the will.

(2) Subsection (1) of this section shall apply only if the document is signed or acknowledged by the decedent as his or her will or if it is established by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent erroneously signed a document intended to be the will of the decedent's spouse.

(3) Whether a document or writing is treated under this section as if it had been executed in compliance with section 15-11-502 is a question of law to be decided by the court, in formal proceedings, and is not a question of fact for a jury to decide.

(4) Subsection (1) of this section shall not apply to a designated beneficiary agreement under article 22 of this title.

Editor's note: (1) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act adding subsection (4):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Purpose of New Section. By way of dispensing power, this new section allows the probate Court to excuse a harmless error in complying with the formal requirements for executing or revoking a will. The measure accords with legislation in force in the Canadian province of Manitoba and in several Australian jurisdictions. The Uniform Laws Conference of Canada approved a comparable measure for the Canadian Uniform Wills Act in 1987.

Legislation of this sort was enacted in the state of South Australia in 1975. The experience there has been closely studied by a variety of law reform commissions and in the scholarly literature. See, e.g., Law Reform Commission of British Columbia, Report on the Making and Revocation of Wills (1981); New South Wales Law Reform Commission, Wills: Execution and Revocation (1986); Langbein, Excusing Harmless Errors in the Execution of Wills: A Report on Australia's Tranquil Revolution in Probate Law, 87 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1987). A similar measure has been in effect in Israel since 1965 (see British Columbia Report, supra, at 44-46; Langbein, supra, at 48-51).

Consistent with the general trend of the revisions of the UPC, Section 2-503 unifies the law of probate and nonprobate transfers, extending to will formalities the harmless error principle that has long been applied to defective compliance with the formal requirements for nonprobate transfers. See, e.g., Annot., 19 A.L.R.2d 5 (1951) (life insurance beneficiary designations).

Evidence from South Australia suggests that the dispensing power will be applied mainly in two sorts of cases. See Langbein, supra, at 15-33. When the testator misunderstands the attestation requirements of Section 2-502(a) and neglects to obtain one or both witnesses, new Section 2-503 permits the proponents of the will to prove that the defective execution did not result from irresolution or from circumstances suggesting duress or trickery - in other words, that the defect was harmless to the purpose of the formality. The measure reduces the tension between holographic wills and the two-witness requirement for attested wills under Section 2-502(a). Ordinarily, the testator who attempts to make an attested will but blunders will still have achieved a level of formality that compares favorably with that permitted for holographic wills under the Code.

The other recurrent class of case in which the dispensing power has been invoked in South Australia entails alterations to a previously executed will. Sometimes the testator adds a clause, that is, the testator attempts to interpolate a defectively executed codicil. More frequently, the amendment has the character of a revision - the testator crosses out former text and inserts replacement terms. Lay persons do not always understand that the execution and revocation requirements of Section 2-502 call for fresh execution in order to modify a will; rather, lay persons often think that the original execution has continuing effect.

By placing the burden of proof upon the proponent of a defective instrument, and by requiring the proponent to discharge that burden by clear and convincing evidence (which Courts at the trial and appellate levels are urged to police with rigor), Section 2-503 imposes procedural standards appropriate to the seriousness of the issue. Experience in Israel and South Australia strongly supports the view that a dispensing power like Section 2-503 will not breed litigation. Indeed, as an Israeli judge reported to the British Columbia Law Reform Commission, the dispensing power "actually prevents a great deal of unnecessary litigation," because it eliminates disputes about technical lapses and limits the zone of dispute to the functional question of whether the instrument correctly expresses the testator's intent. British Columbia Report, supra, at 46.

The larger the departure from Section 2-502 formality, the harder it will be to satisfy the Court that the instrument reflects the testator's intent. Whereas the South Australian and Israeli Courts lightly excuse breaches of the attestation requirements, they have never excused noncompliance with the requirement that a will be in writing, and they have been extremely reluctant to excuse noncompliance with the signature requirement. See Langbein, supra, at 23-29, 49-50. The main circumstance in which the South Australian Courts have excused signature errors has been in the recurrent class of cases in which two wills are prepared for simultaneous execution by two testators, typically husband and wife, and each mistakenly signs the will prepared for the other. E.g., Estate of Blakely, 32 S.A.S.R. 473 (1983). Recently, the New York Court of Appeals remedied such a case without aid of statute, simply on the ground "what has occurred is so obvious, and what was intended so clear." In re Snide, 52 N.Y.2d 193, 196, 418 N.E.2d 656, 657, 437 N.Y.S.2d 63, 64 (1981).

Section 2-503 means to retain the intent-serving benefits of Section 2-502 formality without inflicting intent-defeating outcomes in cases of harmless error.

Editor's note: (1) This section is similar to former § 15-11-504 as it existed prior to 1995.

(2) Section 17 of chapter 310, Session Laws of Colorado 2009, as amended by section 24 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsections (1) and (2):

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

A self-proved will may be admitted to probate as provided in Sections 3-303, 3-405, and 3-406 without the testimony of any attesting witness, but otherwise it is treated no differently from a will not self proved. Thus, a self-proved will may be contested (except in regard to questions of proper execution), revoked, or amended by a codicil in exactly the same fashion as a will not self proved. The procedural advantage of a self-proved will is limited to formal testacy proceedings because Section 3-303, which deals with informal probate, dispenses with the necessity of testimony of witnesses even though the instrument is not self proved under this section.

Subsection (c) was added in 1990 to counteract an unfortunate judicial interpretation of similar self-proving will provisions in a few states, under which a signature on the self-proving affidavit was held not to constitute a signature on the will, resulting in invalidity of the will in cases in which the testator or witnesses got confused and only signed on the self-proving affidavit. See Mann, Self-proving Affidavits and Formalism in Wills Adjudication, 63 Wash. U.

L.Q. 39 (1985); Estate of Ricketts, 773 P.2d 93 (Wash.Ct.App. 1989).

2008 Revision. Section 2-502(a) was amended in 2008 to add an optional method of execution by having a will notarized rather than witnessed by two attesting witnesses. The amendment to Section 2-502 necessitated amending this section so that it only applies to a will that is executed with attesting witnesses.

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 2008.

15-11-505. Who may witness. (1) An individual generally competent to be a witness may act as a witness to a will.

(2) The signing of a will by an interested witness does not invalidate the will or any provision of it.

Annotator's note. Since § 15-11-505 is similar to repealed laws antecedent to CSA, C. 176, § 42, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

Under this section a legatee is competent as an attesting witness; but unless sufficiently attested by other competent witnesses, the will is void as to his legacy. White v. Bower, 56 Colo. 575, 136 P. 1053 (1913).

Competency of attesting witnesses to wills must be tested by the general law relating to competency of witnesses as provided by statute, and not by the common law. The test is whether she would have been a competent witness in court, at the time of attesting the will, to testify to the facts of its execution. White v. Bower, 56 Colo. 575, 136 P. 1053 (1913).

15-11-506. Choice of law as to execution. A written will is valid if executed in compliance with section 15-11-502 or 15-11-503 or if its execution complies with the law at the time of execution of the place where the will is executed, or of the law of the place where, at the time of execution or at the time of death, the testator is domiciled, has a place of abode, or is a national.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-506 as it existed prior to 1995.

15-11-507. Revocation by writing or by act. (1) A will or any part thereof is revoked:

(a) By executing a subsequent will that revokes the previous will or part expressly or by inconsistency; or

(b) By performing a revocatory act on the will, if the testator performed the act with the intent and for the purpose of revoking the will or part of it or if another individual performed the act in the testator's conscious presence and by the testator's direction. For purposes of this paragraph (b), "revocatory act on the will" includes burning, tearing, canceling, obliterating, or destroying the will or any part of it. A burning, tearing, or canceled is a “revocatory act on the will”, whether or not the burn, tear, or cancellation touched any of the words on the will.

(2) If a subsequent will does not expressly revoke a previous will, the execution of the subsequent will wholly revokes the previous will by inconsistency if the testator intended the subsequent will to replace rather than supplement the previous will.

(3) The testator is presumed to have intended a subsequent will to replace rather than supplement a previous will if the subsequent will makes a complete disposition of the testator’s estate. If this presumption arises and is not rebutted by clear and convincing evidence, the previous will is revoked; only the subsequent will is operative on the testator’s death.

(4) The testator is presumed to have intended a subsequent will to supplement rather than replace a previous will if the subsequent will does not make a complete disposition of the testator’s estate. If this presumption arises and is not rebutted by clear and convincing evidence, the subsequent will revokes the previous will only to the extent the subsequent will is inconsistent with the previous will; each will is fully operative on the testator’s death to the extent they are not inconsistent.

Annotator’s note. Since § 15-11-507 is similar to repealed § 153-5-3, C.R.S. 1963, § 152-5-4, CRS 53, CSA, C. 176, § 40, and laws antecedent thereto, relevant cases construing those provisions have been included in the annotations to this section.

Will can be revoked only in manner provided by statute, and the statutory provisions for revocation of wills must be strictly construed. Scheer v. First Nat’l Bank, 43 Colo. App. 296, 605 P.2d 65 (1979).

Will is revoked if, with intent to revoke, testator performs any one of the acts deemed sufficient by statute to effectuate a revocation. Tong v. Tong, 619 P.2d 91 (Colo. App. 1980).

Acts of revocation are presumed to be intentional absent contrary evidence. Tong v. Tong, 619 P.2d 91 (Colo. App. 1980).

Where there is no provision for partial revocation of will by cancellation, tearing, etc., the courts are not at liberty to introduce such a provision into the statute by construction. Scheer v. First Nat’l Bank, 43 Colo. App. 296, 605 P.2d 65 (1979).

Ineffective attempt to revoke portion of will. A portion of a will cannot be revoked subsequent to its execution by the testator’s cancelling or obliterating that portion. Scheer v. First Nat’l Bank, 43 Colo. App. 296, 605 P.2d 65 (1979).

Revocation becomes complete and effective by a subsequent will at the time the revoking instrument is executed as provided in § 15-11-502. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

Will not revoked in accordance with this section must be held to be in existence. The original of a will must, of course, be produced if it is available, but if it is not, secondary evidence thereof may be adduced, and if it shall then appear that the will had not, prior to the testator’s death, been revoked in accordance with this section, it must be held to be in existence. Estate of Eder, 94 Colo. 173, 29 P.2d 631 (1934).

For the language of this section plainly indicates that only such testamentary instruments as have for their sole purpose the complete destruction or obliteration of a will fall within its provisions. That such is the purpose and intent of the section is manifest from the significant expressions used therein. It provides for the revocation of a will by burning, tearing, or obliterating. These terms must mean and refer to the utter annihilation and destruction of a will. Then the section follows with the further provision that a will may be revoked, that is set aside and annulled in toto, by some other will or codicil in writing declaring the same, that is declaring the total revocation and destruction thereof. Only instruments having such effect and purpose, and such effect and purpose alone, fall within the purview of this section. In re Carey's Estate, 56 Colo. 77, 136 P. 1175 (1913); Freeman v. Hart, 61 Colo. 455, 158 P. 305 (1916).

Under this section no former will can be revoked by a writing, unless the revoking writing is itself a will. Twilley v. Durkee, 72 Colo. 444, 211 P. 668 (1922).

Instrument sufficient to revoke prior will. Generally, any instrument executed with the requisite statutory formalities for wills is sufficient to revoke a prior will. In re Estate of White, 39 Colo. App. 445, 566 P.2d 720 (1977).

A will which expressly revokes former wills must be signed by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses, otherwise it will be invalid, and this is true even if the will be a disposing as well as a revoking document. Twilley v. Durkee, 72 Colo. 444, 211 P. 668 (1922).

Revocation of a particular will by mere inference of law or presumption is limited to a very few instances in our modern practice. Woodward v. Woodward, 33 Colo. 457, 81 P. 322 (1905).

Presumption when will cannot be found. When a will, last seen in the possession of the testatrix, cannot be found following her death, there is a presumption that the testatrix destroyed the will with the intent to revoke it. In re Estate of Enz, 33 Colo. App. 24, 515 P.2d 1133 (1973).

This presumption may be rebutted by evidence of decedent's declarations tending to prove decedent believed the will to be in existence unrevoked. In re Estate of Enz, 33 Colo. App. 24, 515 P.2d 1133 (1973).

Testator's cancellation of fully executed carbon copy of will raises presumption of intent to cancel. A testator's cancellation of a duplicate original or fully executed carbon copy of a will which is in the testator's possession at his death raises a presumption that the testator intended to cancel the other duplicate original or the original will in the possession of another. Tong v. Tong, 619 P.2d 91 (Colo. App. 1980).

Thus, a subsequent conveyance of devised land does not revoke the will. Where a will devised real estate in fee, a subsequent conveyance of the real estate to the devisee in trust for the benefit of the deviser, did not revoke the will, and, at the death of the deviser, all the title which he had to the land devised, both legal and equitable, passed to the devisee. Woodward v. Woodward, 33 Colo. 457, 81 P. 322 (1905).

The word "will" in this section is used in the sense of a testamentary instrument which disposes of the testator's property, to take effect at his death. A written instrument under the section, unless it disposes of property, to take effect at the testator's death, is not a will within the meaning of our statute. Twilley v. Durkee, 72 Colo. 444, 211 P. 668 (1922).

The express revocation of a former will is at least prima facie evidence that such a former will was in existence at the time the will containing the revocation clause was made, and where the question becomes material, it is incumbent upon the proponent to show the non-existence of a former will. Twilley v. Durkee, 72 Colo. 444, 211 P. 668 (1922).

Evidence satisfying language of statute. Competent evidence received by the court that there was a writing executed, declared and attested to on a certain date, expressly revoking all previous wills, satisfies the language of the statute. Any other interpretation would give undue prominence and unwarranted preference to the actions of burning, tearing, or obliterating (which effectively at the moment of action accomplishes a revocation) and would hold in abeyance the efficacy of the other portion of the statute. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

Evidence insufficient to show revocation. In re Chance's Estate, 124 Colo. 436, 238 P.2d 879 (1951).

No revocation by second testamentary instrument except by express language. While in certain cases it is possible to construe a second testamentary instrument as revoking a former, or as revoking certain bequests, or devises thereof, the second instrument may not effectuate the revocation of the former except by express language, or by necessary implication arising from express provisions of the later instrument. In re Estate of McKeown v. Macrum, 28 Colo. App. 49, 470 P.2d 611 (1970).

However, the use of the word "revocation" or "revoke" is not necessary. If the codicil amends and reamends, the effect is to remove the first article as it appears in the will. The first codicil removes the first article of the will and substitutes a new first article. The second codicil then removes the amended first article and substitutes a completely new first article. In re Estate of McKeown v. Macrum, 28 Colo. App. 49, 470 P.2d 611 (1970).

The same degree of mental capacity is required for the revocation of a will as is necessary for its execution. In re Estate of Sebben, 151 Colo. 12, 375 P.2d 516 (1962).

The presumption of revocation arising from the unavailability of a will may be rebutted by evidence that the testator was mentally incapacitated to revoke it. In re Estate of Sebben, 151 Colo. 12, 375 P.2d 516 (1962).

Nothing in the statute implies that the revocation does not really take effect until the day when the will is admitted to probate. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

If any of the acts called for by this section are done with animus revocandi, the revocation becomes complete. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

Intent to revive not inferred from continued existence of revoked will. The mere continued existence physically of a will that has been expressly revoked by one of the means provided in the statute cannot support an inference that the decedent intends such will to be revived at some later date. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

Both methods of revocation contemplate utter destruction and annihilation. Since the general assembly provided two methods one by burning, etc., the other by a written will, and as the burning consumed the paper on which the earlier will was written, and with it the completed will itself, this language meant utter destruction and annihilation, whether revocation was effected by physical force, or by the execution of a later will by the testator. In the absence of a provision in the revoking statute to the contrary, courts will not assume that the general assembly intended solely and only to effect an entire destruction by the first, and either a partial or entire destruction by the second method. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

Determination of "exclusive possession" contingent on the factual circumstances of each case and not to be construed too narrowly. Because the secretary was in the employ of the decedent, the decedent was still considered to have possession of the will when it was in the secretary's physical possession. In re Estate of Schumacher, 253 P.3d 1280 (Colo. App. 2011).

Signature not required by a cross-out to effectuate a partial revocation. When a holographic will was properly executed, no additional signature or acknowledgment is necessary to allow compliance with a cross-out if the testator's intent has been proved by clear and convincing evidence. In re Estate of Schumacher, 253 P.3d 1280 (Colo. App. 2011).

Applied in In re Estate of Decker, 194 Colo. 143, 570 P.2d 832 (1977).

15-11-508. Revocation by change of circumstances. Except as provided in sections 15-11-803 and 15-11-804, a change of circumstances does not revoke a will or any part of it.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Dissolution of Marriage and Estate Planning Issues", see 18 Colo. Law. 439 (1989).

New probate code inapplicable to will automatically revoked by statute. Where decedent's will was automatically revoked by operation of statute that was in effect at the time of decedent's marriage, the new probate code did not apply to will of decedent even though he died after 1974. Phillips v. Liechty, 674 P.2d 1001 (Colo. App. 1983).

Applied in Wimbush v. Wimbush, 41 Colo. App. 289, 587 P.2d 796 (1978).

15-11-509. Revival of revoked will. (1) If a subsequent will that wholly revoked a previous will is thereafter revoked by a revocatory act under section 15-11-507 (1) (b), the previous will remains revoked unless it is revived. The previous will is revived if it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation of the subsequent will or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator intended the previous will to take effect as executed.

(2) If a subsequent will that partly revoked a previous will is thereafter revoked by a revocatory act under section 15-11-507 (1) (b), a revoked part of the previous will is revived unless it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation of the subsequent will or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator did not intend the revoked part to take effect as executed.

(3) If a subsequent will that revoked a previous will in whole or in part is thereafter revoked by another, later will, the previous will remains revoked in whole or in part, unless it or its revoked part is revived. The previous will or its revoked part is revived to the extent it appears from the terms of the later will that the testator intended the previous will to take effect.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

Requisites for revival of revoked but undestroyed will. If the decedent intends to revive an existing previous will which has been revoked but undestroyed, that intention can only be manifest by declaration in compliance with § 15-11-502, thus accomplishing a republication of the will. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

Situation in which "dependent relative revocation" will not apply. The doctrine of "dependent relative revocation" which makes the revocation of a will ineffective and entitles the copy to be probated, cannot be applied where the will is lost or destroyed, and where the decedent tore up the will. Bailey v. Kennedy, 162 Colo. 135, 425 P.2d 304 (1967).

15-11-510. Incorporation by reference. A writing in existence when a will is executed may be incorporated by reference if the language of the will manifests this intent and describes the writing sufficiently to permit its identification.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-510 as it existed prior to 1995.

ANNOTATION

This section allows a court interpreting the intent of the testator of a trust to read and interpret all relevant documents as a whole.

Denver Found. v. Wells Fargo Bank, 163 P.3d 1116 (Colo. 2007).

15-11-511. Testamentary additions to trusts. (1) A will may validly devise property to the trustee of a trust established or to be established (i) during the testator's lifetime by the testator, by the testator and some other person, or by some other person, including a funded or unfunded life insurance trust, although the settlor has reserved any or all rights of ownership of the insurance contracts, or (ii) at the testator's death by the testator's devise to the trustee, if the trust is identified in the testator's will and its terms are set forth in a written instrument, other than a will, executed before, concurrently with, or after the execution of the testator's will or in another individual's will if that other individual has predeceased the testator, regardless of the existence, size, or character of the corpus of the trust. The devise is not invalid because the trust is amendable or revocable, or because the trust was amended after the execution of the will or the testator's death.

(2) Unless the testator's will provides otherwise, property devised to a trust described in subsection (1) of this section is not held under a testamentary trust of the testator, but it becomes a part of the trust to which it is devised, and is administered and disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the governing instrument setting forth the terms of the trust, including any amendments thereto made before or after the testator's death.

(3) A revocation or termination of the trust before the death of the testator causes the devise to lapse, but exhaustion of trust corpus between the time of execution of the testator's will and the testator's death shall not constitute a lapse; a revocation or termination of the trust before the death of the testator shall not cause the devise to lapse, if the testator provides that, in such event, the devise shall constitute a devise to the trustee of the trust identified in the testator's will, and on the terms thereof, as they existed at the time of the execution of testator's will, or as they existed at the time of the revocation or termination of the trust, as the testator's will provides.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-511 as it existed prior to 1995.

ANNOTATION

Unfunded trust not invalid. The fact that a trust was not funded after it was created, or that a trust corpus did not exist, does not affect the validity of the trust. Ayres v. King, 643 P.2d 788 (Colo. App. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 665 P.2d 594 (Colo. 1983).

15-11-512. Events of independent significance. A will may dispose of property by reference to acts and events that have significance apart from their effect upon the dispositions made by the will, whether they occur before or after the execution of the will or before or after the testator's death. The execution or revocation of another individual's will is such an event.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-512 as it existed prior to 1995.

15-11-513. Separate writing or memorandum identifying devise of certain types of tangible personal property. Whether or not the provisions relating to holographic wills apply, a will may refer to a written statement or list to dispose of items of tangible personal property not otherwise specifically disposed of by the will, other than money. To be admissible under this section as evidence of the intended disposition, the writing shall be either in the handwriting of the testator or be signed by the testator and shall describe the items and the devisees with reasonable certainty. The writing may be referred to as one to be in existence at the time of the testator's death; it may be prepared before or after the execution of the will; it may be altered by the testator after its preparation; and it may be a writing that has no significance apart from its effect on the dispositions made by the will.

Handwritten list found in safe deposit box of deceased may be found to be a valid holographic codicil to will if signature and material provisions are in handwriting of deceased, but evidence must show the writing was executed with testamentary intent and evidence failed to make such showing since the list was undated and had no language indicating it was to operate as codicil. In the Estate of Harrington, 850 P.2d 158 (Colo. App. 1993).

If a contemplated post-will memorandum disposing of certain items of personal property is not in existence at the time of the decedent's death, the items of personal property sought to be transferred are limited to items of "tangible personal property", which could be disposed of by such memorandum. In the Estate of Sandstead, 897 P.2d 883 (Colo. App. 1995).

Applied in Robinson v. Blake, 638 P.2d 809 (Colo. App. 1981).

15-11-514. Contracts concerning succession. A contract to make a will or devise, or not to revoke a will or devise, or to die intestate, if executed after July 1, 1995, may be established only by (i) provisions of a will stating material provisions of the contract, (ii) an express reference in a will to a contract and extrinsic evidence proving the terms of the contract, or (iii) a writing signed by the decedent evidencing the contract. The execution of a joint will or mutual wills does not create a presumption of a contract not to revoke the will or wills.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

Section prescribes the only way in which a contract to make a will or devise, or not to revoke a will or devise, can be established. Rieck v. Rieck, 724 P.2d 674 (Colo. App. 1986).

Agreements as to heirship are not against public policy. In a controversy over the estate of a deceased person, there is no rule under which it is the absolute duty of the district court to decide the question of heirship irrespective of agreements between the parties; such agreements are not against public policy, and when valid and not questioned, are controlling of the rights of the parties thereto. In re Schofield's Estate, 101 Colo. 443, 73 P.2d 1381 (1937).

When the clear and unambiguous terms of a will are not the same as those of an alleged contract, the will does not constitute a sufficient memorandum of the agreement. Witmer v. Perini, 32 Colo. App. 110, 508 P.2d 413 (1973).

This section is analogous to the customary statute of frauds, the application of which requires that a sufficient memorandum must contain the terms of the contract sought to be enforced. Witmer v. Perini, 32 Colo. App. 110, 508 P.2d 413 (1973).

A claim alleging fraudulent conduct is not precluded by the succession statute even if the alleged fraudulent conduct consists of oral statements that could not be enforced as creating contractual obligations because they fail to satisfy the requirements of the succession statute. Brody v. Bock, 897 P.2d 769 (Colo. 1995).

Whether a will is a contract will must be determined under the laws of the state in which the will was drafted. Using the law of the state of residence of the second to die at the time of death would allow surviving spouses to move to a state where contract wills are not recognized, or where more stringent requirements are imposed, and thereafter unilaterally revoke the contract will. In re Estate of Loflin, 81 P.3d 1112 (Colo. App. 2003).

Applied in Tarr v. Hicks, 155 Colo. 159, 393 P.2d 557 (1964).

15-11-515. Deposit of will with court in testator's lifetime. A will may be deposited by the testator or the testator's agent with any court for safekeeping, under rules of the court. The will shall be sealed and kept confidential. During the testator's lifetime, a deposited will shall be delivered only to the testator or to a person authorized in writing signed by the testator to receive the will. A conservator may be allowed to examine a deposited will of a protected testator under procedures designed to maintain the confidential character of the document to the extent possible and to ensure that it will be resealed and kept on deposit after the examination.

ANNOTATION

Applied in Jenkins v. Mesa County Dist. Court, 620 P.2d 721 (Colo. 1980) (decided under former § 15-11-901 as it existed prior to the 1994 repeal and reenactment of part 9).

15-11-516. Duty of custodian of will; lodging of will after death; transfer of lodged will; liability. (1) Within ten days after a testator's death or as soon thereafter as the death becomes known to the custodian of an instrument purporting to be the testator's will, the custodian shall deliver the will to the court having probate jurisdiction in the Colorado county where the decedent resided or was domiciled at death for lodging in the records of such court. If the decedent was not a Colorado resident or domiciliary, the custodian shall deliver the will to the court having probate jurisdiction where the decedent was a resident or domiciliary at death, if known to the custodian, but if such residence or domicile is not known, to the court having probate jurisdiction in any Colorado county where property of the decedent was located at death. If the domicile, residence, and location of property are unknown to the custodian, or if the court having probate jurisdiction outside of Colorado refuses to accept delivery of the will, the custodian shall deliver the will to the court having probate jurisdiction in the Colorado county where the will was located. Upon being informed of the testator's death, a court holding a deposited will shall lodge the will in its records.

(2) Upon the filing of a petition or application showing appropriate venue to be in another state or in another Colorado county, the court shall order the lodged will transferred to the court having probate jurisdiction in that state or county. Any person who willfully fails to deliver an instrument purporting to be a will is liable to any person aggrieved for the damages that may be sustained by the failure.

(3) Any person who willfully refuses or fails to deliver an instrument purporting to be a will after being ordered by the court in a proceeding brought for the purpose of compelling delivery is subject to penalty for contempt of court.

ANNOTATION

This section requires that any person having in possession any last will shall within a certain time after the death of the testator present the same to the district court of the county for probate. But no statute requires that he shall thereby become a party to a suit or to any proceeding by which he might become liable for any costs. It is immaterial by whom a will is presented. In fact, there are no parties to the proceeding in a district court to probate a will. When the will is produced, the court may proceed of its own motion. The proceeding is in rem. The judgment is in rem, and is not for or against any party. From it any person interested may appeal. Blackman v. Edsall, 17 Colo. App. 429, 68 P. 790 (1902) (decided under repealed laws antecedent to CSA, C. 176, § 47).

15-11-517. Penalty clause for contest. A provision in a will purporting to penalize an interested person for contesting the will or instituting other proceedings relating to the estate is unenforceable if probable cause exists for instituting proceedings.

PART 6

RULES OF CONSTRUCTION APPLICABLE ONLY TO WILLS

15-11-601. Scope. In the absence of a finding of a contrary intention, the rules of construction in this part 6 control the construction of a will. In the absence of a finding of a contrary intention, the provisions of sections 15-11-603 and 15-11-604 shall apply to wills and codicils executed or republished or reaffirmed on or after July 1, 1995, and prior law (sections 15-11-605 and 15-11-606) shall apply to wills and codicils executed prior to July 1, 1995, and not republished or reaffirmed on or after that date. In the process of determining whether a contrary intention exists, the rules of construction of this part 6 shall not apply.

ANNOTATION

The cardinal rule in the interpretation of wills or other testamentary documents is that the testator's intent should be ascertained from the instrument itself and given effect. Meier v. Denver United States Nat'l Bank, 164 Colo. 25, 431 P.2d 1019 (1967); Massachusetts Co. v. Evans, 924 P.2d 1119 (Colo. App. 1996).

Executor of decedent's estate was entitled to principal of trust created by decedent as a fiduciary, and not personally, under trust provision indicating that principal should go to executor. The mere addition of a codicil to will that named executor in place of previously named corporate executor was not clear manifestation of a new intent to make the executor the trust beneficiary. Massachusetts Co. v. Evans, 924 P.2d 1119 (Colo. App. 1996).

15-11-602. Will may pass all property and after-acquired property. A will may provide for the passage of all property the testator owns at death and all property acquired by the estate after the testator's death.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-604 as it existed prior to 1995.

ANNOTATION

After-acquired property may pass by will. Unless a testator clearly shows an intention to not convey after-acquired property, all the property of which he died seized passes by the will.

Woodward v. Woodward, 33 Colo. 457, 81 P. 322 (1905) (decided under repealed laws antecedent to CSA, C. 176, § 40).

15-11-603. Antilapse; deceased devisee; class gifts. (1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Alternative devise" means a devise that is expressly created by the will and, under the terms of the will, can take effect instead of another devise on the happening of one or more events, including survival of the testator or failure to survive the testator, whether an event is expressed in condition-precedent, condition-subsequent, or any other form. A residuary clause constitutes an alternative devise with respect to a nonresiduary devise only if the will specifically provides that, upon lapse or failure, the nonresiduary devise, or nonresiduary devises in general, pass under the residuary clause.

(b) "Class member" includes an individual who fails to survive the testator but who would have taken under a devise in the form of a class gift had he or she survived the testator.

(c) "Devise" includes an alternative devise, a devise in the form of a class gift, and an exercise of a power of appointment.

(d) "Devisee" includes (i) a class member if the devise is in the form of a class gift, (ii) the beneficiary of a trust but not the trustee, (iii) an individual or class member who was deceased at the time the testator executed his or her will as well as an individual or class member who was then living but who failed to survive the testator, and (iv) an appointee under a power of appointment exercised by the testator's will.

(e) (Reserved)

(f) "Surviving devisee" or "surviving descendant" means a devisee or a descendant who neither predeceased the testator nor is deemed to have predeceased the testator under section 15-11-702.

(g) "Testator" includes the donee of a power of appointment if the power is exercised in the testator's will.

(2) Substitute gift. If a devisee fails to survive the testator and is a grandparent or a descendant of a grandparent of either the testator or the donor of a power of appointment exercised by the testator's will, the following apply:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (2), if the devise is not in the form of a class gift and the deceased devisee leaves surviving descendants, a substitute gift is created in the devisee's surviving descendants. They take per capita at each generation the property to which the devisee would have been entitled had the devisee survived the testator.

(b) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (2), if the devise is in the form of a class gift, other than a devise to "issue", "descendants", "heirs of the body", "heirs", "next of kin", "relatives", or "family", or a class described by language of similar import, a substitute gift is created in the deceased devisee's or devisees' surviving descendants. The property to which the devisees would have been entitled had all of them survived the testator passes to the surviving devisees and the surviving descendants of the deceased devisees. Each surviving devisee takes the share to which he or she would have been entitled had the deceased devisees survived the testator. Each deceased devisee's surviving descendants who are substituted for the deceased devisee takes per capita at each generation the share to which the deceased devisee would have been entitled had the deceased devisee survived the testator. For the purposes of this paragraph (b), "deceased devisee" means a class member who failed to survive the testator and left one or more surviving descendants.

(c) For purposes of this part 6, words of survivorship, such as in a devise to an individual "if he survives me" or in a devise to "my surviving children", are not, in the absence of additional evidence, a sufficient indication of an intent contrary to the application of this section. The use of language such as "and if he does not survive me the gift shall lapse" or "to A and not to A's descendants" shall be sufficient indication of an intent contrary to the application of this section.

(d) If the will creates an alternative devise with respect to a devise for which a substitute gift is created by paragraph (a) or (b) of this subsection (2), the substitute gift is superseded by the alternative devise only if an expressly designated devisee of the alternative devise is entitled to take under the will.

(e) Unless the language creating a power of appointment expressly excludes the substitution of the descendants of an appointee for the appointee, a surviving descendant of a deceased appointee of a power of appointment can be substituted for the appointee under this section, whether or not the descendant is an object of the power.

(3) Dispositions under separate writing. The provisions of this section shall not apply to dispositions of tangible personal property made under section 15-11-513.

(4) More than one substitute gift; which one takes. If, under subsection (2) of this section, substitute gifts are created and not superseded with respect to more than one devise and the devises are alternative devises, one to the other, the determination of which of the substitute gifts takes effect is resolved as follows:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this subsection (4), the devised property passes under the primary substitute gift.

(b) If there is a younger-generation devise, the devised property passes under the younger-generation substitute gift and not under the primary substitute gift.

(c) In this subsection (4):

(I) "Primary devise" means the devise that would have taken effect had all the deceased devisees of the alternative devises who left surviving descendants survived the testator.

(II) "Primary substitute gift" means the substitute gift created with respect to the primary devise.

(III) "Younger-generation devise" means a devise that:

- (A) Is to a descendant of a devisee of the primary devise;
- (B) Is an alternative devise with respect to the primary devise;
- (C) Is a devise for which a substitute gift is created; and
- (D) Would have taken effect had all the deceased devisees who left surviving descendants survived the testator except the deceased devisee or devisees of the primary devise.

(IV) "Younger-generation substitute gift" means the substitute gift created with respect to the younger-generation devise.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For comments on In re Boyle's Estate, appearing below, see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 220 (1950) and 28 Dicta 223 (1951). For note, "Problems Under the Anti-Lapse Statute of Colorado", see 25 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 334 (1953).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

Plain meaning of section is that it is not limited to class gifts, but applies to any devisee who is a lineal descendant of a grandparent of the testator and leaves issue who survive the testator. In re Estate of Kerk v. Christy, 624 P.2d 373 (Colo. App. 1981).

Section does not include lapse of residuary legacy. This section refers to the lapsing of legacies outside the residue, and is not so all inclusive as to include the lapsing of a residuary legacy under any and all circumstances. The general assembly was treating that part of an estate which had not yet become a part of the residue. In re Boyle's Estate, 121 Colo. 599, 221 P.2d 357 (1950); In re Boyle's Estate, 123 Colo. 448, 231 P.2d 465 (1951).

And lapse of specific legacy to testator's sister is part of residue. The sister of a testator is not a descendant of the testator as provided in this section to prevent a lapse of the legacy, so that where a testator left a specific legacy to his sister and failed to provide for the contingency that occurred — the death of the sister before the testator — the estate disposed of by such specific legacy was deemed a part of the residue of the testator's estate. In re Boyle's Estate, 121 Colo. 599, 221 P.2d 357 (1950); In re Boyle's Estate, 123 Colo. 448, 231 P.2d 465 (1951).

Section is not applicable to children of collateral line. Plaintiffs in error are not named as devisees or legatees of the residuary estate; they are children of a collateral line, and so this section has no legitimate employment here. Gibson v. Hills, 84 Colo. 596, 272 P. 660 (1928).

15-11-604. Failure of testamentary provision. (1) Except as provided in section 15-11-603, a devise, other than a residuary devise, that fails for any reason becomes a part of the residue.

(2) Except as provided in section 15-11-603, if the residue is devised to two or more persons, the share of a residuary devisee that fails for any reason passes to the other residuary devisee, or to other residuary devisees in proportion to the interest of each in the remaining part of the residue.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

Failure of residuary devise is controlled by rule of construction established by subsection (2); however, rule is inapplicable if will indicates contrary intent. Matter of Estate of Fryer, 874 P.2d 490 (Colo. App. 1994) (decided under former § 15-11-606).

Where no contrary intent is evidenced in will, application of rule of construction set forth in subsection (2) is proper. Matter of Estate of Fryer, 874 P.2d 490 (Colo. App. 1994) (decided under former § 15-11-606).

Rule of construction set forth in subsection (2) properly applied to construe effect of omission where will left estate to niece and three friends and provided for the possibility of the three friends predeceasing testatrix but did not provide for niece predeceasing testatrix. Deceased niece's share properly went to surviving friends. Matter of Estate of Fryer, 874 P.2d 490 (Colo. App. 1994) (decided under former § 15-11-606).

The rule of construction codified by this section does not apply if it is contrary to the testator's intent as expressed in the will. Haskins v. Garrett, 820 P.2d 350 (Colo. App. 1991).

If the life beneficiary of the trust predeceases the testator, the remainder beneficiary takes as if the provision for the life estate was not made. But this majority rule of construction will only apply if it is consistent with the language of the will and the circumstances existing at the time the will was executed. Haskins v. Garrett, 820 P.2d 350 (Colo. App. 1991).

Applied in Lujan v. United Bank of Greeley, 701 P.2d 1258 (Colo. App. 1985).

15-11-605. Increase in securities; accessions. (1) If a testator executes a will that devises securities and the testator then owned securities that meet the description in the will, the devise includes additional securities owned by the testator at death to the extent the additional securities were acquired by the testator after the will was executed as a result of the testator's ownership of the described securities and are securities of any of the following types:

(a) Securities of the same organization acquired by reason of action initiated by the organization or any successor, related, or acquiring organization, excluding any acquired by exercise of purchase options;

(b) Securities of another organization acquired as a result of a merger, consolidation, reorganization, or other distribution by the organization or any successor, related, or acquiring organization; or

(c) Securities of the same organization acquired as a result of a plan of reinvestment.

(2) Distributions in cash before death with respect to a described security are not part of the devise.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-607 as it existed prior to 1995.

ANNOTATION

Absent a contrary intent by the testatrix, a specific devisee is entitled to receive any additional shares of stock resulting from action initiated by the issuing company, regardless of whether the issuing company takes action before or after execution of the will. Shriners Hospitals for Crippled Children v. United Bank of Denver, 821 P.2d 300 (Colo. App. 1991) (decided under former § 15-11-607 as it existed prior to the 1994 repeal and reenactment of this part).

15-11-606. Nonademption of specified devises; unpaid proceeds of sale, condemnation, or insurance; sale by conservator or agent. (1) A specific devisee has a right to the specifically devised property in the testator's estate at death and:

(a) Any balance of the purchase price, together with any security agreement, owing from a purchaser to the testator at death by reason of sale of the property;

(b) Any amount of a condemnation award for the taking of the property unpaid at death;

(c) Any proceeds unpaid at death on fire or casualty insurance on or other recovery for injury to the property;

(d) Property owned by the testator at death and acquired as a result of foreclosure, or obtained in lieu of foreclosure, of the security interest for a specifically devised obligation;

(e) Real or tangible personal property owned by the testator at death which the testator acquired as a replacement for specifically devised real or tangible personal property; and

(f) Unless the facts and circumstances indicate that ademption of the devise was intended by the testator or ademption of the devise is consistent with the testator's manifested plan of distribution, the value of the specifically devised property to the extent the specifically devised property is not in the testator's estate at death and its value or its replacement is not covered by paragraphs (a) to (e) of this subsection (1).

(2) If specifically devised property is sold or mortgaged by a conservator or by an agent acting within the authority of a durable power of attorney for an incapacitated principal, or if a condemnation award, insurance proceeds, or recovery for injury to the property is paid to a conservator or to an agent acting within the authority of a durable power of attorney for an incapacitated principal, the specific devisee has the right to a general pecuniary devise equal to the net sale price, the amount of the unpaid loan, the condemnation award, the insurance proceeds, or the recovery.

(3) The right of a specific devisee under subsection (2) of this section is reduced by any right the devisee has under subsection (1) of this section.

(4) For the purposes of the references in subsection (2) of this section to a conservator, subsection (2) of this section does not apply if after the sale, mortgage, condemnation, casualty, or recovery it was adjudicated that the testator's incapacity ceased and the testator survived the adjudication by one year.

(5) For the purposes of the references in subsection (2) of this section to an agent acting within the authority of a durable power of attorney for an incapacitated principal, (i) "Incapacitated principal" means a principal who is an incapacitated person, (ii) no adjudication of incapacity before death is necessary, and (iii) the acts of an agent within the authority of a durable power of attorney are presumed to be for an incapacitated principal.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-608 as it existed prior to 1995.

15-11-607. Nonexoneration. A specific devise passes subject to any mortgage interest existing at the date of death, without right of exoneration, regardless of a general directive in the will to pay debts.

15-11-608. Exercise of power of appointment. In the absence of a requirement that a power of appointment be exercised by a reference, or by an express or specific reference, to the power, a general residuary clause in a will or a will making general disposition of all of the testator's property, expresses an intention to exercise a power of appointment held by the testator only if (i) the power is a general power and the creating instrument does not contain a gift if the power is not exercised or (ii) the testator's will manifests an intention to include the property subject to the power. Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-610 as it existed prior to 1995.

15-11-609. Ademption by satisfaction. (1) Property a testator gave in his or her lifetime to a person is treated as a satisfaction of a devise in whole or in part, only if (i) the will provides for deduction of the gift, (ii) the testator declared in a contemporaneous writing that the gift is in satisfaction of the devise or that its value is to be deducted from the value of the devise, or (iii) the devisee acknowledged in writing that the gift is in satisfaction of the devise or that its value is to be deducted from the value of the devise.

(2) For purposes of partial satisfaction, property given during lifetime is valued as of the time the devisee came into possession or enjoyment of the property or at the testator's death, whichever occurs first.

(3) If the devisee fails to survive the testator, the gift is treated as a full or partial satisfaction of the devise, as appropriate, in applying sections 15-11-603 and 15-11-604, unless the testator's contemporaneous writing provides otherwise.

PART 7

RULES OF CONSTRUCTION APPLICABLE TO WILLS AND OTHER GOVERNING INSTRUMENTS

15-11-701. Scope. For the purposes of this part 7, the term "governing instrument" shall be as defined in section 15-10-201 (22); except:

(1) “Governing instrument” shall not include a deed that transfers any interest in real property; however, section 15-11-712 shall apply to such deeds.

(2) As the application of a particular section is limited by its terms to a specific type of provision or governing instrument. In the absence of a finding of a contrary intention, the rules of construction in this part 7 control the construction of a governing instrument executed or republished or reaffirmed on or after July 1, 1995, and the rules of construction under prior law control the construction of a governing instrument executed prior to July 1, 1995, and not a governing instrument republished or reaffirmed after that date. In the process of determining whether a contrary intention exists, the rules of construction of this part 7 shall not apply.

(3) In the absence of a finding of a contrary intention, the rules of construction in section 15-11-705 apply to a governing instrument executed or republished or reaffirmed on or after July 1, 2010, and the rules of construction under section 15-11-705, as it existed prior to July 1, 2010, apply to a governing instrument executed prior to July 1, 2010, and not republished or reaffirmed after that date.

Editor’s note: (1) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsection (1) and adding subsection (3):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

The rules of construction in this Part apply to governing instruments of any type, except as the application of a particular section is limited by its terms to a specific type or types of provision or governing instrument.

The term “governing instrument” is defined in Section 1-201 as “a deed, will, trust, insurance or annuity policy, account with POD designation, security registered in beneficiary form (TOD), pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or similar benefit plan, instrument creating or exercising a power of appointment or a power of attorney, or a dispositive, appointive, or nominative instrument of any similar type.”

Certain of the sections in this Part are limited in their application to donative dispositions or governing instruments of a certain type or types. Section 2-704, for example, applies only to a governing instrument creating a power of appointment. Section 2-706 applies only to governing instruments that are “beneficiary designations,” a term defined in Section 1-201 as referring to “a governing instrument naming a beneficiary of an insurance or annuity policy, of an account with POD designation, of a security registered in beneficiary form (TOD), or of a pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or similar benefit plan, or other nonprobate transfer at death.” Section 2-707 applies only to governing instruments creating a future interest under the terms of a trust.

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 1993. For the prior version, see 8 U.L.A. 138 (Supp. 1992).

15-11-702. Requirement of survival by one hundred twenty hours. (1) Requirement of survival by one hundred twenty hours under probate code. For the purposes of this code, except as provided in subsection (4) of this section, an individual who is not established by clear and convincing evidence to have survived an event, including the death of another individual, by one hundred twenty hours is deemed to have predeceased the event.

(2) Requirement of survival by one hundred twenty hours under other governing instrument. Except as provided in subsection (4) of this section, for purposes of a provision of a governing instrument that relates to an individual surviving an event, including the death of another individual, an individual who is not established by clear and convincing evidence to have survived the event by one hundred twenty hours is deemed to have predeceased the event.

(3) Co-owners with right of survivorship; requirement of survival by one hundred twenty hours. Except as provided in subsection (4) of this section, if (i) it is not established by clear and convincing evidence that one of two co-owners with right of survivorship survived the other co-owner by one hundred twenty hours, one-half of the property passes as if one had survived by one hundred twenty hours and one-half as if the other had survived by one hundred twenty hours, and (ii) there are more than two co-owners and it is not established by clear and convincing evidence that at least one of them survived the others by one hundred twenty hours, the property passes in the proportion that one bears to the whole number of co-owners. For the purposes of this subsection (3), “co-owners with right of survivorship” includes joint tenants, tenants by the entireties, and other co-owners of property or accounts held under circumstances that entitles one or more to the whole of the property or account on the death of one or more of the others.

(4) Exceptions. Survival by one hundred twenty hours is not required if:

(a) The governing instrument contains language dealing explicitly with simultaneous deaths or deaths in a common disaster and if that language is operable under the facts of the case;

(b) The governing instrument expressly indicates that an individual is not required to survive an event, including the death of another individual, by any specified period or expressly requires the individual to survive the event by a specified period; but survival of the event or the specified period shall be established by clear and convincing evidence;

(c) The imposition of a one-hundred-twenty-hour requirement of survival would cause a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment to fail to qualify for validity under section 15-11-1102 (1) (a), (2) (a), or (3) (a) or section 15-11-1102.5 (1) (b) (I), (1) (b) (II), (1) (b) (III), (2) (b) (I) (A), (2) (b) (II) (A), or (2) (b) (III) (A), or to become invalid under section 15-11-1102 (1) (b), (2) (b), or (3) (b) or section 15-11-1102.5 (1) (b) (I), (1) (b) (II), or (1) (b) (III); but survival shall be established by clear and convincing evidence; or

(d) The application of a one-hundred-twenty-hour requirement of survival to multiple governing instruments would result in an unintended failure or duplication of a disposition; but survival shall be established by clear and convincing evidence.

(5) Protection of payors and other third parties. (a) A payor or other third party is not liable for having made a payment or transferred an item of property or any other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument who, under this section, is not entitled to the payment or item of property, or for having taken any other action in reliance on the beneficiary’s apparent entitlement under the terms of the governing instrument, before the payor or other third party received written notice as described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (5). A payor or other third party shall have no duty or obligation to inquire as to the application of the one-hundred-twenty-hour survival or to seek any evidence with respect to any such survival. A payor or other third party is only liable for actions taken two or more business days after the payor or other third party has actual receipt of such written notice. Any form or service of notice other than that described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (5) shall not be sufficient to impose liability on a payor or other third party for actions taken pursuant to the governing instrument.

(b) The written notice shall indicate the name of the decedent, the name of the person asserting an interest, the nature of the payment or item of property or other benefit, and a statement that the beneficiary designated in the governing instrument failed to survive the decedent by one hundred twenty hours. The written notice shall be mailed to the payor’s or other third party’s main office or home by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, or served upon the payor or other third party in the same manner as a summons in a civil action. Notice to a sales representative of the payor or other third party shall not constitute notice to the payor or other third party.

(c) Upon receipt of the written notice described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (5), a payor or other third party may pay to the court any amount owed, or transfer to or deposit with the court any item of property held by it. The availability of such actions under this section shall not prevent the payor or other third party from taking any other action authorized by law or the governing instrument. The court is the court having jurisdiction of the probate proceedings relating to the decedent's estate, or if no proceedings have been commenced, the court having jurisdiction of probate proceedings relating to decedents' estates located in the county of the decedent's residence. If no probate proceedings have been commenced, the payor or other third party shall file with the court a copy of the written notice received by the payor or other third party, with the payment of funds or transfer or deposit of property. The court shall not charge a filing fee to the payor or other third party for the payment to the court of amounts owed or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property, even if no probate proceedings have been commenced before such payment, transfer, or deposit. Payment of amounts to the court or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property pursuant to this section by the payor or other third party discharges the payor or other third party from all claims under the governing instrument or applicable law for the value of amounts paid to the court or items of property transferred to or deposited with the court.

(d) The court shall hold the funds or item of property and, upon its determination under this section, shall order disbursement in accordance with the determination. A filing fee, if any, shall be charged upon disbursement either to the recipient or against the funds or property on deposit with the court, in the discretion of the court.

(e) Upon petition to the court by the beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, the court may order that all or part of the property be paid to the beneficiary in an amount and subject to conditions consistent with this section.

(6) Protection of bona fide purchasers; personal liability of recipient. (a) A person who purchases property for value and without notice or who receives a payment or other item of property in partial or full satisfaction of a legally enforceable obligation, is neither obligated under this section to return the payment, item of property, or benefit nor is liable under this section for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit. However, a person who, not for value, receives a payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which the person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who is entitled to it under this section.

(b) If this section or any part of this section is preempted by federal law (other than the federal "Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974", as amended) with respect to a payment, an item of property, or any other benefit covered by this section, a person who, not for value, receives the payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which the person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who would have been entitled to it were this section or part of this section not preempted.

15-11-703. Choice of law as to meaning and effect of governing instrument. The meaning and legal effect of a governing instrument is determined by the local law of the state selected by the transferor in the governing instrument, unless the application of that law is contrary to the provisions relating to the elective-share described in part 2 of this article, the provisions relating to exempt property and allowances described in part 4 of this article, or any other public policy of this state otherwise applicable to the disposition.

15-11-704. Power of appointment; meaning of specific reference requirement. If a governing instrument creating a power of appointment expressly requires that the power be exercised by a reference, an express reference, or a specific reference, to the power or its source, it is presumed that the donor's intention, in requiring that the donee exercise the power by making reference to the particular power or to the creating instrument, was to prevent an inadvertent exercise of the power.

15-11-705. Class gifts construed to accord with intestate succession. (1) Definitions. In this section:

- (a) "Adoptee" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-115.
- (b) "Child of assisted reproduction" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-120.
- (c) "Distribution date" means the date when an immediate or postponed class gift takes effect in possession or enjoyment.
- (d) "Functioned as a parent of the adoptee" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-115, substituting "adoptee" for "child" in that definition.
- (e) "Functioned as a parent of the child" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-115.
- (f) "Genetic parent" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-115.
- (g) "Gestational child" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-121.
- (h) "Relative" has the meaning set forth in section 15-11-115.

(2) Terms of relationship. A class gift that uses a term of relationship to identify the class members includes a child of assisted reproduction, a gestational child, and, except as otherwise provided in subsections (5) and (6) of this section, an adoptee and a child born to parents who are not married to each other, and their respective descendants if appropriate to the class, in accordance with the rules for intestate succession regarding parent-child relationships.

(3) Relatives by marriage. Terms of relationship in a governing instrument that do not differentiate relationships by blood from those by marriage, such as uncles, aunts, nieces, or nephews, standing alone shall be construed to exclude relatives by marriage.

(4) Half-blood relatives. Terms of relationship in a governing instrument that do not differentiate relationships by the half blood from those by the whole blood, such as brothers, sisters, nieces, or nephews, standing alone shall be construed to include both types of relationships.

(5) Transferor not genetic parent. In construing a dispositive provision of a transferor who is not the genetic parent, a child of a genetic parent is not considered the child of the genetic parent unless the genetic parent, a relative of the genetic parent, or the spouse or surviving spouse of the genetic parent or of a relative of the genetic parent functioned as a parent of the child before the child reached eighteen years of age.

(6) Transferor not adoptive parent. In construing a dispositive provision of a transferor who is not the adoptive parent, an adoptee is not considered the child of the adoptive parent unless:

- (a) The adoption took place before the adoptee reached eighteen years of age;
- (b) The adoptive parent was the adoptee's stepparent or foster parent; or
- (c) The adoptive parent functioned as a parent of the adoptee before the adoptee reached eighteen years of age.

(7) Class-closing rules. The following rules apply for purposes of the class-closing rules:

- (a) A child in utero at a particular time is treated as living at that time if the child lives one hundred twenty hours after birth.
- (b) If a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child is conceived posthumously and the distribution date is the deceased parent's death, the child is treated as living on the distribution date if the child lives one hundred twenty hours after birth and was in utero not later than thirty-six months after the deceased parent's death or born not later than forty-five months after the deceased parent's death.
- (c) An individual who is in the process of being adopted when the class closes is treated as adopted when the class closes if the adoption is subsequently granted.

(a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

(2) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsections (3) and (4):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

This section facilitates a modern construction of gifts that identify the recipient by reference to a relationship to someone; usually these gifts will be class gifts. The rules of construction contained in this section are substantially consistent with the rules of construction contained in the Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers §§ 14.5 through 14.9. These sections of the Restatement apply to the treatment for class-gift purposes of an adoptee, a nonmarital child, a child of assisted reproduction, a gestational child, and a relative by marriage.

The rules set forth in this section are rules of construction, which under Section 2-701 are controlling in the absence of a finding of a contrary intention. With two exceptions, Section 2-705 invokes the rules pertaining to intestate succession as rules of construction for interpreting terms of relationship in private instruments.

Subsection (a): Definitions. With one exception, the definitions in subsection (a) rely on definitions contained in intestacy sections. The one exception is the definition of “distribution date,” which is relevant to the class-closing rules contained in subsection (g). Distribution date is defined as the date when an immediate or postponed class gift takes effect in possession or enjoyment.

Subsection (b): Terms of Relationship. Subsection (b) provides that a class gift that uses a term of relationship to identify the takers includes a child of assisted reproduction and a gestational child, and their respective descendants if appropriate to the class, in accordance with the rules for intestate succession regarding parent-child relationships. As provided in subsection (g), inclusion of a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child in a class is subject to the class-closing rules. See Examples 11 through 15.

Subsection (b) also provides that, except as otherwise provided in subsections (e) and (f), an adoptee and a child born to parents who are not married to each other, and their respective descendants if appropriate to the class, are included in class gifts and other terms of relationship in accordance with the rules for intestate succession regarding parent-child relationships. The subsection (e) exception relates to situations in which the transferor is not the genetic parent of the child. The subsection (f) exception relates to situations in which the transferor is not the adoptive parent of the adoptee. Consequently, if the transferor is the genetic or adoptive parent of the child, neither exception applies, and the class gift or other term of relationship is construed in accordance with the rules for intestate succession regarding parent-child relationships. As provided in subsection (g), inclusion of an adoptee or a child born to parents who are not married to each other in a class is subject to the class-closing rules. See Examples 9 and 10.

Subsection (c): Relatives by Marriage. Subsection (c) provides that terms of relationship that do not differentiate relationships by blood from those by marriage, such as “uncles”, “aunts”, “nieces”, or “nephews”, are construed to exclude relatives by marriage.

Subsection (d): Half Blood Relatives. In providing that terms of relationship that do not differentiate relationships by the half blood from those by the whole blood, such as “brothers”, “sisters”, “nieces”, or “nephews”, are construed to include both types of relationships, subsection (d) is consistent with the rules for intestate succession regarding parent-child relationships. See Section 2-107 and the phrase “or either of them” in Section 2-103(3) and (4). As provided in subsection (g), inclusion of a half blood relative in a class is subject to the class-closing rules.

Subsection (e): Transferor Not Genetic Parent. The general theory of subsection (e) is that a transferor who is not the genetic parent of a child would want the child to be included in a class gift as a child of the genetic parent only if the genetic parent (or one or more of the specified relatives of the child’s genetic parent functioned as a parent of the child before the child reached the age of [18]. As provided in subsection (g), inclusion of a genetic child in a class is subject to the class-closing rules.

Example 9. G’s will created a trust, income to G’s son, A, for life, remainder in corpus to A’s descendants who survive A, by representation. A fathered a child, X; A and X’s mother, D, never married each other, and A never functioned as a parent of the child, nor did any of A’s relatives or spouses or surviving spouses of any of A’s relatives. D later married E; D and E raised X as a member of their household. Because neither A nor any of A’s specified relatives ever functioned as a parent of X, X would not be included as a member of the class of A’s descendants who take the corpus of G’s trust on A’s death.

If, however, A executed a will containing a devise to his children or designated his children as beneficiary of his life insurance policy, X would be included in the class. Under Section 2-117, X would be A’s child for purposes of intestate succession. Subsection (c) is inapplicable because the transferor, A, is the genetic parent.

Subsection (f): Transferor Not Adoptive Parent. The general theory of subsection (f) is that a transferor who is not the adoptive parent of an adoptee would want the child to be included in a class gift as a child of the adoptive parent only if (i) the adoption took place before the adoptee reached the age of [18]; (ii) the adoptive parent was the adoptee’s stepparent or foster parent; or (iii) the adoptive parent functioned as a parent of the adoptee before the adoptee reached the age of [18]. As provided in subsection (g), inclusion of an adoptee in a class is subject to the class-closing rules.

Example 10. G’s will created a trust, income to G’s daughter, A, for life, remainder in corpus to A’s descendants who survive A, by representation. A and A’s husband adopted a 47-year old man, X. Because the adoption did not take place before X reached the age of [18], A was not X’s stepparent or foster parent, and A did not function as a parent of X before X reached the age of [18]. X would not be included as a member of the class of A’s descendants who take the corpus of G’s trust on A’s death.

If, however, A executed a will containing a devise to her children or designated her children as beneficiary of her life insurance policy, X would be included in the class. Under Section 2-118, X would be A’s child for purposes of intestate succession. Subsection (d) is inapplicable because the transferor, A, is an adoptive parent.

Subsection (g): Class-Closing Rules. In order for an individual to be a taker under a class gift that uses a term of relationship to identify the class members, the individual must (i) qualify as a class member under subsection (b), (c), (d), (e), or (f) and (ii) not be excluded by the class-closing rules. For an exposition of the class-closing rules, see Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 15.1. Section 15.1 provides that, “unless the language or circumstances establish that the transferor had a different intention, a class gift that has not yet closed physiologically closes to future entrants on the distribution date if a beneficiary of the class gift is then entitled to distribution.”

Subsection (g)(1): Child in Utero. Subsection (g)(1) codifies the well-accepted rule that a child in utero at a particular time is treated as living at that time if the child lives 120 hours after birth.

Subsection (g)(2): Children of Assisted Reproduction and Gestational Children; Class Gift in Which Distribution Date Arises At Deceased Parent’s Death. Subsection (g)(2) changes the class-closing rules in one respect. If a child of assisted reproduction (as defined in Section 2-120) or a gestational child (as defined in Section 2-121) is conceived posthumously, and if the distribution date arises at the deceased parent’s death, then the child is treated as living on the distribution date if the child lives 120 hours after birth and was either (i) in utero no later than 36 months after the deceased parent’s death or (ii) born no later than 45 months after the deceased parent’s death.

The 36-month period in subsection (g)(2) is designed to allow a surviving spouse or partner a period of grieving, time to make up his or her mind about whether to go forward with assisted reproduction, and a reasonable allowance for unsuccessful attempts to achieve a pregnancy. The 36-month period also coincides with Section 3-1006, under which an heir is allowed to recover property improperly distributed or its value from any distributee during the later of three years after the decedent’s death or one year after distribution. If the assisted-reproduction procedure is performed in a medical facility, the date when the child is in utero will ordinarily be evidenced by medical records. In some cases, however, the procedure is not performed in a medical facility, and so such evidence may be lacking. Providing an alternative of birth within 45 months is designed to provide certainty in such cases. The 45-month period is based on the 36-month period with an additional nine months tacked on to allow for a normal period of pregnancy.

Example 11. G, a member of the armed forces, executed a military will under 10 U.S.C. § 1044d shortly before being deployed to a war zone. G’s will devised “90 percent of my estate to my wife W and 10 percent of my estate to my children.” G also left frozen sperm at a sperm bank in case he should be killed in action. G consented to be treated as the parent of the child within the meaning of § 2-120(f). G was killed in action. After G’s death, W decided to become inseminated with his frozen sperm so she could have his child. If the child so produced was either (i) in utero within 36 months after G’s death or (ii) born within 45 months after G’s death, and if the child lived 120 hours after birth, the child is treated as living at G’s death and is included in the class.

Example 12. G, a member of the armed forces, executed a military will under 10 U.S.C. § 1044d shortly before being deployed to a war zone. G’s will devised “90 percent of my estate to my husband H and 10 percent of my estate to my issue by representation.” G also left frozen embryos in case she should be killed in action. G consented to be the parent of the child within the meaning of § 2-120(f). G was killed in action. After G’s death, H arranged for the embryos to be implanted in the uterus of a gestational carrier. If the child so produced was either (i) in utero within 36 months after G’s death or (ii) born within 45 months after the G’s death, and if the child lived 120 hours after birth, the child is treated as living at G’s death and is included in the class.

Example 13. The will of G’s mother created a testamentary trust, directing the trustee to pay the income to G for life, then to distribute the trust principal to G’s children. When G’s mother died, G was married but had no children. Shortly after being diagnosed with leukemia, G feared that he would be rendered infertile by the disease or by the treatment for the disease, so he left frozen sperm at a sperm bank. G consented to be the parent of the child within the meaning of § 2-120(f). After G’s death, G’s widow decided to become inseminated with his frozen sperm so she could have his child. If the child so produced was either (i) in utero within 36 months after G’s death or (ii) born within 45 months after the G’s death, and if the child lived 120 hours after birth, the child is treated as living at G’s death and is included in the class under the rule of convenience.

Subsection (g)(2) Inapplicable Unless Child of Assisted Reproduction or Gestational Child is Conceived Posthumously and Distribution Date Arises At Deceased Parent’s Death. Subsection (g)(2) only applies if a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child is conceived posthumously and the distribution date arises at the deceased parent’s death. Subsection (g)(2) does not apply if a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child is not conceived posthumously. It also does not apply if the distribution date arises before or after the deceased parent's death. In cases to which subsection (g)(2) does not apply, the ordinary class-closing rules apply. For purposes of the ordinary class-closing rules, subsection (g)(1) provides that a child in utero at a particular time is treated as living at that time if the child lives 120 hours after birth.

This means, for example, that, with respect to a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child, a class gift in which the distribution date arises after the deceased parent's death is not limited to a child who is born before or in utero at the deceased parent's death or, in the case of posthumous conception, either (i) in utero within 36 months after the deceased parent's death or (ii) born within 45 months after the deceased parent's death. The ordinary class-closing rules would only exclude a child of assisted reproduction or a gestational child if the child was not yet born or in utero on the distribution date (or who was then in utero but who failed to live 120 hours after birth).

A case that reached the same result that would be reached under this section is In re Martin B., 841 N.Y.S.2d 207 (Sur. Ct. 2007). In that case, two children (who were conceived posthumously and were born to a deceased father's widow around three and five years after his death) were included in class gifts to the deceased father's "issue" or "descendants". The children would be included under this section because (i) the deceased father signed a record that would satisfy Section 2-120(f)(1), (ii) the distribution dates arose after the deceased father's death, and (iii) the children were living on the distribution dates, thus satisfying subsection (g)(1).

Example 14. G created a revocable inter vivos trust shortly before his death. The trustee was directed to pay the income to G for life, then "to pay the income to my wife, W, for life, then to distribute the trust principal by representation to my descendants who survive W." When G died, G and W had no children. Shortly before G's death and after being diagnosed with leukemia, G feared that he would be rendered infertile by the disease or by the treatment for the disease, so he left frozen sperm at a sperm bank. G consented to be the parent of the child within the meaning of § 2-120(f). After G's death, W decided to become inseminated with G's frozen sperm so that she could have his child. The child, X, was born five years after G's death. W raised X. Upon W's death many years later, X was a grown adult. X is entitled to receive the trust principal, because a parent-child relationship between G and X existed under § 2-120(f) and X was living on the distribution date.

Example 15. The will of G's mother created a testamentary trust, directing the trustee to pay the income to G for life, then "to pay the income by representation to G's issue from time to time living, and at the death of G's last surviving child, to distribute the trust principal by representation to G descendants who survive G's last surviving child." When G's mother died, G was married but had no children. Shortly after being diagnosed with leukemia, G feared that he would be rendered infertile by the disease or by the treatment for the disease, so he left frozen sperm at a sperm bank. G consented to be the parent of the child within the meaning of § 2-120(f). After G's death, G's widow decided to become inseminated with his frozen sperm so she could have his child. If the child so produced was either (i) in utero within 36 months after G's death or (ii) born within 45 months after the G's death, and if the child lived 120 hours after birth, the child is treated as living at G's death and is included in the class-gift of income under the rule of convenience. If G's widow later decides to use his frozen sperm to have another child or children, those children would be included in the class-gift of income (assuming they live 120 hours after birth) even if they were not in utero within 36 months after G's death or born within 45 months after the G's death. The reason is that an income interest in class-gift form is treated as creating separate class gifts in which the distribution date is the time of payment of each subsequent income payment. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 15.1 cmt. p. Regarding the remainder interest in principal that takes effect in possession on the death of G's last living child, the issue of the posthumously conceived children who are then living would take the trust principal.

Subsection (g)(3). For purposes of the class-closing rules, an individual who is in the process of being adopted when the class closes is treated as adopted when the class closes if the adoption is subsequently granted. An individual is "in the process of being adopted" if a legal proceeding to adopt the individual had been filed before the class closed. However, the phrase "in the process of being adopted" is not intended to be limited to the filing of a legal proceeding, but is intended to grant flexibility to find on a case by case basis that the process commenced earlier.

Companion Statute. A state enacting this provision should also consider enacting the Uniform Status of Children of Assisted Conception Act (1988).

Historical Note. This Comment was revised in 1993 and 2008.

15-11-706. Nonprobate transfers; deceased beneficiary. (1) Definitions. This section shall not apply to wills; beneficiary deeds; insurance or annuity policies; or pension, profit sharing, retirement, or similar benefit plans. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Alternative beneficiary designation" means a beneficiary designation that is expressly created by the governing instrument and, under the terms of the governing instrument, can take effect instead of another beneficiary designation on the happening of one or more events, including survival of the decedent or failure to survive the decedent, whether an event is expressed in condition-precedent, condition-subsequent, or any other form.

(b) "Beneficiary" means the beneficiary of a beneficiary designation under which the beneficiary must survive the decedent and includes (i) a class member if the beneficiary designation is in the form of a class gift and (ii) an individual or class member who was deceased at the time the beneficiary designation was executed as well as an individual or class member who was then living but who failed to survive the decedent, but excludes a joint tenant of a joint tenancy with the right of survivorship and a party to a joint and survivorship account.

(c) "Beneficiary designation" includes an alternative beneficiary designation and a beneficiary designation in the form of a class gift.

(d) "Class member" includes an individual who fails to survive the decedent but who would have taken under a beneficiary designation in the form of a class gift had he or she survived the decedent.

(e) (Reserved)

(f) "Surviving beneficiary" or "surviving descendant" means a beneficiary or a descendant who neither predeceased the decedent nor is deemed to have predeceased the decedent under section 15-11-702.

(2) Substitute gift. If a beneficiary fails to survive the decedent and is a grandparent, or a descendant of a grandparent of the decedent, the following apply:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (2), if the beneficiary designation is not in the form of a class gift and the deceased beneficiary leaves surviving descendants, a substitute gift is created in the beneficiary's surviving descendants. They take per capita at each generation the property to which the beneficiary would have been entitled had the beneficiary survived the decedent.

(b) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (2), if the beneficiary designation is in the form of a class gift, other than a beneficiary designation to "issue", "descendants", "heirs of the body", "heirs", "next of kin", "relatives", or "family", or a class described by language of similar import, a substitute gift is created in the deceased beneficiary's or beneficiaries' surviving descendants. The property to which the beneficiaries would have been entitled had all of them survived the decedent passes to the surviving beneficiaries and the surviving descendants of the deceased beneficiaries. Each surviving beneficiary takes the share to which he or she would have been entitled had the deceased beneficiaries survived the decedent. Each deceased beneficiary's surviving descendants who are substituted for the deceased beneficiary take per capita at each generation the share to which the deceased beneficiary would have been entitled had the deceased beneficiary survived the decedent. For the purposes of this paragraph (b), "deceased beneficiary" means a class member who failed to survive the decedent and left one or more surviving descendants.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in a governing instrument, for the purposes of this part 7, words of survivorship, such as in a beneficiary designation to an individual "if he survives me", or in a beneficiary designation to "my surviving children", are not, in the absence of additional evidence, a sufficient indication of an intent contrary to the application of this section. The use of language such as "and if he does not survive me the gift shall lapse" or "to A and not to A's descendants" shall be sufficient indication of an intent contrary to the application of this section.

(d) If a governing instrument creates an alternative beneficiary designation with respect to a beneficiary designation for which a substitute gift is created by paragraph (a) or (b) of this subsection (2), the substitute gift is superseded by the alternative beneficiary designation only if an expressly designated beneficiary of the alternative beneficiary designation is entitled to take.

(3) More than one substitute gift; which one takes. If, under subsection (2) of this section, substitute gifts are created and not superseded with respect to more than one beneficiary designation and the beneficiary designations are alternative beneficiary designations, one to the other, the determination of which of the substitute gifts takes effect is resolved as follows:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this subsection (3), the property passes under the primary substitute gift.

(b) If there is a younger-generation beneficiary designation, the property passes under the younger-generation substitute gift and not under the primary substitute gift.

(c) As used in this subsection (3), unless the context otherwise requires:

(I) "Primary beneficiary designation" means the beneficiary designation that would have taken effect had all the deceased beneficiaries of the alternative beneficiary designations who left surviving descendants survived the decedent.

(II) "Primary substitute gift" means the substitute gift created with respect to the primary beneficiary designation.

(III) "Younger-generation beneficiary designation" means a beneficiary designation that:

(A) Is to a descendant of a beneficiary of the primary beneficiary designation;

(B) Is an alternative beneficiary designation with respect to the primary beneficiary designation;

(C) Is a beneficiary designation for which a substitute gift is created; and

(D) Would have taken effect had all the deceased beneficiaries who left surviving descendants survived the decedent except the deceased beneficiary or beneficiaries of the primary beneficiary designation.

(IV) "Younger-generation substitute gift" means the substitute gift created with respect to the younger-generation beneficiary designation.

(4) Protection of payors. (a) A payor or other third party is not liable for having made a payment or transferred an item of property or any other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument who, under this section, is not entitled to the payment or item of property, or for having taken any other action in reliance on the beneficiary's apparent entitlement under the terms of the governing instrument, before the payor or other third party has received written notice as described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (4). A payor or other third party shall have no duty or obligation to inquire as to the existence of a substituted gift under this section or to seek any evidence with respect to any such substituted gift. A payor or other third party is only liable for actions taken two or more business days after the payor or other third party has actual receipt of such written notice. Any form or service of notice other than that described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (4) shall not be sufficient to impose liability on a payor or other third party for actions taken pursuant to the governing instrument.

(b) The written notice shall indicate the name of the decedent, the name of the person asserting an interest, the nature of the payment or item of property or other benefit, and a statement that a claim to a substitute gift is being made under this section. The written notice shall be mailed to the payor's or other third party's main office or home by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, or served upon the payor or other third party in the same manner as a summons in a civil action.

(c) Upon receipt of the written notice described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (4), a payor or other third party may pay to the court any amount owed or transfer to or deposit with the court any item of property held by it. The availability of such actions under this section shall not prevent the payor or other third party from taking any other action authorized by law or the governing instrument. The court is the court having jurisdiction of the probate proceedings relating to the decedent's estate, or if no proceedings have been commenced, the court having jurisdiction of probate proceedings relating to decedents' estates located in the county of the decedent's residence. If no probate proceedings have been commenced, the payor or other third party shall file with the court a copy of the written notice received by the payor or other third party, with the payment of funds or transfer or deposit of property. The court shall not charge a filing fee to the payor or other third party for the payment to the court of amounts owed or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property, even if no probate proceedings have been commenced before such payment, transfer, or deposit. Payment of amounts to the court or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property pursuant to this section by the payor or other third party discharges the payor or other third party from all claims under the governing instrument or applicable law for the value of amounts paid to the court or items of property transferred to or deposited with the court.

(d) The court shall hold the funds or item of property and, upon its determination under this section, shall order disbursement in accordance with the determination. A filing fee, if any, shall be charged upon disbursement either to the recipient or against the funds or property on deposit with the court, in the discretion of the court.

(e) Upon petition to the court by the beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, the court may order that all or part of the property be paid to the beneficiary in an amount and subject to conditions consistent with this section.

(5) Protection of bona fide purchasers; personal liability of recipient. (a) A person who purchases property for value and without notice, or who receives a payment or other item of property in partial or full satisfaction of a legally enforceable obligation, is neither obligated under this section to return the payment, item of property, or benefit nor is liable under this section for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit. However, a person who, not for value, receives a payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which the person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who is entitled to it under this section.

(b) If this section or any part of this section is preempted by federal law (other than the federal "Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974", as amended) with respect to a payment, an item of property, or any other benefit covered by this section, a person who, not for value, receives the payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which the person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who would have been entitled to it were this section or part of this section not preempted.

15-11-707. Survivorship with respect to future interests under terms of trust; substitute takers. (1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Alternative future interest" means an expressly created future interest that can take effect in possession or enjoyment instead of another future interest on the happening of one or more events, including survival of an event or failure to survive an event, whether an event is expressed in condition-precedent, condition-subsequent, or any other form. A residuary clause in a will does not create an alternative future interest with respect to a future interest created in a nonresiduary devise in the will, whether or not the will specifically provides that lapsed or failed devises are to pass under the residuary clause.

(b) "Beneficiary" means the beneficiary of a future interest and includes a class member if the future interest is in the form of a class gift.

(c) "Class member" includes an individual who fails to survive the distribution date but who would have taken under a future interest in the form of a class gift had he or she survived the distribution date.

(d) "Distribution date", with respect to a future interest, means the time when the future interest is to take effect in possession or enjoyment. The distribution date need not occur at the beginning or end of a calendar day, but may occur at a time during the course of a day.

(e) "Future interest" includes an alternative future interest and a future interest in the form of a class gift.

(f) “Future interest under the terms of a trust” means a future interest that was created by a transfer creating a trust or to an existing trust or by an exercise of a power of appointment to an existing trust, directing the continuance of an existing trust, designating a beneficiary of an existing trust, or creating a trust.

(g) “Surviving beneficiary” or “surviving descendant” means a beneficiary or a descendant who neither predeceased the distribution date nor is deemed to have predeceased the distribution date under section 15-11-702.

(2) Survivorship required; substitute gift. A future interest under the terms of a trust is contingent on the beneficiary’s surviving the distribution date. If a beneficiary of a future interest under the terms of a trust fails to survive the distribution date, the following apply:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (2), if the future interest is not in the form of a class gift and the deceased beneficiary leaves surviving descendants, a substitute gift is created in the beneficiary’s surviving descendants. They take per capita at each generation the property to which the beneficiary would have been entitled had the beneficiary survived the distribution date.

(b) Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this subsection (2), if the future interest is in the form of a class gift, other than a future interest to “issue”, “descendants”, “heirs of the body”, “heirs”, “next of kin”, “relatives”, or “family”, or a class described by language of similar import, a substitute gift is created in the deceased beneficiary’s or beneficiaries’ surviving descendants. The property to which the beneficiaries would have been entitled had all of them survived the distribution date passes to the surviving beneficiaries and the surviving descendants of the deceased beneficiaries. Each surviving beneficiary takes the share to which he or she would have been entitled had the deceased beneficiaries survived the distribution date. Each deceased beneficiary’s surviving descendants who are substituted for the deceased beneficiary take per capita at each generation the share to which the deceased beneficiary would have been entitled had the deceased beneficiary survived the distribution date. For the purposes of this paragraph (b), “deceased beneficiary” means a class member who failed to survive the distribution date and left one or more surviving descendants.

(c) For the purposes of this part 7, words of survivorship attached to a future interest are not, in the absence of additional evidence, a sufficient indication of an intent contrary to the application of this section. Words of survivorship include words of survivorship that relate to the distribution date or to an earlier or an unspecified time, whether those words of survivorship are expressed in condition-precedent, condition-subsequent, or any other form.

(d) If a governing instrument creates an alternative future interest with respect to a future interest for which a substitute gift is created by paragraph (a) or (b) of this subsection (2), the substitute gift is superseded by the alternative future interest only if an expressly designated beneficiary of the alternative future interest is entitled to take in possession or enjoyment.

(3) More than one substitute gift; which one takes. If, under subsection (2) of this section, substitute gifts are created and not superseded with respect to more than one future interest and the future interests are alternative future interests, one to the other, the determination of which of the substitute gifts takes effect is resolved as follows:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this subsection (3), the property passes under the primary substitute gift.

(b) If there is a younger-generation future interest, the property passes under the younger-generation substitute gift and not under the primary substitute gift.

(c) As used in this subsection (3), unless the context otherwise requires:

(I) “Primary future interest” means the future interest that would have taken effect had all the deceased beneficiaries of the alternative future interests who left surviving descendants survived the distribution date.

(II) “Primary substitute gift” means the substitute gift created with respect to the primary future interest.

(III) “Younger-generation future interest” means a future interest that:

(A) Is to a descendant of a beneficiary of the primary future interest;

(B) Is an alternative future interest with respect to the primary future interest;

(C) Is a future interest for which a substitute gift is created; and

(D) Would have taken effect had all the deceased beneficiaries who left surviving descendants survived the distribution date except the deceased beneficiary or beneficiaries of the primary future interest.

(IV) "Younger-generation substitute gift" means the substitute gift created with respect to the younger-generation future interest.

(4) If no other takers, property passes under residuary clause or to transferor's heirs. Except as provided in subsection (5) of this section, if, after the application of subsections (2) and (3) of this section, there is no surviving taker, the property passes in the following order:

(a) If the trust was created in a nonresiduary devise in the transferor's will or in a codicil to the transferor's will, the property passes under the residuary clause in the transferor's will; for purposes of this section, the residuary clause is treated as creating a future interest under the terms of a trust.

(b) If no taker is produced by the application of paragraph (a) of this subsection (4), the property passes to the transferor's heirs under section 15-11-711.

(5) If no other takers and if future interest created by exercise of power of appointment. If, after the application of subsections (2) and (3) of this section, there is no surviving taker and if the future interest was created by the exercise of a power of appointment:

(a) The property passes under the donor's gift-in-default clause, if any, which clause is treated as creating a future interest under the terms of a trust; and

(b) If no taker is produced by the application of paragraph (a) of this subsection (5), the property passes as provided in subsection (4) of this section. For purposes of subsection (4) of this section, "transferor" means the donor if the power was a nongeneral power and means the donee if the power was a general power.

15-11-708. Class gifts to "descendants", "issue", or "heirs of the body"; form of distribution if none specified. If a class gift in favor of "descendants", "issue", or "heirs of the body" does not specify the manner in which the property is to be distributed among the class members, the property is distributed among the class members who are living when the interest is to take effect in possession or enjoyment, in such shares as they would receive, under the applicable law of intestate succession, if the designated ancestor had then died intestate owning the subject matter of the class gift.

15-11-709. By representation; per capita at each generation; per stirpes. (1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Deceased child" or "deceased descendant" means a child or a descendant who either predeceased the distribution date or is deemed to have predeceased the distribution date under section 15-11-702.

(b) "Distribution date", with respect to an interest, means the time when the interest is to take effect in possession or enjoyment. The distribution date need not occur at the beginning or end of a calendar day, but may occur at a time during the course of a day.

(c) "Surviving ancestor", "surviving child", or "surviving descendant" means an ancestor, a child, or a descendant who neither predeceased the distribution date nor is deemed to have predeceased the distribution date under section 15-11-702.

(2) Per capita at each generation. If an applicable statute or a governing instrument calls for property to be distributed "per capita at each generation", the property is divided into as many equal shares as there are (i) surviving descendants in the generation nearest to the designated ancestor which contains one or more surviving descendants and (ii) deceased descendants in the same generation who left surviving descendants, if any. Each surviving descendant in the nearest generation is allocated one share. The remaining shares, if any, are combined and then divided in the same manner among the surviving descendants of the deceased descendants as if the surviving descendants who were allocated a share and their surviving descendants had predeceased the distribution date.

(3) Per stirpes. If a governing instrument calls for property to be distributed “per stirpes”, the property is divided into as many equal shares as there are (i) surviving children of the designated ancestor and (ii) deceased children who left surviving descendants. Each surviving child, if any, is allocated one share. The share of each deceased child with surviving descendants is divided in the same manner, with subdivision repeating at each succeeding generation until the property is fully allocated among surviving descendants.

(4) Deceased descendant with no surviving descendant disregarded. For the purposes of subsections (2), (3), and (5) of this section, an individual who is deceased and left no surviving descendant is disregarded, and an individual who leaves a surviving ancestor who is a descendant of the designated ancestor is not entitled to a share.

(5) By representation. For all governing instruments executed before, on, or after July 1, 1995, unless the governing instrument provides otherwise, the following definition of “by representation” shall apply: If “by representation” is called for, the property is divided into as many equal shares as there are (i) surviving descendants in the generation nearest to the designated ancestor which contains one or more surviving descendants and (ii) deceased descendants in the same generation who left surviving descendants, if any. Each surviving descendant in the nearest generation is allocated one share and the share of each deceased descendant in the same generation is divided among his or her descendants in the same manner.

15-11-710. Worthier-title doctrine abolished. The doctrine of worthier-title is abolished as a rule of law and as a rule of construction. Language in a governing instrument describing the beneficiaries of a disposition as the transferor’s “heirs”, “heirs at law”, “next of kin”, “distributees”, “relatives”, or “family”, or language of similar import, does not create or presumptively create a reversionary interest in the transferor.

15-11-711. Interests in “heirs” and like. If an applicable statute or a governing instrument calls for a present or future distribution to, or creates a present or future interest in, a designated individual’s “heirs”, “heirs at law”, “next of kin”, “relatives”, or “family”, or language of similar import, the property passes to those persons in such shares as would succeed to the designated individual’s intestate estate under the intestate succession law of the designated individual’s domicile if the designated individual died when the donative disposition is to take effect in possession or enjoyment. If the designated individual’s surviving spouse is living but is remarried at the time the interest is to take effect in possession or enjoyment, the surviving spouse is not an heir of the designated individual.

15-11-712. Simultaneous death; disposition of property. The rules of construction in this section shall control in those situations not subject to the control of section 15-11-702.

(1) Where the title to property or the devolution thereof depends upon priority of death and there is no clear and convincing evidence that the persons have died otherwise than simultaneously, the property of each person shall be disposed of as if he or she had survived, except as provided otherwise in this section.

(2) (a) If property is so disposed of that the right of a beneficiary to succeed to any interest therein is conditional upon his or her surviving another person, and both persons die, and there is no clear and convincing evidence that the two have died otherwise than simultaneously, the beneficiary shall be deemed not to have survived.

(b) If there is no clear and convincing evidence that two or more beneficiaries have died otherwise than simultaneously and property has been disposed of in such a way that at the time of their deaths each of such beneficiaries would have been entitled to the property if he or she had survived the others, the property shall be divided into as many equal portions as there were beneficiaries and these portions shall be distributed respectively to those who would have taken in the event that each of such beneficiaries had survived.

(3) Where there is no clear and convincing evidence that two joint tenants have died otherwise than simultaneously, the property so held shall be distributed one-half as if one had survived and one-half as if the other had survived. If there are more than two joint tenants and all of them have so died, the property thus distributed shall be in the proportion that one bears to the whole number of joint tenants. For the purposes of this section, the term "joint tenants" includes owners of property held under circumstances which entitled one or more to the whole of the property on the death of the other or others.

(4) Where a husband and wife have died leaving community property and there is no clear and convincing evidence that they have died otherwise than simultaneously, one-half of all the community property shall pass as if the husband had survived, and as if said one-half were his separate property, and the other one-half thereof shall pass as if the wife had survived, and as if said other one-half were her separate property.

(5) Where the insured and the beneficiary in a policy of life or accident insurance have died and there is no clear and convincing evidence that they have died otherwise than simultaneously, the proceeds of the policy shall be distributed as if the insured had survived the beneficiary; except that, if the policy is community property of the insured and his or her spouse, and there is no alternative beneficiary, or no alternative beneficiary except the estate or personal representative of the insured, the proceeds shall be distributed as community property.

(6) This section shall not apply in the case of wills, living trusts, deeds, or contracts of insurance or any other situation where provision is made for distribution of property different from the provisions of this section or where provision is made for a presumption as to survivorship which results in a distribution of property different from that here provided.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The Will in Estate Planning", see 29 Dicta 367 (1952). For comment, "Lovato v. District Court: The Dilemma of Defining Death", see 58 Den. L.J. 627 (1981).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

This section is inapplicable if there is evidence as to which one of the parties survived the other or if there are particular circumstances from which the fact of survivorship may be inferred. The presumption of simultaneous death of the parties was not intended to take the place of competent, positive and direct evidence, and the fact of survivorship requires no higher degree of proof than any other fact in the case. Sauers v. Stolz, 121 Colo. 456, 218 P.2d 741 (1950).

Provisions of separate trust not controlling over subsection (5). In cases when the beneficiary and insured die simultaneously, and where there are no words in the contract of insurance in any way reversing the statutory presumption of subsection (5), nor is there anything said in the beneficiary's will pertaining to simultaneous death, a presumption as to survivorship contained in the insured's trust does not result in a distribution of property different from that provided for by use of the statutory presumption. Estate of Ohre v. State Dept. of Rev., 41 Colo. App. 113, 585 P.2d 920 (1978).

15-11-713. Construction of wills and trusts containing formula marital clauses.

(1) If a decedent dies leaving a will that was executed or a trust that was created before September 12, 1981, which will or trust contains a formula expressly providing that the decedent's spouse or a qualifying trust is to receive the maximum amount of property qualifying for the marital deduction allowable by federal law, such formula provision shall be construed as referring to the amount of property which, after utilization of the credits available to the decedent's estate, produces the least possible federal estate tax and is eligible for the marital deduction as allowed under the federal "Internal Revenue Code", as amended by section 403 (a) of the federal "Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981", P. L. No. 97-34, in effect at the time of the decedent's death; except that such construction shall not be made if its effect is to reduce the amount of property passing to the surviving spouse or a qualifying trust. Such construction shall only be made if the following requirements are met:

(a) The decedent died after December 31, 1988;

(b) The formula referred to in this subsection (1) was not amended to refer specifically to an unlimited marital deduction under federal law at any time after September 12, 1981, and before the death of the decedent;

(c) The will or trust contains a devise to, or is in trust for the benefit of, the decedent's spouse which qualifies for a marital deduction pursuant to section 2056 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", 26 U.S.C. sec. 2056, as amended;

(d) There is no finding by the court having jurisdiction over the decedent's estate that the decedent intended to refer to the maximum marital deduction of the internal revenue code in effect at the time that the will or trust was drafted; and

(e) All distributions in satisfaction of the surviving spouse's share of the estate or the qualifying trust for the surviving spouse have not been completed.

(2) For the purposes of this section:

(a) "Amount" includes a fractional, pecuniary, or residual amount.

(b) "Optimum marital deduction formula" means any formula in a will or trust that provides that the decedent's spouse or a qualifying trust is to receive the maximum amount of property that qualifies for the estate tax marital deduction allowable by federal law that produces the least possible or no federal estate tax. A formula subject to construction under subsection (1) of this section is, as construed by subsection (1) of this section, an optimum marital deduction formula.

(c) "Qualifying trust" means any trust for the benefit of the decedent's spouse which qualifies for the marital deduction allowed under section 2056 of the federal "Internal Revenue Code of 1986", 26 U.S.C. sec. 2056, as amended.

(3) In the case of an optimum marital deduction formula that contains a general reference to federal estate tax credits or otherwise requires the state death tax credit to be taken into account without a specific reference to such tax credit, the decedent is presumed to have intended that such tax credit be taken into account to reduce the amount that the decedent's spouse or a qualifying trust is to receive, only to the extent that the overall estate tax burden on the decedent's estate is not thereby increased. However, if a preponderance of the evidence shows that the decedent intended to increase the overall estate tax burden on the estate, the state death tax credit shall be taken into account fully for the purposes of reducing the amount that the decedent's spouse or a qualifying trust is to receive. Any formula subject to construction under subsection (1) of this section is subject to the presumption set forth in this subsection (3).

(4) In the case of an optimum marital deduction formula that specifically requires the state death tax credit to be taken into account and does not contain any words limiting the extent to which such credit shall be taken into account, the decedent is presumed to have intended that such credit be taken into account fully for the purpose of reducing the amount that the decedent's spouse or a qualifying trust is to receive, notwithstanding any resulting increase in the overall estate tax burden on the estate.

(5) Subsections (3) and (4) of this section apply with respect to any decedent who dies after December 31, 1988, unless all distributions in satisfaction of the surviving spouse's share of the estate or the qualifying trust for the surviving spouse are completed by July 1, 1994.

PART 8

GENERAL PROVISIONS CONCERNING PROBATE AND NONPROBATE TRANSFERS

GENERAL COMMENT

Part 8 contains five general provisions that cut across probate and nonprobate transfers. Part 8 previously contained a sixth provision, Section 2-801, which dealt with disclaimers. Section 2-801 was replaced in 2002 by the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, which is incorporated into the Code as Part 11 of Article 2 (§§ 2-1101 to 2-1117). To avoid renumbering the other sections in this Part, Section 2-801 is reserved for possible future use.

Section 2-802 deals with the effect of divorce and separation on the right to elect against a will, exempt property and allowances, and an intestate share.

Section 2-803 spells out the legal consequence of intentional and felonious killing on the right of the killer to take as heir and under wills and revocable inter-vivos transfers, such as revocable trusts and life-insurance beneficiary designations.

Section 2-804 deals with the consequences of a divorce on the right of the former spouse (and relatives of the former spouse) to take under wills and revocable inter-vivos transfers, such as revocable trusts and life-insurance beneficiary designations.

Sections 2-805 and 2-806, added in 2008, bring the reformation provisions in the Uniform Trust Code into the UPC.

Application to Pre-Existing Governing Instruments. Under Section 8-101(b), for decedents dying after the effective date of enactment, the provisions of this Code apply to governing instruments executed prior to as well as on or after the effective date of enactment. The Joint Editorial Board for the Uniform Probate Code has issued a statement concerning the constitutionality under the Contracts Clause of this feature of the Code. The statement, titled "Joint Editorial Board Statement Regarding the Constitutionality of Changes in Default Rules as Applied to Pre-Existing Documents", can be found at 17 ACTEC Notes 184 (1991) or can be obtained from the headquarters office of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, 676 N. St. Clair St., Suite 1700, Chicago, IL 60611, Phone 312/915-0195, FAX 312/915-0187.

Historical Note. This General Comment was revised in 1993 and 2008.

2002 Amendment Relating to Disclaimers. In 2002, the Code's former disclaimer provision (§ 2-801) was replaced by the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, which is incorporated into the Code as Part 11 of Article 2 (§§ 2-1101 to 2-1117). The statutory references in this Comment to former Section 2-801 have been replaced by appropriate references to Part 11. Updating these statutory references has not changed the substance of this Comment.

Source: L. 94: Entire part R&RE, p. 1024, § 3, effective July 1, 1995. L. 95: (4) amended, p. 360, § 13, effective July 1. L. 2011: Entire section repealed, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 868, § 2, effective August 10.

15-11-802. Effect of divorce, annulment, and decree of separation. (1) An individual who is divorced from the decedent or whose marriage to the decedent has been annulled is not a surviving spouse unless, by virtue of a subsequent marriage, he or she is married to the decedent at the time of death. A decree of separation that does not terminate the status of husband and wife is not a divorce for purposes of this section.

(2) For purposes of parts 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this article, and of section 15-12-203, a surviving spouse does not include:

(a) An individual who obtains or consents to a final decree or judgment of divorce from the decedent or an annulment of their marriage, which decree or judgment is not recognized as valid in this state, unless subsequently they participate in a marriage ceremony purporting to marry each to the other or enter into a common-law marriage;

(b) An individual who, following an invalid decree or judgment of divorce or annulment obtained by the decedent, participates in a marriage ceremony or enters into a common-law marriage with a third individual; or

(c) An individual who was a party to a valid proceeding concluded by an order purporting to terminate all marital property rights.

Editor's note: This section is similar to former § 15-11-802 as it existed prior to 1995.

ANNOTATION

This section in no way limits a testator's authority to bequeath property to a person by name, whether that person is a former spouse or not. What the statute does prevent is a former spouse from taking property which the decedent has expressly devised to the "surviving spouse". Where a decedent has bequeathed property to a "surviving spouse" by specifically using the term "surviving spouse", this section bars the former spouse from taking that property. Christensen v. Sabad, 773 P.2d 538 (Colo. 1989).

Applied in McDonald v. Hutchins, 43 Colo. App. 135, 602 P.2d 889 (1979).

15-11-803. Effect of homicide on intestate succession, wills, trusts, joint assets, life insurance, and beneficiary designations. (1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Disposition or appointment of property" includes a transfer of an item of property or any other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument.

(b) "Felonious killing", except as provided in subsection (7) of this section, is the killing of the decedent by an individual who, as a result thereof, is convicted of, pleads guilty to, or enters a plea of nolo contendere to the crime of murder in the first or second degree or manslaughter, as said crimes are defined in sections 18-3-102 to 18-3-104, C.R.S.

(c) "Governing instrument" means a governing instrument executed by the decedent.

(d) "Killer" is any individual who has committed a felonious killing.

(e) "Revocable", with respect to a disposition, appointment, provision, or nomination, means one under which the decedent, at the time of or immediately before death, was alone empowered, by law or under the governing instrument, to cancel the designation in favor of the killer, whether or not the decedent was then empowered to designate himself or herself in place of his or her killer and or the decedent then had capacity to exercise the power.

(2) Forfeiture of statutory benefits. An individual who feloniously kills the decedent forfeits all benefits with respect to the decedent's estate, including an intestate share, an elective-share, an omitted spouse's or child's share, the decedent's homestead exemption under section 38-41-204, C.R.S., exempt property, and a family allowance. If the decedent died intestate, the decedent's intestate estate passes as if the killer disclaimed his or her intestate share.

(3) Revocation of benefits under governing instruments. The felonious killing of the decedent:

(a) Revokes any revocable (i) disposition or appointment of property made by the decedent to the killer in a governing instrument, (ii) provision in a governing instrument conferring a general or nongeneral power of appointment on the killer, and (iii) nomination of the killer in a governing instrument, nominating or appointing the killer to serve in any fiduciary or representative capacity, including a personal representative, executor, trustee, or agent; and

(b) Severs the interests of the decedent and killer in property held by them at the time of the killing as joint tenants with the right of survivorship or as community property with the right of survivorship, transforming the interests of the decedent and killer into tenancies in common.

(4) Effect of severance. A severance under paragraph (b) of subsection (3) of this section does not affect any third-party interest in property acquired for value and in good faith reliance on an apparent title by survivorship in the killer unless a writing declaring the severance has been noted, registered, filed, or recorded in records appropriate to the kind and location of the property which are relied upon, in the ordinary course of transactions involving such property, as evidence of ownership.

(5) Effect of revocation. Provisions of a governing instrument are given effect as if the killer disclaimed all provisions revoked by this section or, in the case of a revoked nomination in a fiduciary or representative capacity, as if the killer predeceased the decedent.

(6) Wrongful acquisition of property. A wrongful acquisition of property or interest by a killer not covered by this section shall be treated in accordance with the principle that a killer cannot profit from his or her wrong.

(7) Felonious killing; how determined - time limitations on civil proceedings. (a) Criminal proceedings. After all right to appeal has been waived or exhausted following the entry of a judgment of conviction establishing criminal accountability for the felonious killing of the decedent, such judgment conclusively establishes the convicted individual as the decedent's killer for purposes of this section.

(b) Civil proceedings. Notwithstanding the status or disposition of a criminal proceeding, a court of competent jurisdiction, upon the petition of an interested person, shall determine whether, by a preponderance of evidence standard, each of the elements of felonious killing of the decedent has been established. If such elements have been so established, such determination conclusively establishes that individual as the decedent's killer for purposes of this section.

(c) Time limitations on civil proceedings. (I) A petition brought under paragraph (b) of this subsection (7) may not be filed more than three years after the date of the decedent's death.

(II) Notwithstanding any provision of subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (c) to the contrary, if a criminal proceeding is commenced in a court of this state or in another jurisdiction against an individual for the felonious killing of the decedent, a petition brought under paragraph (b) of this subsection (7) may be filed so long as the petition is filed no later than one year after all right to appeal has been waived or exhausted following an entry of a judgment of conviction, or a dismissal, or an acquittal in the criminal proceeding. However, if the death and the possible culpability of the slayer for the felonious slaying of the decedent is not known to the petitioner within the three-year period of limitations established pursuant to subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (c), the accrual of the action under paragraph (b) of this subsection (7) and the possibility of the tolling of the running of the three-year period of limitation under subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (c) shall be determined according to the principles of accrual and tolling established by case law with respect to similar limitations established under section 13-80-108, C.R.S.

(d) Judgment of conviction. For the purposes of this subsection (7), a "judgment of conviction" includes a judgment of conviction on a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, or a judgment of conviction on a verdict of guilty by the court or by a jury.

(8) Protection of payors and other third parties. (a) A payor or other third party is not liable for having made a payment or transferred an item of property or any other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument affected by a felonious killing, or for having taken any other action in reliance on the beneficiary's apparent entitlement under the terms of the governing instrument, before the payor or other third party has received written notice as described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (8). A payor or other third party shall have no duty or obligation to make any determination as to whether or not the decedent was the victim of a felonious killing or to seek any evidence with respect to any such felonious killing even if the circumstances of the decedent's death are suspicious or questionable as to the beneficiary's participation in any such felonious killing. A payor or other third party is only liable for actions taken two or more business days after the payor or other third party has actual receipt of such written notice. Any form or service of notice other than that described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (8) shall not be sufficient to impose liability on a payor or other third party for actions taken pursuant to the governing instrument.

(b) The written notice shall indicate the name of the decedent, the name of the person asserting an interest, the nature of the payment or item of property or other benefit, and a statement that a claim of forfeiture or revocation is being made under this section. The written notice shall be mailed to the payor's or other third party's main office or home by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, or served upon the payor or other third party in the same manner as a summons in a civil action.

(c) Upon receipt of the written notice described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (8), a payor or other third party may pay to the court any amount owed or transfer to or deposit with the court any item of property held by it. The availability of such actions under this section shall not prevent the payor or other third party from taking any other action authorized by law or the governing instrument. The court is the court having jurisdiction of the probate proceedings relating to the decedent's estate, or if no proceedings have been commenced, the court having jurisdiction of probate proceedings relating to decedents' estates located in the county of the decedent's residence. If no probate proceedings have been commenced, the payor or other third party shall file with the court a copy of the written notice received by the payor or other third party, with the payment of funds or transfer or deposit of property. The court shall not charge a filing fee to the payor or other third party for the payment to the court of amounts owed or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property, even if no probate proceedings have been commenced before such payment, transfer, or deposit. Payment of amounts to the court or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property pursuant to this section by the payor or other third party discharges the payor or other third party from all claims under the governing instrument or applicable law for the value of amounts paid to the court or items of property transferred to or deposited with the court.

(d) The court shall hold the funds or item of property and, upon its determination under this section, shall order disbursement in accordance with the determination. A filing fee, if any, shall be charged upon disbursement either to the recipient or against the funds or property on deposit with the court, in the discretion of the court.

(e) Upon petition to the court by the beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, the court may order that all or part of the property be paid to the beneficiary in an amount and subject to conditions consistent with this section.

(9) Protection of bona fide purchasers; personal liability of recipient. (a) A person who purchases property for value and without notice, or who receives a payment or other item of property in partial or full satisfaction of a legally enforceable obligation, is neither obligated under this section to return the payment, item of property, or benefit nor is liable under this section for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit. However, a person who, not for value, receives a payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which the person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who is entitled to it under this section.

(b) If this section or any part of this section is preempted by federal law with respect to a payment, an item of property, or any other benefit covered by this section, a person who, not for value, receives the payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which the person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who would have been entitled to it were this section or part of this section not preempted.

Law reviews. For article, "Revocation of Wills — How Accomplished and the Effect", see 6 Dicta 7 (1929). For article, "Some Will Drafting Pointers on Marital Deduction", see 27 Dicta 65 (1950). For article, "Probate and Non-probate Distribution Issues in the Case of a Murder/Suicide", see 17 Colo. Law. 1061 (1988).

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided under former provisions similar to this section.

This section does not apply in the absence of a conviction. Smith v. Greenburg, 121 Colo. 417, 218 P.2d 514 (1950).

Thus, where a husband murdered his wife and adopted daughter before committing suicide, one-half of the wife's property held as a tenant in common with her husband passed to her adopted daughter and thence to her husband, while the other half of her property passed directly to her husband. Smith v. Greenburg, 121 Colo. 417, 218 P.2d 514 (1950).

Husband convicted of murdering his wife may not take. Though convict was the husband of the deceased, he could not have taken any of his wife's property "by descent, devise, inheritance, or any other manner", because he was convicted of murdering his wife. The petitioners, claiming through convict, would have had no interest in the estate had there been any assets to administer. That the court, in such circumstances, should not have appointed an administrator upon their application is clear. Rosenboom v. Cline, 90 Colo. 1, 6 P.2d 453 (1931).

For purposes of inheritance, convicted killer of decedent must be treated as having predeceased the decedent, and proceeds of life insurance policies pass directly to named contingent beneficiary as successor-owner. Seidlitz v. Eames, 753 P.2d 775 (Colo. App. 1987).

Convicted killer of spouse may not recover life insurance proceeds. If a court of competent jurisdiction finds by a preponderance of the evidence that a beneficiary of a life insurance policy is guilty of first or second-degree murder or manslaughter of his spouse, the named insured, the killer, may not recover under that policy. Bernstein v. Rosenthal, 671 P.2d 979 (Colo. App. 1983).

The term "kills" as used in this section is not to be construed narrowly. It encompasses anyone who causes the death of another, as either principal or accessory, and does not imply actual delivery of the fatal blows. In re Estate of Walker, 847 P.2d 162 (Colo. App. 1992).

Trial court did not err in determining that decedent's death was caused by a felonious killing and that the statutory cap on noneconomic damages therefore did not apply. The language, "[n]otwithstanding the status or disposition of a criminal proceeding", is broad enough to allow a court of competent jurisdiction to make a civil determination whether the elements of felonious killing have been established by a preponderance of the evidence, even where the person was acquitted or was convicted of a lesser offense, or where no criminal proceeding was ever initiated. Estate of Wright ex rel. Wright v. United Serv. Auto. Assn., 53 P.3d 683 (Colo. App. 2001).

This section does not apply to immunize insurers when the guilt of a beneficiary is established after an insurer's payment of policy proceeds. Instead, a court must apply a negligence standard to the insurer's conduct in paying insurance proceeds to the insured's killer. Lunsford v. Western States Life Ins. Co., 908 P.2d 79 (Colo. 1995) (decided under law in effect prior to the 1994 repeal and reenactment).

15-11-804. Revocation of probate and nonprobate transfers by divorce; no revocation by other changes of circumstances. (1) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Disposition or appointment of property" includes a transfer of an item of property or any other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument.

(b) "Divorce or annulment" means any divorce or annulment, or any dissolution or declaration of invalidity of a marriage, that would exclude the spouse as a surviving spouse within the meaning of section 15-11-802. A decree of separation that does not terminate the status of husband and wife is not a divorce for purposes of this section.

(c) "Divorced individual" includes an individual whose marriage has been annulled.

(d) "Governing instrument" refers to a governing instrument executed by the divorced individual before the divorce or annulment of his or her marriage to his or her former spouse.

(e) "Relative of the divorced individual's former spouse" means an individual who is related to the divorced individual's former spouse by blood, adoption, or affinity and who, after the divorce or annulment, is not related to the divorced individual by blood, adoption, or affinity.

(f) "Revocable" with respect to a disposition, appointment, provision, or nomination, means one under which the divorced individual, at the time of the divorce or annulment, was alone empowered, by law or under the governing instrument, to cancel the designation in favor of his or her former spouse or former spouse's relative, whether or not the divorced individual was then empowered to designate himself or herself in place of his or her former spouse or in place of his or her former spouse's relative and whether or not the divorced individual then had the capacity to exercise the power.

(2) Revocation upon divorce. Except as provided by the express terms of a governing instrument, a court order, or a contract relating to the division of the marital estate made between the divorced individuals before or after the marriage, divorce, or annulment, the divorce or annulment of a marriage:

(a) Revokes any revocable (i) disposition or appointment of property made by a divorced individual to his or her former spouse in a governing instrument and any disposition or appointment created by law or in a governing instrument to a relative of the divorced individual's former spouse, (ii) provision in a governing instrument conferring a general or nongeneral power of appointment on the divorced individual's former spouse or on a relative of the divorced individual's former spouse, and (iii) nomination in a governing instrument nominating a divorced individual's former spouse or a relative of the divorced individual's former spouse to serve in any fiduciary or representative capacity, including a personal representative, executor, trustee, conservator, agent, or guardian; and

(b) Severs the interests of the former spouses in property held by them at the time of the divorce or annulment as joint tenants with the right of survivorship or as community property with the right of survivorship, transforming the interests of the former spouses into tenancies in common.

(3) Effect of severance. A severance under paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section does not affect any third-party interest in property acquired for value and in good faith reliance on an apparent title by survivorship in the survivor of the former spouses unless a writing declaring the severance has been noted, registered, filed, or recorded in records appropriate to the kind and location of the property which are relied upon, in the ordinary course of transactions involving such property, as evidence of ownership.

(4) Effect of revocation. Provisions of a governing instrument are given effect as if the former spouse and relatives of the former spouse disclaimed all provisions revoked by this section or, in the case of a revoked nomination in a fiduciary or representative capacity as if the former spouse and relatives of the former spouse died immediately before the divorce or annulment.

(5) Revival if divorce nullified. Provisions revoked solely by this section are revived by the divorced individual's remarriage to the former spouse or by a nullification of the divorce or annulment.

(6) No revocation for other change of circumstances. No change of circumstances other than as described in this section and in section 15-11-803 effects a revocation.

(7) Protection of payors and other third parties. (a) A payor or other third party is not liable for having made a payment or transferred an item of property or any other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument affected by a divorce, annulment, or remarriage, or for having taken any other action in reliance on the beneficiary's apparent entitlement under the terms of the governing instrument, before the payor or other third party has received written notice as described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (7). A payor or other third party shall have no duty or obligation to inquire as to the continued marital relationship between the decedent and such beneficiary or to seek any evidence with respect to any such marital relationship. A payor or other third party is only liable for actions taken two or more business days after the payor or other third party has actual receipt of such written notice. Any form or service of notice other than that described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (7) shall not be sufficient to impose liability on a payor or other third party for actions taken pursuant to the governing instrument.

(b) The written notice shall indicate the name of the decedent, the name of the person asserting an interest, the nature of the payment or item of property or other benefit, and a statement that a divorce, annulment, or remarriage of the decedent and the designated beneficiary occurred. The written notice shall be mailed to the payor's or other third party's main office or home by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, or served upon the payor or other third party in the same manner as a summons in a civil action.

(c) Upon receipt of the written notice described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (7), a payor or other third party may pay to the court any amount owed or transfer to or deposit with the court any item of property held by it. The availability of such actions under this section shall not prevent the payor or other third party from taking any other action authorized by law or the governing instrument. The court is the court having jurisdiction of the probate proceedings relating to the decedent's estate, or if no proceedings have been commenced, the court having jurisdiction of probate proceedings relating to decedents' estates located in the county of the decedent's residence. If no probate proceedings have been commenced, the payor or other third party shall file with the court a copy of the written notice received by the payor or other third party, with the payment of funds or transfer or deposit of property. The court shall not charge a filing fee to the payor or other third party for the payment to the court of amounts owed or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property, even if no probate proceedings have been commenced before such payment, transfer, or deposit. Payment of amounts to the court or transfer to or deposit with the court of any item of property pursuant to this section by the payor or other third party discharges the payor or other third party from all claims under the governing instrument or applicable law for the value of amounts paid to the court or items of property transferred to or deposited with the court.

(d) The court shall hold the funds or item of property and, upon its determination under this section, shall order disbursement in accordance with the determination. A filing fee, if any, shall be charged upon disbursement either to the recipient or against the funds or property on deposit with the court, in the discretion of the court.

(e) Upon petition to the court by the beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, the court may order that all or part of the property be paid to the beneficiary in an amount and subject to conditions consistent with this section.

(8) Protection of bona fide purchasers; personal liability of recipient. (a) A person who purchases property from a former spouse, relative of a former spouse, or any other person for value and without notice, or who receives from a former spouse, relative of a former spouse, or any other person a payment or other item of property in partial or full satisfaction of a legally enforceable obligation, is neither obligated under this section to return the payment, item of property, or benefit nor is liable under this section for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit. However, a former spouse, relative of a former spouse, or other person who, not for value, received a payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which that person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who is entitled to it under this section.

(b) If this section or any part of this section is preempted by federal law with respect to a payment, an item of property, or any other benefit covered by this section, a former spouse, relative of the former spouse, or any other person who, not for value, received a payment, item of property, or any other benefit to which that person is not entitled under this section is obligated to return that payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, to the person who would have been entitled to it were this section or part of this section not preempted.

§ 15-11-804 on Estate Planning Documents", see 34 Colo. Law. 93 (January 2005).

Revocation of life insurance policy upon divorce does not violate the prohibition against retrospective legislation, when statute is enacted after divorce, but before the death of a spouse. Subsection (2) is not retrospective with regard to beneficiaries' and decedents' interests. In re Estate of Becker, 32 P.3d 557 (Colo. App. 2000), aff'd sub nom. In re Estate of DeWitt, 54 P.3d 849 (Colo. 2002).

Subsection (2) is procedural because it relates only to a mode of procedure to enforce the right of each decedent to designate a beneficiary. In re Estate of DeWitt, 54 P.3d 849 (Colo. 2002).

Subsection (2) does not violate the contract clause of either the Colorado or United States Constitution. This subsection addresses the donative aspect of an insurance contract, and does not impair contracts between decedents and insurance companies. Subsection (2) merely creates a default rule by changing the identity of the presumptive beneficiary, and does not impact any contractual obligations. In re Estate of DeWitt, 54 P.3d 849 (Colo. 2002).

Real property that was divided in separation agreement and in control of husband did not become former wife's property by virtue of a joint tenancy right of survivorship after former husband's death due to former wife's failure to execute deed or otherwise transfer her interest in the property to him; instead, decree of dissolution severed former wife's interest in the property. Camack v. Camack, 62 P.3d 1097 (Colo. App. 2002).

Subsection (7)(c) is in direct conflict with the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) and is thus preempted (citing Boggs v. Boggs, 520 U.S. 833, 117 S. Ct. 1754, 138 L.Ed.2d 45 (1997)). The relevant "act or omission"—the death of the maker of the annuity contracts—occurred after the effective date of ERISA and the application of federal common law is not appropriate. In re Estate of MacAnally, 20 P.3d 1197 (Colo. App. 2000).

15-11-805. Ownership of personal property between spouses. (1) For purposes of this article; tangible personal property in the joint possession or control of the decedent and his or her surviving spouse at the time of the decedent's death is presumed to be owned by the decedent and the decedent's spouse in joint tenancy with right of survivorship if ownership is not otherwise evidenced by a certificate of title, bill of sale, or other writing. This presumption shall not apply to:

- (a) Property acquired by either spouse before the marriage;
- (b) Property acquired by either spouse by gift or inheritance during the marriage;
- (c) Property used by the decedent spouse in a trade or business in which the surviving spouse has no interest; or
- (d) Property held for another.
- (e) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2002, p. 653, § 8, effective July 1, 2002.)
- (2) The presumption created in this section may be overcome by a preponderance of the evidence demonstrating that ownership was held other than in joint tenancy with right of survivorship.

15-11-806. Reformation to correct mistakes. The court may reform the terms of a governing instrument, even if unambiguous, to conform the terms to the transferor's intention if it is proved by clear and convincing evidence that the transferor's intent and the terms of the governing instrument were affected by a mistake of fact or law, whether in expression or inducement.

- (a) Applies on or after July 1, 2010, to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and to any proceedings in court then pending or thereafter commenced

regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

Added in 2008, Section 2-805 is based on Section 415 of the Uniform Trust Code, which in turn was based on Section 12.1 of the Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers (2003).

Section 2-805 is broader in scope than Section 415 of the Uniform Trust Code because Section 2-805 applies but is not limited to trusts.

Section 12.1, and hence Section 2-805, is explained and illustrated in the Comments to Section 12.1 of the Restatement and also, in the case of a trust, in the Comment to Section 415 of the Uniform Trust Code.

COMMENT

Added in 2008, Section 2-806 is based on Section 416 of the Uniform Trust Code, which in turn was based on Section 12.2 of the Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers (2003).

Section 2-806 is broader in scope than Section 416 of the Uniform Trust Code because Section 2-806 applies but is not limited to trusts.

Section 12.2, and hence Section 2-806, is explained and illustrated in the Comments to Section 12.2 of the Restatement and also, in the case of a trust, in the Comment to Section 416 of the Uniform Trust Code.

HONORARY TRUSTS; TRUSTS FOR PETS

15-11-901. Honorary trusts; trusts for pets. (1) Honorary trust. Subject to subsection (3) of this section, and except as provided under sections 38-30-110, 38-30-111, and 38-30-112, C.R.S., if (i) a trust is for a specific, lawful, noncharitable purpose or for lawful, noncharitable purposes to be selected by the trustee and (ii) there is no definite or definitely ascertainable beneficiary designated, the trust may be performed by the trustee for twenty-one years but no longer, whether or not the terms of the trust contemplate a longer duration.

(2) Trust for pets. Subject to this subsection (2) and subsection (3) of this section, a trust for the care of designated domestic or pet animals and the animals' offspring in gestation is valid. For purposes of this subsection (2), the determination of the "animals' offspring in gestation" is made at the time the designated domestic or pet animals become present beneficiaries of the trust. Unless the trust instrument provides for an earlier termination, the trust terminates when no living animal is covered by the trust. A governing instrument shall be liberally construed to bring the transfer within this subsection (2), to presume against the merely precatory or honorary nature of the disposition, and to carry out the general intent of the transferor. Extrinsic evidence is admissible in determining the transferor's intent. Any trust under this subsection (2) shall be an exception to any statutory or common law rule against perpetuities.

(3) Additional provisions applicable to honorary trusts and trusts for pets. In addition to the provisions of subsection (1) or (2) of this section, a trust covered by either of those subsections is subject to the following provisions:

(a) Except as expressly provided otherwise in the trust instrument, no portion of the principal or income may be converted to the use of the trustee, other than reasonable trustee fees and expenses of administration, or to any use other than for the trust's purposes or for the benefit of a covered animal or animals.

(b) Upon termination, the trustee shall transfer the unexpended trust property in the following order:

(I) As directed in the trust instrument;

(II) If the trust was created in a nonresiduary clause in the transferor's will or in a codicil to the transferor's will, under the residuary clause in the transferor's will; and

(III) If no taker is produced by the application of subparagraph (I) or (II) of this paragraph (b), to the transferor's heirs under part 5 of this article.

(c) (Reserved)

(d) The intended use of the principal or income can be enforced by an individual designated for that purpose in the trust instrument, by the person having custody of an animal for which care is provided by the trust instrument, by a remainder beneficiary, or, if none, by an individual appointed by a court upon application to it by an individual.

(e) All trusts created under this section shall be registered and all trustees shall be subject to the laws of this state applying to trusts and trustees.

(f) (Reserved)

(g) If no trustee is designated or no designated trustee is willing or able to serve, a court shall name a trustee. A court may order the transfer of the property to another trustee, if required to assure that the intended use is carried out and if no successor trustee is designated in the trust instrument or if no designated successor trustee agrees to serve or is able to serve. A court may also make such other orders and determinations as shall be advisable to carry out the intent of the transferor and the purpose of this section.

15-11-1003. Source: L. 89: Entire part added, p. 811, § 1, effective April 17.

(3) In the presence of the witnesses and of the authorized person the testator shall sign the will or, if he has previously signed it, shall acknowledge his signature.

(4) If the testator is unable to sign, the absence of his signature shall not affect the validity of the international will if such testator indicates the reason for his inability to sign and the authorized person makes note thereof on the will. In such case, it is permissible for any other person present, including the authorized person or one of the witnesses, at the direction of the testator, to sign the testator's name for him if the authorized person makes note of this on the will, but it is not required that any person sign the testator's name for him.

(2) The date of the will shall be the date of its signature by the authorized person. Such date shall be noted at the end of the will by the authorized person.

(3) The authorized person shall ask the testator whether he wishes to make a declaration concerning the safekeeping of his will. If so and at the express request of the testator, the place where he intends to have his will kept shall be mentioned in the certificate provided for in section 15-11-1006.

(4) A will executed in compliance with section 15-11-1004 shall not be invalid as an international will merely because it does not comply with this section.

Editor’s note: Subsection (7) provided for the repeal of this section, effective July 1, 2008. (See L. 2006, p. 377.)

15-11-1102.5. Statutory rule against perpetuities. (1) Year 2001 rule. (a) Paragraph (b) of this subsection (1) shall apply to interests in trust and powers of appointment with respect to all or any part of a trust, which interest or power is created after May 31, 2001.

(b) (I) A nonvested property interest is invalid unless it either vests or terminates within one thousand years after its creation.

(II) A general power of appointment not presently exercisable because of a condition precedent is invalid unless the condition precedent either is satisfied or becomes impossible to satisfy within one thousand years after its creation.

(III) A nongeneral power of appointment or a general testamentary power of appointment is invalid unless the power is irrevocably exercised or otherwise terminates within one thousand years after its creation.

(2) Year 1991 rule. (a) Paragraph (b) of this subsection (2) shall apply to interests and powers created on or after May 31, 1991, other than interests and powers subject to paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section.

(b) (I) A nonvested property interest is invalid unless:

(A) When the interest is created, it is certain to vest or terminate no later than twenty-one years after the death of an individual who is then alive; or

(B) The interest either vests or terminates within ninety years after its creation.

(II) A general power of appointment not presently exercisable because of a condition precedent is invalid unless:

(A) When the power is created, the condition precedent is certain to be satisfied or become impossible to satisfy no later than twenty-one years after the death of an individual who is then alive; or

(B) The condition precedent either is satisfied or becomes impossible to satisfy within ninety years after its creation.

(III) A nongeneral power of appointment or a general testamentary power of appointment is invalid unless:

(A) When the power is created, it is certain to be irrevocably exercised or to otherwise terminate no later than twenty-one years after the death of an individual who is then alive; or

(B) The power is irrevocably exercised or otherwise terminates within ninety years after its creation.

(IV) In determining whether a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment is valid under subparagraphs (I) to (III) of paragraph (b) of this subsection (2), the possibility that a child will be born to an individual after the individual's death is disregarded.

(V) If, in measuring a period from the creation of a trust or other property arrangement for purposes of interests, powers, and trusts subject to this paragraph (b), language in a governing instrument seeks to disallow the vesting or termination of any interest or trust beyond, seeks to postpone the vesting or termination of any interest or trust until, or seeks to operate in effect in any similar fashion upon the later of the expiration of a period of time not exceeding twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of specified lives in being at the creation of the trust or other property arrangement or the expiration of a period of time that exceeds or might exceed twenty-one years after the death of the survivor or lives in being at the creation of the trust or other property arrangement, that language is inoperative to the extent it produces a period of time that exceeds twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of the specified lives.

(3) Nonvested interest or power created by the exercise of a power. (a) For the purposes of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of this section, paragraph (a) of subsection (2) of this section, and subparagraph (II) of paragraph (c) of this subsection (3), a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment created by the exercise of a power of appointment is created when the power is irrevocably exercised or when a revocable exercise becomes irrevocable.

(b) For the purposes of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section and paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section, a power of appointment created by the exercise of a nongeneral power of appointment shall be considered as created when the first power of appointment is created. This paragraph (b) shall be applied and construed in a manner that is consistent with the treatment of the exercise of a nongeneral power of appointment as nontaxable for purposes of the estate and gift tax under the federal internal revenue laws.

(c) (I) Paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section shall not apply with respect to nonvested property interests and powers of appointment created by the exercise of a nongeneral power of appointment over all or any part of a trust that was irrevocable on September 25, 1985.

(II) Nonvested property interests and powers of appointment, which interests or powers are so created on or after May 31, 1991, shall be subject to paragraph (b) of subsection (2) of this section.

(III) This paragraph (c) shall be applied and construed in a manner that is consistent with the treatment of such a trust as exempt from the generation-skipping transfer tax under the federal internal revenue laws.

15-11-1103. When nonvested property interest or power of appointment created.

(1) Except as provided in subsections (2) and (3) of this section and in sections 15-11-1102.5 (3) (a) and 15-11-1106 (1), the time of creation of a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment is determined under general principles of property law.

(2) For purposes of this part 11, if there is a person who alone can exercise a power created by a governing instrument to become the unqualified beneficial owner of either a nonvested property interest or a property interest subject to a power of appointment described in section 15-11-1102 (2) or (3), the nonvested property interest or power of appointment is created when the power to become the unqualified beneficial owner terminates. For purposes of this part 11, a joint power with respect to community property or to marital property under the "Uniform Marital Property Act" held by individuals married to each other is a power exercisable by one person alone.

(3) For purposes of this part 11, a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment arising from a transfer of property to a previously funded trust or other existing property arrangement is created when the nonvested property interest or power of appointment in the original contribution was created.

(1) Year 2001 rule. Upon the petition of an interested person, a court shall reform a disposition in the manner that most closely approximates the transferor's manifested plan of distribution and is within the one thousand years allowed by section 15-11-1102.5 (1) (b) (I), (1) (b) (II), or (1) (b) (III) if:

(2) Year 1991 rule. Upon the petition of an interested person, a court shall reform a disposition in the manner that most closely approximates the transferor's manifested plan of distribution and is within the ninety years allowed by section 15-11-1102.5 (2) (b) (I) (B), (2) (b) (II) (B), or (2) (b) (III) (B) if:

15-11-1105. Exclusions from statutory rule against perpetuities. (1) The statutory rule against perpetuities, as set forth in sections 15-11-1102 and 15-11-1102.5, does not apply to invalidate:

(a) A nonvested property interest or a power of appointment arising out of a nondonative transfer, except a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment arising out of:

(I) A premarital or postmarital agreement;

(II) A separation or divorce settlement;

(III) A spouse's election;

(IV) A similar arrangement arising out of a prospective, existing, or previous marital relationship between the parties;

(V) A contract to make or not to revoke a will or trust;

(VI) A contract to exercise or not to exercise a power of appointment; or

(VII) A transfer in satisfaction of a duty of support.

(b) A fiduciary's power relating to the administration or management of assets, including the power of a fiduciary to sell, lease, or mortgage property, and the power of a fiduciary to determine principal and income;

(d) A discretionary power of a trustee to distribute principal before termination of a trust to a beneficiary having an indefeasibly vested interest in the income and principal;

(e) A nonvested property interest held by a charity, government, or governmental agency or subdivision, if the nonvested property interest is preceded by an interest held by another charity, government, or governmental agency or subdivision;

(f) A nonvested property interest in or a power of appointment with respect to a trust or other property arrangement forming part of a pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus, health, disability, death benefit, income deferral, or other current or deferred benefit plan for one or more employees, independent contractors, or their beneficiaries or spouses, to which contributions are made for the purpose of distributing to or for the benefit of the participants or their beneficiaries or spouses the property, income, or principal in the trust or other property arrangement, except a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment that is created by an election of a participant or a beneficiary or spouse; or

(g) A property interest, power of appointment, or arrangement that was not subject to the common-law rule against perpetuities or is excluded by another statute of this state.

15-11-1106. Prospective application. (1) Except as extended by subsection (2) of this section, this part 11 applies to a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment that is created on or after May 31, 1991. For purposes of this section and section 15-11-1107, a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment created by the exercise of a power of appointment is created when the power is irrevocably exercised or when a revocable exercise becomes irrevocable.

(2) If a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment was created before May 31, 1991, and is determined in a judicial proceeding, commenced on or after May 31, 1991, to violate this state's rule against perpetuities as that rule existed before May 31, 1991, a court upon the petition of an interested person shall reform the disposition by inserting a savings clause that preserves most closely the transferor's manifested plan of distribution and that brings that plan within the limits of the rule against perpetuities applicable when the nonvested property interest or power of appointment was created.

ANNOTATION

Subsection (2) does not allow a party to bring a new action for reformation after a judicial determination that a property interest violated the common law rule against perpetuities. The statute does not authorize a party to file a second lawsuit, because there is no evidence of the general assembly's intent to create an exception to the doctrine of claim preclusion. Argus Real Estate, Inc. v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 109 P.3d 604 (Colo. 2005).

The reformation provision in subsection (2) applies to nondonative transfers, including commercial options. The use of probate terminology to describe the manner in which courts must conduct reformation does not limit the broad language identifying the interests subject to reformation. Whiting Oil & Gas Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., __ P.3d __ (Colo. App. 2010).

15-11-1106.5. Retroactive application of certain provisions - notice of election. (1) Sections 15-11-1102.5 and 15-11-1104.5 shall apply retroactively with respect to an interest in a trust or a power of appointment over all or any part of a trust, which interest or power was created before July 1, 2006, unless a person who owns or holds such interest or power makes and delivers a notice of election as provided in this section.

(2) (a) The notice of election pursuant to subsection (1) of this section shall be a written statement of such person's election against the retroactive application of sections 15-11-1102.5 and 15-11-1104.5. The notice of election shall include a reference to this section, the name and date of the trust, the names of the settlor and the trustee of the trust, a description of the interest or power, and the name and address of the person making the election. The notice of election shall be signed and acknowledged by such person.

(b) The notice of election shall be delivered to a trustee of such trust on or before July 1, 2008. If there is no person serving as trustee at the time delivery is to be made, the notice of election may instead be delivered to a person authorized to appoint a successor trustee of the trust. When the successor trustee is appointed, the person to whom the notice of election was delivered shall deliver it to the successor trustee.

(c) The notice of election shall be considered delivered to the person to whom delivery is required to be made when the notice of election or a copy thereof is delivered in person or when mailed by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to such person.

(d) The trustee of the trust shall file the notice of election with the records maintained by the trustee for the trust. There shall be a rebuttable presumption that the notice of election was not delivered as provided in this section unless the notice of election or a copy of such notice is in the records of the trust maintained by the trustee.

(3) No fiduciary for any trust, estate, individual, or other person with an interest, right, or power affected by the retroactive application of such amendments shall be required to make such election, nor shall such fiduciary be held responsible for not making such election.

15-11-1107. Uniformity of application and construction. (1) This part 11 shall be applied and construed to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law with respect to the subject of this part 11 among states enacting the “Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities Act”. With respect to any matter relating to the validity of an interest within the rule against perpetuities, unless a contrary intent appears, it shall be presumed that the transferor of the interest intended that the interest be valid.

(2) This part 11 supersedes and abolishes the rule of the common law known as the rule against perpetuities for nonvested interests created after May 31, 1991.

15-11-1202. Definitions. As used in this part 12, unless the context otherwise requires:

(1) “Disclaimant” means the person to whom a disclaimed interest or power would have passed if the disclaimer had not been made.

(3) “Disclaimer” means the refusal to accept an interest in or power over property.

(4) “Fiduciary” means a personal representative, trustee, agent acting under a power of attorney, or other person authorized to act as a fiduciary with respect to the property of another person.

(5) “Jointly held property” means property held in the name of two or more persons under an arrangement in which all holders have concurrent interests and under which the last surviving holder is entitled to the whole of the property.

(6) “Person” means an individual; corporation; business trust; estate; trust; partnership; limited liability company; association; joint venture; government; governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality; public corporation; or any other legal or commercial entity.

(8) “Trust” means:

15-11-1203. Scope. This part 12 applies to disclaimers of any interest in or power over property, whenever created.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 860, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1204. Part supplemented by other law. (1) Unless displaced by a provision of this part 12, the principles of law and equity supplement this part 12.

(2) This part 12 does not limit any right of a person to waive, release, disclaim, or renounce an interest in or power over property under a law other than this part 12.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 860, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1205. Power to disclaim - general requirements - when irrevocable. (1) A person may disclaim, in whole or in part, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment. A person may disclaim the interest or power even if its creator imposed a spendthrift provision or similar restriction on transfer or a restriction or limitation on the right to disclaim.

(2) Except to the extent a fiduciary’s right to disclaim is expressly restricted or limited by another statute of this state or by the instrument creating the fiduciary relationship, a fiduciary may disclaim, in whole or in part, any interest in or power over property, including a power of appointment, whether acting in a personal or representative capacity. A fiduciary may disclaim the interest or power even if its creator imposed a spendthrift provision or similar restriction on transfer or a restriction or limitation on the right to disclaim, or if an instrument other than the instrument that created the fiduciary relationship imposed a restriction or limitation on the right to disclaim.

(3) To be effective, a disclaimer shall be in writing or other record, declare the disclaimer, describe the interest or power disclaimed, be signed by the person making the disclaimer, and be delivered or filed, and, with regard to an interest in real property, be recorded in the manner provided for in section 15-11-1212. In this subsection (3), “record” means information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

(4) A partial disclaimer may be expressed as a fraction, percentage, monetary amount, term of years, limitation of a power, or any other interest or estate in the property.

(5) A disclaimer becomes irrevocable when it is delivered or filed and, with regard to an interest in real property, recorded pursuant to section 15-11-1212, or when it becomes effective as provided for in sections 15-11-1206 through 15-11-1211, whichever occurs later.

(6) A disclaimer made pursuant to this part 12 is not a transfer, assignment, or release.

(7) No person obligated to distribute an interest disclaimed under this part 12 shall be liable to any person for distributing the interest as if the interest were not disclaimed unless the person obligated to distribute the interest receives a copy of the disclaimer prior to distributing the interest.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 860, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1206. Disclaimer of interest in property. (1) As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) “Future interest” means an interest that takes effect in possession or enjoyment, if at all, later than the time of its creation.

(b) “Method of representation” includes any method of division described in section 15-11-709.

(c) “Time of distribution” means the time when a disclaimed interest would have taken effect in possession or enjoyment.

(2) Except for a disclaimer governed by section 15-11-1207 or 15-11-1208, the following rules apply to a disclaimer of an interest in property:

(a) The disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable, or, if the interest arose under the law of intestate succession, as of the time of the intestate’s death.

(b) The disclaimed interest passes according to any provision in the instrument creating the interest, providing for the disposition of the interest, should it be disclaimed, or of disclaimed interests in general.

(c) If the instrument does not contain a provision described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (2), the following rules apply:

(I) If the disclaimant is not an individual, the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant had ceased to exist immediately before the time of distribution.

(II) If the disclaimant is an individual, except as otherwise provided for in subparagraphs (III) and (IV) of this paragraph (c), the disclaimed interest passes as if the disclaimant had died immediately before the time of distribution.

(III) If, by law or under the instrument, the descendants of the disclaimant would share in the disclaimed interest by any method of representation had the disclaimant died immediately before the time of distribution, the disclaimed interest passes only to the descendants of the disclaimant who survive the time of distribution.

(IV) (A) If the disclaimed interest would pass as part of the disclaimant’s estate had the disclaimant died immediately before the time of distribution, the disclaimed interest instead passes as if by representation to the descendants of the disclaimant who are living at the time of distribution.

(B) If the disclaimed interest would pass as part of the disclaimant’s estate had the disclaimant died immediately before the time of distribution and no descendant of the disclaimant survives the time of distribution, the disclaimed interest passes to those persons, including the state to which such interest would escheat, but excluding the disclaimant, and in such shares as such persons would succeed to the transferor’s intestate estate under the applicable law had the transferor died at the time of distribution. However, for purposes of this sub-subparagraph (B), if the transferor’s surviving spouse is living but remarried at the time of distribution, the transferor is deemed to have died unmarried at the time of distribution.

(C) As used in sub-subparagraph (B) of this subparagraph (IV), “applicable law” refers to the intestate succession law of the transferor’s domicile with respect to a disclaimer of an interest in personal property and refers to the intestate succession law of this state with respect to a disclaimed interest that is real property located in this state.

(D) In addition to other applications of this sub-subparagraph (D) that are apparent, the general assembly declares its intent to have the rules of this sub-subparagraph (D) apply with respect to present interests in real property and personal property that are transferred outright or in trust to an individual by a transferor during the lifetime of the transferor where the interest disclaimed would, if not disclaimed, have vested in the individual to whom the property is transferred and would be part of that individual’s estate if he or she had died immediately after the transfer. Accordingly, this sub-subparagraph (D) shall be so construed to determine the disposition of the present interest. For purposes of the application of the rules to such present interests, the reference to “immediately before the time of distribution" in sub-subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this subparagraph (IV) shall instead be considered as references to "immediately after the time of distribution".

(E) In sub-subparagraph (D) of this subparagraph (IV), "present interest" means an interest that takes effect in possession or enjoyment, if at all, at the time of its creation.

(d) Upon the disclaimer of a preceding interest, a future interest held by a person other than the disclaimant takes effect as if the disclaimant had died or ceased to exist immediately before the time of distribution, but a future interest held by the disclaimant is not accelerated in possession or enjoyment.

15-11-1207. Disclaimer of rights of survivorship in jointly held property.

(1) Upon the death of a holder of jointly held property, a surviving holder may disclaim, in whole or in part, the incremental portion of the jointly held property devolving to the surviving holder by right of survivorship.

(2) A disclaimer pursuant to subsection (1) of this section takes effect as of the death of the holder of jointly held property to whose death the disclaimer relates.

(3) In the event of a disclaimer pursuant to subsection (1) of this section with only one holder surviving the death of the holder to whose death the disclaimer relates, the incremental portion disclaimed shall, as a consequence of the disclaimer, pass as part of the estate of the deceased holder.

(4) In the event of a disclaimer pursuant to subsection (1) of this section with two or more of the holders surviving the death of the holder to whose death the disclaimer relates:

(a) The disclaimer does not sever the joint tenancy with respect to the jointly held property as among the surviving holders;

(b) The incremental portion disclaimed shall, as a consequence of a disclaimer, devolve to the surviving holders in proportion to their respective interests in the jointly held property excluding the disclaimant and any other surviving holder who disclaims to the extent of his or her disclaimer of the incremental portion;

(c) An incremental portion devolving to a surviving holder, as a consequence of one or more disclaimers, may be disclaimed by the surviving holder;

(d) To the extent that all of the surviving holders disclaim an incremental portion devolving to them, the portion shall instead pass as part of the estate of the deceased holder; and

(e) The proportion of each of the surviving holders with respect to the jointly held property shall be adjusted to take into account the devolution of the incremental portion to the extent that the portion is disclaimed.

15-11-1209. Disclaimer of power of appointment or other power not held in fiduciary capacity. (1) If a holder disclaims a power of appointment or other power not held in a fiduciary capacity, the disclaimer applies only to that holder, and the following rules apply:

(a) If the holder has not exercised the power, the disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable;

(b) If the holder has exercised the power and the disclaimer is of a power other than a presently exercisable general power of appointment, the disclaimer takes effect immediately after the last exercise of the power; and

(c) The instrument creating the power is construed as if the power expired when the disclaimer became effective.

15-11-1210. Disclaimer by appointee, object, or taker in default of exercise of power of appointment. (1) A disclaimer of an interest in property by an appointee of a power of appointment takes effect as of the time the instrument by which the holder exercises the power becomes irrevocable.

(2) A disclaimer of an interest in property by an object or taker in default of an exercise of a power of appointment takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 864, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1211. Disclaimer of power held in fiduciary capacity. (1) If a fiduciary disclaims a power held in a fiduciary capacity that has not been exercised, the disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the power becomes irrevocable.

(2) If a fiduciary disclaims a power held in a fiduciary capacity that has been exercised, the disclaimer takes effect immediately after the last exercise of the power.

(3) A disclaimer pursuant to this section is effective as to another fiduciary if the disclaimer so provides and the fiduciary disclaiming has the authority to bind the estate, trust, or other person for whom the fiduciary is acting.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 864, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1212. Delivery or filing. (1) As used in this section, “beneficiary designation” means an instrument, other than an instrument creating a trust, naming the beneficiary of:

- (a) An annuity or insurance policy;
- (b) An account with a designation for payment on death;
- (c) A security registered in beneficiary form;
- (d) A pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or other employment-related benefit plan; or
- (e) Any other nonprobate transfer at death.

(2) Subject to subsections (3) to (15) of this section, delivery of a disclaimer may be effected by personal delivery, first class mail, or any other method likely to result in its receipt.

(3) In the case of an interest created under the law of intestate succession or an interest created by will, other than an interest in a testamentary trust:

(a) A disclaimer shall be delivered to the personal representative of the decedent’s estate; or

(b) If no personal representative is then serving, a disclaimer shall be filed with a court having jurisdiction to appoint a personal representative.

(4) In the case of an interest in a testamentary trust:

(a) A disclaimer shall be delivered to the trustee then serving or, if no trustee is then serving, to the personal representative of the decedent’s estate; or

(b) If no personal representative is then serving, the disclaimer shall be filed with a court having jurisdiction to enforce the trust.

(5) In the case of an interest in an inter vivos trust:

(a) A disclaimer shall be delivered to the trustee then serving;

(b) If no trustee is then serving, the disclaimer shall be filed with a court having jurisdiction to enforce the trust; or

(c) If the disclaimer is made before the time the instrument creating the trust becomes irrevocable, it shall be delivered to the settlor of a revocable trust or the transferor of the interest.

(6) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation made before the time the designation becomes irrevocable, a disclaimer shall be delivered to the person making the beneficiary designation.

(7) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation made after the time the designation becomes irrevocable, a disclaimer shall be delivered to the person obligated to distribute the interest.

(8) In the case of a disclaimer by a surviving holder of jointly held property, the disclaimer shall be delivered to the person to whom the disclaimed interest passes.

(9) In the case of a disclaimer by an object or taker in default of exercise of a power of appointment at any time after the power was created:

(a) The disclaimer shall be delivered to the holder of the power or to the fiduciary acting under the instrument that created the power; or

(b) If no fiduciary is then serving, the disclaimer shall be filed with a court having authority to appoint a fiduciary.

(10) In the case of a disclaimer by an appointee of a nonfiduciary power of appointment:

(a) The disclaimer shall be delivered to the holder, the personal representative of the holder's estate, or to the fiduciary under the instrument that created the power; or

(b) If no fiduciary is then serving, the disclaimer shall be filed with a court having authority to appoint a fiduciary.

(11) In the case of a disclaimer by a fiduciary of a power over a trust or estate, the disclaimer shall be delivered as provided for in subsection (3), (4), or (5) of this section, as if the power disclaimed were an interest in property.

(12) In the case of a disclaimer of a power by an agent, the disclaimer shall be delivered to the principal or the principal's agent, guardian, or conservator.

(13) In the case of a disclaimer of a power not held in a fiduciary capacity, the disclaimer shall be delivered to the fiduciary under the instrument that created the power, or to the person obligated to distribute the property.

(14) Except as provided for in subsections (3) to (8) of this section, in the case of an interest the disposition of which is determined pursuant to section 15-11-1206 (2) (c) (IV), the disclaimer shall be delivered or filed as follows:

(a) Delivered to the transferor of the interest if the transferor is then living;

(b) Delivered to the personal representative of the estate of the transferor, if the transferor is not then living; or

(c) Filed with a court having jurisdiction to appoint a personal representative for the estate of the transferor, if the transferor is not then living and a personal representative of the estate of the transferor is not then serving.

(15) In the case of a disclaimer of an interest in real property in which the disclaimant has a recorded interest, a copy of the disclaimer shall be recorded in the office of the clerk and recorder of the county in which the interest disclaimed is located. For purposes of this subsection (15) and section 15-11-1215, "recorded interest" means an interest in real property that has been recorded in the office of the county clerk and recorder of the county in which the real property is located.

15-11-1213. When disclaimer barred or limited. (1) A disclaimer is barred by a written waiver of the right to disclaim.

(2) A disclaimer of an interest in property is barred if any of the following events occur before the disclaimer becomes effective:

(a) The disclaimant accepts the interest sought to be disclaimed;

(b) The disclaimant voluntarily assigns, conveys, encumbers, pledges, or transfers the interest sought to be disclaimed or contracts to do so; or

(c) A judicial sale of the interest sought to be disclaimed occurs.

(3) A disclaimer, in whole or in part, of the future exercise of a power held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by its previous exercise.

(4) A disclaimer, in whole or in part, of the future exercise of a power not held in a fiduciary capacity is not barred by its previous exercise unless the power is exercisable in favor of the disclaimant.

(5) A disclaimer is barred or limited if so provided by law other than this part 12.

(6) A disclaimer of a power over property that is barred by this section is ineffective. A disclaimer of an interest in property that is barred by this section takes effect as a transfer of the interest disclaimed to the persons who would have taken the interest under this part 12 had the disclaimer not been barred.

(7) Notwithstanding any other provision in this part 12, this part 12 shall not modify the construction of law or application of law with respect to:

(a) A disqualification of medical assistance benefits under title 25.5, C.R.S., to a disclaimant who is or was an applicant for or recipient of such benefits; or

(b) A recovery from the estate of a deceased recipient of such medical assistance benefits.

15-11-1214. Tax-qualified disclaimer. Notwithstanding any other provision of this part 12, if, as a result of a disclaimer or transfer, the disclaimed or transferred interest is treated pursuant to the provisions of title 26 of the United States internal revenue code, as now or hereafter amended, or any successor statute thereto, and the regulations promulgated thereunder, as never having been transferred to the disclaimant, then the disclaimer or transfer is effective as a disclaimer pursuant to this part 12.

15-11-1215. Filing or registering of disclaimer. If an instrument transferring an interest in or power over property subject to a disclaimer is required or permitted by law to be filed or registered, the disclaimer may be filed or registered. Failure to file or register the disclaimer does not affect its validity as between the disclaimant and persons to whom the property interest or power passes by reason of the disclaimer, provided, however, that a disclaimer of an interest in real property in which the disclaimant has a recorded interest is not effective and therefore is not valid as between any persons until a copy of the disclaimer is recorded in section 15-11-1212 (14).

15-11-1216. Application to existing relationships. Except as otherwise provided for in section 15-11-1213, an interest in or power over property existing on August 10, 2011, for which the time for delivering or filing a disclaimer under law superseded by this part 12 has not expired may be disclaimed after August 10, 2011.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 868, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1217. Uniformity of application and construction. In applying and construing this part 12, consideration shall be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among the states that enact it.

Source: L. 2011: Entire part added, (SB 11-166), ch. 203, p. 868, § 1, effective August 10.

15-11-1218. Severability. If any provision of this part 12 or its application to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the invalidity shall not affect any other provision or application of this part 12 that can be given effect without the invalid provision or application.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

15-12-101. Devolution of estate at death; restrictions. The power of a person to leave property by will and the rights of creditors, devisees, and heirs to his property are subject to the restrictions and limitations contained in this code to facilitate the prompt settlement of estates. Upon the death of a person, his real and personal property devolves to the persons to whom it is devised by his last will or to those indicated as substitutes for them in cases involving lapse, renunciation, or other circumstances affecting the devolution of the testate estate or, in the absence of testamentary disposition, to his heirs or to those indicated as substitutes for them in cases involving renunciation or other circumstances affecting devolution of intestate estates, subject to exempt property and family allowances, rights of creditors, elective share of the surviving spouse, and administration.

Cross references: For intestate succession, see article 11 of this title; for the elective share of a surviving spouse, see § 15-11-201; for exempt property allowance and family allowance, see §§ 15-11-403 and 15-11-404, respectively; for lapse of a devise, see § 15-11-511 (3); for renunciation of succession, see the “Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act”, part 12 of article 11 of this title; for rights of creditors, see part 8 of this article.

15-12-102. Necessity of order of probate for will. Except as provided in sections 15-12-901, 15-12-1201, 15-13-204, and 15-13-205 and in part 13 of this article, to be effective to prove the transfer of any property or to nominate an executor, a will must be declared to be valid by an order of informal probate by the registrar, or an adjudication of probate by the court.

15-12-103. Necessity of appointment for administration. Except as otherwise provided in article 13 of this title, to acquire the powers and undertake the duties and liabilities of a personal representative of a decedent, a person must be appointed by order of the court or registrar, qualify, and be issued letters. Administration of an estate is commenced by the issuance of letters.

15-12-104. Claims against decedent. No claim may be presented and no proceeding to enforce a claim against the estate of a decedent or his or her successors may be revived or commenced before the appointment of a personal representative, except as permitted by section 15-12-804. After the appointment and until distribution, all proceedings and actions to enforce a claim against the estate are governed by the procedure prescribed by this article. After distribution, a creditor whose claim has not been barred may recover from the distributees as provided in section 15-12-1004 or from a former personal representative individually liable as provided in section 15-12-1005. This section has no application to a proceeding by a secured creditor of the decedent to enforce his or her right to his or her security except as to any deficiency judgment that might be sought therein.

ANNOTATION

Applied in Price v. Sommermeyer, 195 Colo. 285, 577 P.2d 752 (1978).

15-12-105. Proceedings affecting devolution and administration - jurisdiction of subject matter. Persons interested in decedents' estates may apply to the registrar for determination in the informal proceedings provided in this article and may petition the court for orders in formal proceedings within the court's jurisdiction. The court has jurisdiction as provided in section 15-10-302.

15-12-106. Proceedings within the exclusive jurisdiction of court - service - jurisdiction over persons. In proceedings where notice is required by this code or by rule, interested persons may be bound by the orders of the court in respect to property in or subject to the laws of this state by notice in conformity with section 15-10-401. An order is binding as to all who are given notice of the proceeding though less than all interested persons are notified.

15-12-107. Scope of proceedings - proceedings independent - exception. (1) Unless supervised administration as described in part 5 of this article is involved:

(a) Each proceeding before the court or registrar is independent of any other proceeding involving the same estate;

(b) Petitions for formal orders of the court may combine various requests for relief in a single proceeding if the orders sought may be finally granted without delay. Except as required for proceedings which are particularly described by other sections of this article, no petition is defective because it fails to embrace all matters which might then be the subject of a final order;

(c) Proceedings for probate of wills or adjudications of no will may be combined with proceedings for appointment of personal representatives; and

(d) A proceeding for appointment of a personal representative is concluded by an order making or declining the appointment.

ANNOTATION

This section, along with the definition of “proceeding” in § 15-10-201, instructs that unsupervised administration of an estate may involve multiple proceedings, that a petition initiates an independent proceeding and defines its scope, and that a single proceeding may dispose of multiple claims. Scott v. Scott, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

The initial petition outlines a set of claims and begins a proceeding. Subsequent pleadings that relate to that set of claims are part of the same proceeding. Scott v. Scott, 136 P.3d 892 (Colo. 2006).

Section inapplicable to informal proceeding regarding a claim for services against the estate, as section specifically relates to petitions for formal orders of the court. In re Estate of Bell, 4 P.3d 504 (Colo. App. 2000).

Res judicata does not apply to bar challenge to the validity of a will when former informal dispute was over distribution of the estate and not a claim against the estate. Res judicata only operates as a bar to a second action on a claim that was litigated in a prior proceeding when there is a final judgment and identity of subject matter, claims for relief, and parties to the action. In re Estate of Bell, 4 P.3d 504 (Colo. App. 2000).

15-12-108. Probate, testacy, and appointment proceedings - ultimate time limit.

(1) No informal probate or appointment proceeding or formal testacy or appointment proceeding, other than a proceeding to probate a will previously probated at the testator's domicile and appointment proceedings relating to an estate in which there has been a prior appointment, may be commenced more than three years after the decedent's death, except:

(a) If a previous proceeding was dismissed because of doubt about the fact of the decedent's death, appropriate probate, appointment, or testacy proceedings may be maintained at any time thereafter upon a finding that the decedent's death occurred prior to the initiation of the previous proceeding and the applicant or petitioner has not delayed unduly in initiating the subsequent proceedings;

(b) Appropriate probate, appointment, or testacy proceedings may be maintained in relation to the estate of an absent, disappeared, or missing person for whose estate a conservator has been appointed, at any time within three years after the conservator becomes able to establish the death of the protected person; and

(c) A proceeding to contest an informally probated will and to secure appointment of the person with legal priority for appointment in the event the contest is successful may be commenced within the later of twelve months from the informal probate or three years from the decedent's death.

- (2) These limitations do not apply to:
- (a) Proceedings to construe probated wills; or
  - (b) Proceedings to determine heirs of an intestate and related appointment proceedings;
- or
- (c) Appointment proceedings and testacy proceedings if no previous testacy proceedings or proceedings determining heirship relating to the decedent's estate have been concluded in this state.
- (3) In cases under subsection (1) of this section, the date on which a testacy or appointment proceeding is properly commenced shall be deemed to be the date of the decedent's death for purpose of other limitation provisions of this code which relate to the date of death.

15-12-109. Statutes of limitations on decedent's cause of action. No statute of limitations running on a cause of action belonging to a decedent which had not been barred as of the date of his death shall apply to bar a cause of action surviving the decedent's death sooner than one year after death. A cause of action which, but for this section, would have been barred less than one year after death is barred after one year unless tolled.

VENUE FOR PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION; PRIORITY TO ADMINISTER; DEMAND FOR NOTICE

15-12-201. Venue for first and subsequent estate proceedings - location of property. (1) Venue for the first informal or formal testacy or appointment proceedings after a decedent's death is:

- (a) In the county where the decedent had his domicile or his residence at the time of his death; or
- (b) If the decedent was not domiciled in nor a resident of this state, in any county where property of the decedent was located at the time of his death.

(2) Venue for all subsequent proceedings within the exclusive jurisdiction of the court is in the place where the initial proceeding occurred, unless the initial proceeding has been transferred as provided in section 15-10-303 or subsection (3) of this section.

(3) If the first proceeding was informal, on application of an interested person and after notice to the proponent in the first proceeding, the court, upon finding that venue is elsewhere, may transfer the proceeding and the file to the other court.

(4) For the purpose of aiding determinations concerning location of assets which may be relevant in cases involving nondomiciliaries, a debt, other than one evidenced by investment or commercial paper or other instrument in favor of a nondomiciliary, is located where the debtor resides or, if the debtor is a person other than an individual, at the place where it has its principal office. Commercial paper, investment paper, and other instruments are located where the instrument is. An interest in property held in trust is located where the trustee may be sued.

A will should be first admitted to probate in the jurisdiction of the testator's last domicile; but in admitting a will to probate the court must be presumed prima facie to base its adjudication respecting the last domicile upon sufficient evidence, and under such circumstances, the probate and record thereof can only be questioned by some appellate or direct proceeding. Corrigan v. Jones, 14 Colo. 311, 23 P. 913 (1890); Estate of Vilm v. Vilm, 134 Colo. 43, 299 P.2d 513 (1956).

Although provision of section is mandatory it may be waived. The provisions of this section, that administration of the estate of every decedent shall be had in the district court of his last known residence, is mandatory; but it may nevertheless be waived. Miller v. Weston, 25 Colo. App. 231, 138 P. 424 (1914).

A district court sitting in probate has exclusive jurisdiction to hear all claims presented, and a claimant has no option to file suit in another court after the issuance of letters, hence a district court is without jurisdiction of an action against the executor of deceased's estate in an action for wrongful death, for which a claim had been filed in the estate. Miller v. Weston, 25 Colo. App. 231, 138 P. 424 (1914); Koon v. Barmettler, 134 Colo. 221, 301 P.2d 713 (1956); Weller v. Bank of Vernal, 137 Colo. 32, 321 P.2d 216 (1958); Meyers v. Williams, 137 Colo. 325, 324 P.2d 788 (1958).

Where jurisdiction depends upon a question of fact, it must be taken advantage of in apt time and in the right manner. Miller v. Weston, 67 Colo. 534, 189 P. 610 (1920).

If a case is pending at the time of the death of a decedent, then the jurisdiction lies in that court having acquired jurisdiction during the lifetime, and the filing of the claims in the probate court is only for the purpose of showing assets, in other words, complying with that portion of the statute concerning the unliquidated or unmatured claims. Film Enters., Inc. v. Wolfberg, 137 Colo. 84, 321 P.2d 218 (1958).

Administrator subject to direction of court. The administrator of the estate of a deceased person is a creature of the court, wholly subject to its directions in estate matters, and the court retains jurisdiction until the estate is finally closed and the administrator discharged. People v. Cartwright, 99 Colo. 437, 63 P.2d 454 (1936).

Situs courts have usually applied their own local law to determine the validity of a will insofar as it affects interests in local land even though the testator died domiciled in another state. Wimbush v. Wimbush, 41 Colo. App. 289, 587 P.2d 796 (1978).

15-12-202. Reserved.

15-12-203. Priority among persons seeking appointment as personal representative. (1) Whether the proceedings are formal or informal, persons who are not disqualified have priority for appointment in the following order:

(a) The person with priority as determined by a probated will including a person nominated by a power conferred in a will;

(b) The surviving spouse of the decedent who is a devisee of the decedent;

(b.5) A person given priority to be a personal representative in a designated beneficiary agreement made pursuant to article 22 of this title;

(c) Other devisees of the decedent;

(d) The surviving spouse of the decedent;

(e) Other heirs of the decedent;

(f) Forty-five days after the death of the decedent, any creditor.

(2) An objection to an appointment can be made only in formal proceedings. In case of objection the priorities stated in subsection (1) of this section apply, except that:

(a) If the estate appears to be more than adequate to meet exemptions and costs of administration but inadequate to discharge anticipated unsecured claims, the court, on petition of creditors, may appoint any qualified person;

(b) In case of objection to appointment of a person, other than one whose priority is determined by will, by an heir or devisee appearing to have a substantial interest in the estate, the court may appoint a person who is acceptable to heirs and devisees whose interests in the estate appear to be worth in total more than half of the probable distributable value or, in default of this accord, any suitable person.

(3) A person entitled to letters under paragraphs (b) to (e) of subsection (1) of this section and a person between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one who would be entitled to letters but for his age may nominate a qualified person to act as personal representative. Any person eighteen years of age or older may renounce his right to nominate or to an appointment by appropriate writing filed with the court. When two or more persons share a priority, those of them who do not renounce must concur in nominating another to act for them or in applying for appointment.

(4) Conservators of the estates of protected persons or, if there is no conservator, any guardian except a guardian ad litem of a minor or incapacitated person may exercise the same right to nominate, to object to another's appointment, or to participate in determining the preference of a majority in interest of the heirs and devisees that the protected person or ward would have if qualified for appointment.

(5) Appointment of a person with priority, a person who is nominated pursuant to subsection (3) of this section, or a person whose entitlement to appointment results from renunciation by another person with priority may be made in an informal proceeding. Before formal appointment of one without priority, the court must determine that those having priority, although given notice of the proceedings, have failed to request appointment or to nominate another for appointment and that administration is necessary.

(6) No person is qualified to serve as a personal representative who is:

(a) Under the age of twenty-one;

(b) A person whom the court finds unsuitable in formal proceedings.

(7) A personal representative appointed by a court of the decedent's domicile has priority over all other persons except where the decedent's will nominates different persons to be personal representative in this state and in the state of domicile. The domiciliary personal representative may nominate another, who shall have the same priority as the domiciliary personal representative.

(8) This section governs priority for appointment of a successor personal representative but does not apply to the selection of a special administrator.

(9) If there be more than one fiduciary of an estate, and one of such fiduciaries shall die, resign, or be removed, the court may in its discretion appoint a successor fiduciary to act in place and instead of the former fiduciary, together with the remaining fiduciary or fiduciaries, or the court may permit the remaining fiduciary or fiduciaries to serve without any new or additional fiduciary; except that, if there be a will providing for the fiduciaries, the provisions of the will shall control when applicable.

Editor's note: (1) Section 25 of chapter 374, Session Laws of Colorado 2010, provides that the act amending subsection (1)(b.5):

(a) Applies to governing instruments executed by decedents who die on or after July 1, 2010; and any proceeding in court then pending or thereafter commenced regardless of the time of death of the decedent except to the extent that, in the opinion of the court, the former statute should be made applicable in a particular case in the interest of justice or because of infeasibility of application of a provision of the act; and

(b) Does not apply to an action performed before July 1, 2010, in any proceeding; an accrued right; a right that is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period of time that has commenced to run by the provisions of any statute before July 1, 2010; or a provision of a governing instrument that was executed before July 1, 2010, and includes a clear indication of a contrary intent.

COMMENT

The priorities applicable to informal proceedings are applicable to formal proceedings. However, if the proceedings are formal, a person with a substantial interest may object to the selection of one having priority other than because of will provisions. The provision for majority approval which is triggered by such a protest can be handled in a formal proceeding since all interested persons will be before the Court, and a judge capable of handling discretionary matters, will be involved.

In considering this section as it relates to a devise to a trustee for various beneficiaries, it is to be noted that "interested persons" is defined by 1-201(20) to include fiduciaries. Also, 1-403(2) and 3-912 show a purpose to make trustees serve as representatives of all beneficiaries. The provision in (d) is consistent.

If a state's statutes recognize a public administrator or public trustee as the appropriate agency to seek administration of estates in which the state may have an interest, it would be appropriate to indicate in this section the circumstances under which such an officer may seek administration. If no officer is recognized locally, the state could claim as heir by virtue of 2-105.

Subsection (g) was inserted in connection with the decision to abandon the effort to describe ancillary administration in Article IV. Other provisions in Article III which are relevant to administration of assets in a state or other than that of the decedent's domicile are 1-301 (territorial effect), 3-201 (venue), 3-308 (informal appointment for non-resident decedent delayed 30 days), 3-309 (no informal appointment here if a representative has been appointed at domicile), 3-815 (duty of personal representative where administration is in more than one state) and 4-201 to 4-205 (local recognition of foreign personal representatives).

The meaning of "spouse" is determined by Section 2-802.

No power of nomination for the appointment of administrators is conferred upon creditors of an estate by this section, and they have nothing to relinquish so far as such appointments are concerned. In re Webb's Estate, 90 Colo. 470, 10 P.2d 947 (1932).

The granting of letters of administration is a judicial act of the judge. He may judicially determine whether he has jurisdiction over the matters before him, must determine the approximate value of the estate, determine the person to be appointed administrator, fix and approve the bond required, and administer the oath. These acts require judicial discretion. Jackson v. Bates, 133 Colo. 248, 293 P.2d 962 (1956).

15-12-204. Demand for notice of order or filing concerning decedent's estate. Any person desiring notice of any order or filing pertaining to a decedent's estate in which he has a financial or property interest may file a demand for notice with the court at any time after the death of the decedent stating the name of the decedent, the nature of his interest in the estate, and the demandant's address or that of his attorney. The clerk shall mail a copy of the demand to the personal representative if one has been appointed. After filing of a demand, no order or filing to which the demand relates shall be made or accepted without notice as prescribed in section 15-10-401 to the demandant or his attorney. The validity of an order which is issued or filing which is accepted without compliance with this requirement shall not be affected by the error, but the petitioner receiving the order or the person making the filing may be liable for any damage caused by the absence of notice. The requirement of notice arising from a demand under this provision may be waived in writing by the demandant and shall cease upon the termination of his interest in the estate.

15-12-302. Informal probate - duty of registrar - effect of informal probate. Upon receipt of an application requesting informal probate of a will, the registrar, upon making the findings required by section 15-12-303, shall issue a written statement of informal probate. Informal probate is conclusive as to all persons until superseded by an order in a formal testacy proceeding. No defect in the application or procedure relating thereto which leads to informal probate of a will renders the probate void.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "A Potpourri of Probate Practice Aids", see 11 Colo. Law. 1850 (1982).

15-12-303. Informal probate - proof and findings required. (1) In an informal proceeding for original probate of a will, the registrar shall determine that:

- (a) The application is complete;
- (b) The applicant has made oath or affirmation that the statements contained in the application are true to the best of his knowledge and belief;
- (c) The applicant appears from the application to be an interested person as defined in section 15-10-201 (27);
- (d) On the basis of the statements in the application, venue is proper;
- (e) An original, duly executed, and apparently unrevoked will is in the registrar's possession;
- (f) Any notice required by section 15-12-204 has been given and that the application is not within section 15-12-304;
- (g) It appears from the application that the time limit for original probate has not expired; and
- (h) One hundred twenty hours have elapsed since decedent's death.

(2) The application shall be denied if it indicates that a personal representative has been appointed in another county of this state or, except as provided in subsection (4) of this section, if it appears that this or another will of the decedent has been the subject of a previous probate order.

(3) A will which appears to have the required signatures and which contains an attestation clause showing that requirements of execution under section 15-11-502, 15-11-503, or 15-11-506 have been met shall be probated without further proof. In other cases, the registrar may assume execution if the will appears to have been properly executed, or he may accept a sworn statement or affidavit of any person having knowledge of the circumstances of execution, whether or not the person was a witness to the will.

(4) Informal probate of a will which has been previously probated elsewhere may be granted at any time upon written application by any interested person, together with deposit of an authenticated copy of the will and of the statement probating it from the office or court where it was first probated.

(5) A will from a place which does not provide for probate of a will after death and which is not eligible for probate under subsection (1) of this section may be probated in this state upon receipt by the registrar of a duly authenticated copy of the will and a duly authenticated certificate of its legal custodian that the copy filed is a true copy and that the will has become operative under the law of the other place.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "A Potpourri of Probate Practice Aids", see 11 Colo. Law. 1850 (1982).

Practice and procedure under this section. It will be observed that the court is not required in express terms to hear the testimony of any witnesses except those who attested the will. No provision is made for a contest. Upon the hearing of "such proof", that is the testimony of the attesting witnesses that the will was properly signed and attested, and that they believe the testator was of sound mind and memory at the time it was signed and acknowledged, the court is compelled to admit the will to probate and record, provided that no proof of fraud, compulsion, or improper conduct be exhibited, which in the opinion of the court shall be deemed sufficient to invalidate or destroy it. It is true that the proviso in this section contains an implied permission, presumably to interested parties, to offer testimony tending to invalidate the will on account of fraud, compulsion, or other improper conduct, and there is of course implied authority to receive it, but no practice or procedure is specified, and no provision made for a hearing or trial in which the persons offering such evidence shall have a standing as parties. It will be seen too, that no authority is given for the exhibition or reception of any proof impeaching the validity of the will for want of testamentary capacity by the testator. In either case, a would-be contestant therefore, although present in obedience to the citation of the court, would have no standing in the court as a party to a suit, with the rights and privileges thereto attaching, if it be held that the practice and procedure in this respect are only such as are in terms permitted or directed by the statute. The authority therefor is derived from the practice which prevailed before the enactment of the statute, so far as it has not been changed thereby nor become inconsistent therewith. The mode of procedure and practice on the hearing of probate wills is not expressly provided by statute. Clough v. Clough, 10 Colo. App. 433, 51 P. 513 (1897) (decided under repealed laws antecedent to CSA, C. 176, § 56).

15-12-304. Informal probate - unavailable in certain cases. Applications for informal probate which relate to one or more of a known series of testamentary instruments (other than a will and one or more codicils thereto), the latest of which does not expressly revoke the earlier, shall be declined.

15-12-305. Informal probate - registrar not satisfied. If the registrar is not satisfied that a will is entitled to be probated in informal proceedings because of failure to meet the requirements of sections 15-12-303 and 15-12-304 or any other reason, he may decline the application. A declination of informal probate is not an adjudication and does not preclude formal probate proceedings.

15-12-306. Informal probate - notice and information requirements. The moving party must give notice as described by section 15-10-401 of his application for informal probate to any person demanding it pursuant to section 15-12-204 and to any personal representative of the decedent whose appointment has not been terminated. If a personal representative has not been appointed, then not later than thirty days after a will has been informally probated the moving party shall give information of the probate to the persons and in the manner prescribed by section 15-12-705 and shall promptly file with the court a statement that such information has been given, to whom, and at what addresses, if mailed. No other notice of informal probate is required.

15-12-307. Informal appointment proceedings - delay in order - duty of registrar - effect of appointment. (1) Upon receipt of an application for informal appointment of a personal representative other than a special administrator as provided in section 15-12-614, the registrar, after making the findings required by section 15-12-308, shall appoint the applicant subject to qualification and acceptance; except that, if the decedent was a nonresident, the registrar shall delay the order of appointment until thirty days have elapsed since death unless the personal representative appointed at the decedent's domicile is the applicant, or unless the decedent's will directs that his estate be subject to the laws of this state.

(2) The status of personal representative and the powers and duties pertaining to the office are fully established by informal appointment. An appointment, and the office of personal representative created thereby, is subject to termination as provided in sections 15-12-608 to 15-12-612, but is not subject to retroactive vacation.

15-12-308. Informal appointment proceedings - proof and findings required.

(1) In informal appointment proceedings, the registrar must determine that:

- (a) The application for informal appointment of a personal representative is complete;
- (b) The applicant has made oath or affirmation that the statements contained in the application are true to the best of his knowledge and belief;
- (c) The applicant appears from the application to be an interested person as defined in section 15-10-201 (27);
- (d) On the basis of the statements in the application, venue is proper;
- (e) Any will to which the requested appointment relates has been formally or informally probated; but this requirement does not apply to the appointment of a special administrator;
- (f) Any notice required by section 15-12-204 has been given;
- (g) From the statements in the application, the person whose appointment is sought has priority entitling him to the appointment;
- (h) One hundred twenty hours have elapsed since the decedent's death.

(2) Unless section 15-12-612 controls, the application must be denied if it indicates that a personal representative who has not filed a written statement of resignation as provided in section 15-12-610 (3) has been appointed in this or another county of this state, that (unless the applicant is the domiciliary personal representative or his nominee) the decedent was not domiciled in this state and that a personal representative whose appointment has not been terminated has been appointed by a court in the state of domicile, or that other requirements of this section have not been met.
